Soil settlement

The area excavated for a home's foundation is typically larger than the foundation itself to allow construction activities.

Soil is used to backfill and level the landscaping. This soil may settle, especially after prolonged or heavy rainfall.

Inspect your home's perimeter routinely for signs of settling and fill these areas with dirt as needed to maintain drainage away from the home's foundation.

Faulty areas in the landscape can cause damage to surrounding properties by changing the direction of runoff. Runoff can damage landscaping and foundations.

House limits flow of legislation in first 60 days of session

AUSTIN-When Legislature convenes, one of the governor's duties, so says the Texas Constitution, is to recommend to lawmakers "such measures as he may deem expedient."

That means the all-important state budget and the governor's top issues - usually referred to as emergency issues - go to the front of the line.

Other bills can be acted upon quickly too, if a well-oiled procedure is followed: the House simply votes to suspend a constitutional rule that reserves the first 60 days of the legislative session for the passage of bills that top the governor's priority

However, as January drew to a close, the House departed from its normal behavior when a motion to suspend the rule, which required a supermajority (fourfifths) vote to pass, failed.

Thirty-four of the House's 150 members voted "no" despite cries that doing so would create a logjam of bills late in the session and likely prevent many local bills from ever making it out of

So, for the first time since the 1981 legislative session, House bills won't get past the committee level in the first 60 days of the session.

The vote not to suspend has been interpreted as retaliation against House Speaker Tom Craddick, who doled out committee assignments perceived as punitive by some members who supported Rep. Jim Pitts, R-Waxahachie, in his short-lived speaker candidacy.

Despite the vote, there is a movement among Craddick lieutenants and other House members to vote again on rule suspension.

Child safety program launched

John Walsh, host of the Fox television program "America's Most Wanted," joined Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst in a Capitol news conference to announce Dewhurst's "Texas First!" child safety initiative.

The initiative teams the state and private sector in helping kindergarten through second grade students learn how to be safe around strangers and to educate the children about the dangers of predators online, in schools and in neighborhoods.

The Safe Side Company, cofounded by Walsh, is donating more than 1,000 Stranger Safety Resource Kits to Texas school

Kits include lesson plans and activities for classroom use, and a media library that includes 25 copies of the "Stranger Safety" DVD for take-home use.

Texas is the first state to participate in the program, Dewhurst's office said.

Order issued for vaccination rules

Gov. Rick Perry on Feb. 2 issued an executive order directing the Health and Human Services Commission to adopt rules requiring girls age 11 and 12 to be vaccinated against the Human Papillomavirus (HPV) before they enter sixth grade.

The rules are to include an optout provision for parents who don't want their daughters to be vaccinated.

Perry wants the program to be up and running by September

Certain strains of HPV are known to cause cervical cancer.

TEA publishing expenditures Gov. Perry is now publishing his office's expenditures online and on Feb. 1 proposed requiring all state agencies to publish their expenditures online as part of his budget reform package.

The Texas Education Agency went ahead and published its check register online. It can be viewed at http://tea.state.tx.us by clicking on the "About TEA" button. The check register will be updated at least quarterly, the agency said.

State lottery may be up for sale Gov. Perry indicated he is thinking about selling the Texas Lottery to a private firm. Other states are contemplating doing the same in exchange for a chunk of the profits. Perry was to give more details in his Feb. 6 State of the State speech.

Game teaches children to be prepared in emergency

The National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) has launched a new Sparky the Fire Dog® game to help children learn about emergency preparedness. The game, "Look and Learn," is now available free online. It stresses the importance of being prepared for an emergency by teaching children about items that should be included in an emergency supplies kit.

Each year natural disasters disrupt the lives of hundreds of thousands of children and their families. NFPA developed Risk Watch®: Natural Disasters to help children and their families deal with disasters before, during and after the event. Sparky's new game is the latest addition to support this effort and is available by visiting NFPA's Risk Watch® Web site at http:// www.riskwatch. org and entering the "Kids Only" section of the

"Everyone runs the risk of experiencing a natural disaster and that includes children," said Amy LeBeau, NFPA's communications manager of public education. "Sparky's new game is a great way for parents and teachers to educate children about emergency preparedness with a fun interactive lesson."

Players of Sparky's "Look and Learn" visit six different fun and interactive scenes as they are tasked with assisting Sparky by locating hidden items to complete his emergency supplies kit. During their search for the hidden items, players travel through a Hideaway Island, Campground, Safari, Haunted House, Underwater Adventure and Prehistoric Park to locate things like flashlights, batteries, extra clothing, a whistle, canned food and other items that are often necessities in an emergency. After finding all of the emergency supplies in each section of the game, children will be able to download and print out an emergency supplies checklist that they can use to make their own emergency supplies kit.

Sparky's "Look and Learn" game provides a fun and safe learning experience for kids and there is no advertising on the kids section of the site. The game is most appropriate for children in kindergarten through second grade, but may be of interest to

Get the Details On "Trial" or "Special" Offers

After signing up for a "trial" or "special" offer, consumers often contact the Office of the Attorney General to complain about unauthorized withdrawals from their bank accounts. Shocked, they ask why their financial institutions allow debits without the account owner's express permission. More often than not, however, the consumer has agreed to the fund withdrawal under the terms of the offer.

Companies often use special or trial offers as a way to promote their products and services. Their mail, telephone, or e-mail offers often convince a consumer to agree to a small purchase. To make the purchase, the consumer is required to supply a bank account number. The seller uses the account information to perform what is called a demand draft on the account.

Demand drafts are legitimate forms of payment. They are processed like a check with just a name, account number and amount. Demand drafts do not require a signature. Many people payments.

When you are dealing with a reputable business or company that you trust, demand drafts are a time-saving and efficient method of payment. Problems arise, however, when consumers purchase more than they intended. Many consumers report that their small, "one-time" purchase resulted in monthly drafts to their accounts, sometimes for amounts significantly greater than the original or trial offer. Many trial offers will turn into a long-term contract unless the consumer cancels the contract within a certain period of time, usually within four to six weeks. In some cases, consumers report that it is difficult, if not impossible, to reach the seller to cancel the trial offer within the allotted time.

If you are considering a trial or special offer, proceed slowly if you are unfamiliar with the business or company. Do not provide financial information to

The seller such as mortgages or car sounds legitimate, seek independent information about the company on your own, and then contact the company yourself if you are still interested. You should be very suspicious of an offer that is only available if you take it on the spot.

Read the agreement carefully before you sign it. Be sure you are clear on how to cancel the purchase if you decide you do not like the product after trying it.

Anytime you authorize a draft on your bank account, make sure that you understand whether you are authorizing a one-time charge or a recurring charge. If you are authorizing a recurring charge, confirm the amount of future payments. Initial purchases may be for just a few dollars, but be sure you know the amount you will be charged after the "trial" or "special introductory price" has expired.

Remember that you are protected by the law. Federal law mandates that sellers must disclose conditions associated with their offers and obtain your

If your conversation is recorded, the seller must send you the date of the draft, the amount, the payer's name, the number of drafts, a telephone number where the company or business can be reached, and the date that you gave your oral authorization.

If a seller does not comply with these rules, ask for a refund. If you are refused a refund, contact your financial institution and advise them of the unauthorized draft. You may have to change your account

If you have a problem with a trial offer, try to resolve it with the seller first. If you are not satisfied with the response, contact your local better business bureau or file a complaint with the Office of the Attorney General.

Shaking and chills. Severe diabetes and heart disease. chest pain. Sweats. Labored breathing and quickened pulse. Those who've had pneumonia before know these and other painful symptoms firsthand.

Pneumonia is a lung inflammation caused by an infection with bacteria, viruses and other organisms. Combined with the flu, it is the seventh leading cause of U.S. deaths, reports the National Center for Health Statistics, with pneumonia consistently accounting for the overwhelming majority.

People especially at risk for pneumonia include the elderly. the very young and those with underlying health problems like

The community-acquired pneumonia in adults is most often caused by the bacteria Streptococcus pneumoniae. Pneumococcal pneumonia accounts for 20,000 U.S. deaths each year and is the leading cause of vaccine-preventable death, said Mary Chavez, Pharm.D., chair and professor of pharmacy practice with the Texas A&M Health Science Center Irma Lerma Rangel College of Pharmacy.

Pneumococcal pneumonia can occur anytime during the year, but two types of vaccines can reduce the risk by 60-70 percent. The vaccines are especially recommended for those 65 and older and those 2 or older with chronic illnesses, including pulmonary or cardiovascular disease; weakened immune system; cochlear implants; and metabolic disorders, cerebral spinal leaks, renal dysfunction and hemoglobinopathies like sickle-cell disease.

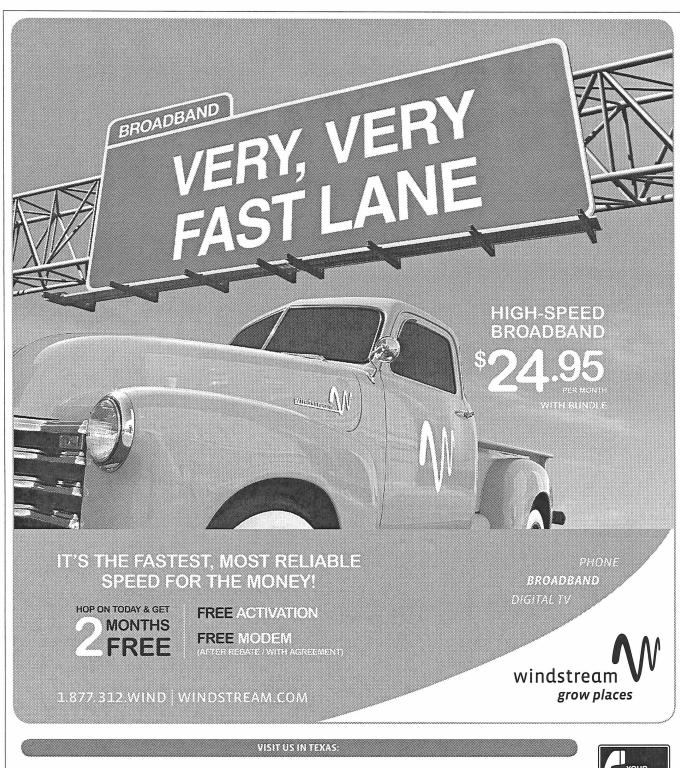

The pneumococcal conjugate vaccine is also routinely administered to infants at 2, 4 and 6 months, followed by a booster dose at 12-15 months, to prevent seven types of penicillin-resistant strains causing invasive pneumococcal disease. Initiated in 2000, this vaccination policy has made a substantial impact in reducing pneumococcal sepsis and meningitis in children and adults, said Manjusha Gaglani, M.B.B.S., associate professor of pediatrics at the HSC-College of Medicine and a physician at Scott & White Hospital in Temple.

"The vaccines are the best way to prevent the disease," Dr. Chavez said. "One study estimated that if all currently unvaccinated elderly people in the United States were vaccinated with the pneumococcal vaccine, 78,000 years in healthy life would be gained, and $194 million in health care would be saved."

Because pneumonia often occurs as a complication of influenza, people should get an annual flu vaccine, Dr. Gaglani said. This is especially true for those at high risk for influenzarelated complications (i.e., those who are elderly, diabetic, pregnant, chronic care facilities residents or have chronic medical conditions such as heart disease, lung disease and kidney failure).

"Children ranging in age from six months to 59 months should get the flu vaccine, as well as household contacts and caregivers of anyone under 59 months old or of anyone with a high-risk condition," Dr. Gaglani said. "This is because the flu is often associated with pneumonia or followed by bacterial pneumonia, including that caused by MRSA (methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus) for which we have no vaccine."

This Week's Devotional Message:

TRUE LOVE IS MUCH MORE THAN CARDS ON VALENTINE'S DAY

In just about a week from now There'll be a special day For which we all have made a vow To send what will portray How much we love someone we know, In words that will combine With lacy hearts and cupid's bow In red and white design.

But love extends beyond a card For someone else to read; It's meant to show our deep regard For helping those in need. Our Bible lessons underscore Their messages divine; That love is infinitely more Than just a Valentine.

Weather Whys

Cold snaps

Q: When did the worst period of cold weather occur in Texas? A: The record was more than 100 years ago, says Texas A&M University's John Nielsen-Gammon, who also serves as the state climatologist. "On Feb. 12, 1899 both Texas and Oklahoma had its coldest weather ever," he

"On that day, all of Oklahoma was below minus-10 degrees, while one-half of Texas was below zero. Galveston Bay had areas of ice in it. Most cold waves in Texas aren't that bad because the cold air tends to move east quickly, but on this particular day the air mass was so cold and large that there was little that Mother Nature could do to prevent it."

Q: What about other cold periods?

A: In Dec. of 1895, Amarillo had a cold spell in which the city spent 261 consecutive hours below freezing and in January of 1930, the temperature reached only 13 degrees in Galveston while farther north, Oklahoma set its all-time cold record of minus-27 degrees in the town of Watts. Nielsen-Gammon adds.

"In the more modern era, on Jan. 4, 1959 Spearman in north Texas had a high temperature of zero. On Jan. 9-12 of 1962, the temperature dropped to minus-14 degrees in the Panhandle and 10 degrees in the lower Rio Grande Valley, which saw 65 consecutive last days of January in 1951, Houston was below freezing for a record 132 consecutive hours."

Call 940-864-2686 to subscribe.

Derechos

O: I heard the weatherman mention a "derecho" the other day. What is it?

A: A derecho is a severe windstorm that usually forms along a cluster of thunderstorms, explains Brent McRoberts of Texas A&M University. "The word is derived from the Spanish word meaning direct or straight,' McRoberts says.

"Derechos are often formed with bow-shaped thunderstorms but they produce strong straightline winds up to 150 miles per hour. The storm system associated with derechos often moves quickly, often as high as 50 miles per hour and a few have been clocked at 70 miles per hour. They can also last a long time and move through several states. So a derecho can be a very powerful storm."

Q: Where do they occur?

A: They can occur anywhere, but are most often seen in the Midwest and the prairie states, and they can form either in the daytime or at night, McRoberts

"Winds of a derecho storm have been clocked at more than 110 miles per hour in Wisconsin and Michigan, and a derecho that occurred in Memphis in 2003 was also believed to be that strong and knocked out much of the city's power," he notes. "Derechos usually form in the summer months, so people who are hours below freezing. And in the outdoors are very much at risk, as are people in cars and in mobile homes. Also, there are numerous cases of people being killed or injured while in boats. A lake is certainly not a good place to be if a storm such as this occurs.'
