Food Booths, Children's Games, Auction To Highlight Saturday's Fun/Food Fest

Activities to interest all ages are being planned for this Saturday's Fun/Food Festival sponsored by the Lynn County Hospital Auxiliary, including food booths, children's games, door prizes and an auction offering various crafts or baked goods. The 11th annual event is being held this year in the International Harvester Building on Highway 380 East, toward Post on the outskirts of Tahoka.

The festival will be held from 4:00 to 9:00 p.m., and is the major fundraising project the auxiliary has each year to buy needed equipment for Lynn County Hospital. Those attending the festival are encouraged to bring their own lawn chairs; however, folding chairs will be available for those who cannot bring their own chairs.

Billy Miller will be the auctioneer at the festival, and Cal Huffaker and Clint Walker will share master of ceremony duties at the event. Entertainment will be provided on stage during the festival, including the vocal talents of the Sunshine Singers of the First Baptist Church and other groups. Area businesses and individuals have contributed door prizes which will be given away during the day. A 50-cent donation at the door entitles anyone to be eligible for a door prize.

One of the major items to be auctioned at this year's festival is a painting donated by Tahoka artist Diana Hawthorne, which depicts an actual ranch between Taos and Las Vegas, N.M. It is a large framed painting featuring a barn which has a ranch brand on the door, which she says is not familiar to her. "I was intrigued with the green carpet growth surrounding the barn on the valley floor," says Mrs. Hawthorne. "The composition was derived from several photographs that I took of the ranch when Marlin and I were traveling in the area."

She says she did not use any "brown" in the painting, although one would think a barn would be brown. She used a combination of yellow, purple and other colors instead, which she learned while studying under artist Dalhart Windberg.

"I have studied under several artists in the Lubbock area in years past, but most recently studied with Dalhart Windberg for two intense weeks in Gatlinburg, Tennessee. We painted out on location everyday, weather permitting, and it was an informative and humbling experience for me. Mr. Windberg would sit down at my easel several times through each day, and on one occasion he asked me how and why I was getting browns on my canvas, since that color had been eliminated from my palette," she explained. "He told me that trees are not brown, earth is not brown and yet every time he sat down at my canvas, he saw brown. I replied with respect and deep understanding, 'Oh, Mr. Windberg, you've never been to West Texas in the dead of winter, have you?'" He did however, show Mrs. Hawthorne how to paint without using the color brown.

She has entitled the painting "New Mexico Ranch" but does not know how long it took her to paint it. "Time does not exist when I'm painting - that's part of the pleasure of it," she says.

In addition to the painting, quilts and pottery and other arts and craft items will be auctioned to the highest bidder, as well as various baked goods. There will be an ice cream booth sponsored by Chamberettes and Phebe K. Warner Club, and a fish dinner sponsored by the Hospital Directors and friends, and the Tahoka Volunteer Firemen and friends. The 4-H Club will have a drink booth, and the Catholic organization will have a food booth.

For the children attending the festival with their parents, there will be children's games sponsored by Molly Helmlinger, Principal of Tahoka Elementary School, and the elementary staff. Tiffany Huffaker, a Tahoka High School senior, will have a face painting booth for children.

United Blood Services of Lubbock will be on hand to sponsor a blood drive during the day.

"We think we've got a good festival lined up this year," said Nadine Dunlap, member of the Hospital Auxiliary. "There's still time for individuals to contribute, either to the auction or for door prizes, by contacting me or any other Auxiliary member. We can pick it up, or you can bring it to us," she added.

Band Improves Contest Scores; Concert Set

The Tahoka High School Band competed in the University Interscholastic League Concert and Sightreading Contest in Sundown on Tuesday, April 16. The band received Division III (Good) ratings for their concert performance, and Division II (Excellent) ratings for their sightreading.

"The judges were very complimentary of our band," said director Stephen Morgan. "I am very proud of the band students and the progress that they made this year. All of the students worked hard and our band improved two division from our fall performances."

The Tahoka school bands will present their annual Spring Concert on Tuesday, May 7. The high school band will play their three contest selections plus popular music and a dramatic selection based on the legend of King George and the dragon. "It is a very unusual piece," said Morgan. "I've directed this piece before, and it always draws favorable comment from the audience."

Everyone is invited to the concert for an evening of enjoyable music.

ODHS Shop Burglarized, Pickup Crashes

The O'Donnell High School ag shop was burglarized last Thursday. Stolen were a stereo and two speakers, a Black and Decker router and a tool box. Total value of the missing items was listed at $185.

In Tahoka, city officers investigated a reported burglary of a residence at 2227 Lockwood. David Jolly reported $140 belonging to Lex Fraiser had been stolen from a bedroom, after entry was gained through an unlocked door Friday. Nothing else was reported missing.

An incident reported last week in which a storm door was broken by a newspaper was solved this week. Several juveniles were involved and restitution was made. The case was turned over to Lynn County Probation Officer Jeri Akard.

An O'Donnell teenager was treated for injuries after the 1988

Ford pickup he was driving overturned about 4:20 a.m. Sunday southwest of Tahoka. A DPS report said Jerry Louis Castro, 18, was treated at a Lamesa hospital the next day after the accident nine miles south of U.S. 380 on FM 3112. A passenger, Amelio Hernandez, was not injured, according to the report.

Audrey Medel Mindieta, 24, of Lubbock, was assessed a five-year prison term, probated, on a plea of guilty of charges of forgery and possession with intent to pass.

In jail during the week were three persons for driving while intoxicated, two for possession of drug paraphernalia, and one each on charges of DWI third offense judgment and sentence, no drivers license and failure to maintain financial responsibility.

Child Welfare Board Offers Love, Helping Hand To Abused Children

by JUANELL JONES

"Love one another." It is a directive from God to mankind, one that is seen in many forms. One of the purest forms of this love is the love for a child. This love becomes even more significant when the child is abused or neglected.

In this county, there is a small group of men and women who volunteer their time and efforts for abused children for one reason: they have a special place in their hearts for the children in this area who need a little extra loving care. This volunteer group is headed by one very special woman who has dedicated many hours to a job for which she gets very little thanks.

She is Jeri Akard, President of the Lynn County Child Welfare Board, a volunteer group under the auspices of Children's Protective Services, who work with the State Department of Public Welfare.

Mrs. Akard has a full-time job as probation officer for adults and juveniles in Lynn County, with an upstairs office in the county courthouse. She says she "fell into the job" of working with Children's Protective Services when the Dept. of Human Services closed their office in Tahoka about five or six years ago.

"People would call me because they knew that many times I knew these families (of abused and ne-

I DON'T KNOW whether to call this story "The Invisible Skunk Mystery," or "Definitely Not Flowers in the Attic". Whatever, it is one of the strangest real-life stories I have encountered lately, the kind that, as it unfolds, should leave you smellbound.

This is about a skunk which nobody has ever seen, but which definitely gives off a skunky odor. Nothing new about that, because lots of skunks have been plaguing local residents in the last couple of years, and many have been killed or chased out from under houses and in back yards, always an unpleasant experience for the homeowners involved.

What is new, though, is that this skunk apparently is in the attic, or maybe the walls, and it has the ability to be invisible and even more remarkable, can move from the attic of one house to the one in the house next door.

A nice lady who lives next door first advised us of the mystery, inquiring if we had had any skunk problems. We hadn't, and still haven't, as of this writing. But she said she smelled a skunk odor very strong inside her house, but not outside. And the odor comes and goes, and is in only one room at a time.

The rooms were searched cautiously, and then she called in a neighbor man, and then a city worker, who both searched inside and out, and who went into the attic to try to locate the skunk (although the neighbor admitted he wouldn't know what to do next if he saw the critter).

This low down pole cat couldn't have been under the house; it is on a concrete slab. And the aroma kept coming back for over a week at various times.

I suggested to her that she just made all that stuff up so she could get some men to come by the house for coffee. She denied that, pointing out that some of the visitors had smelled the odor. She said her son called and suggested she either put her little dog up in the attic, or put the place up for sale, but she didn't want to do either of those things.

Then, the neighbor who first had checked out her attic reported that the skunk smell now was in his house, only in the living room/den, and again couldn't be smelled outside, or located in the house. His wife had discovered this unpleasant situation. So the skunk may have teleported from one attic to the other.

At last report, the smell had not returned to either house. And my neighbor said my house probably would be next, since the varmint apparently is working on a plan to louse up the whole stinking neighborhood.

I sure hope she is wrong. I can just see my wife packing her things and driving off down the street, singing "Arrivederci, Aroma."

"LINKING THE GENERATIONS" - THS student Angel Strickland is shown with her project display board entitled "Linking the Generations." Angel placed 6th in the Star Event State Competition on April 12 in San Antonio. Angel and other FHA members planned a bingo party and served a Mexican Fiesta to the Senior Citizens on Feb. 9. Her trophy was presented at a recognition session honoring all participants at the Convention center Arena on Saturday, April 13.

Virginia Lara and Sandy Garcia also competed in the All-Star Project on the Children's Toy Library. Melissa Rameriz competed in the family communications event.

All-Star projects were evaluated by such criteria as impact of the project on families, individuals, the school or community; the extent to which the project allowed students to grow and expand their opportunities to learn; the clarity of the goals and descriptions of the project.

Third Graders Study Unit On Australia

Third grade students at Tahoka Elementary have just completed a week of study of life on the continent of Australia, with two activities held for the students each day for one week, April 15-19. This project was entitled "G'day Mate!". Mrs. Linda Huffaker, Mrs. Debbie Steffens and Mrs. Nancy Williams are teachers for the third grade.

The topic for Monday was "Get on Top of What's Down Under" where the students studied the geography and history of Australia. Tiffany Huffaker, a Tahoka High School senior who spent a year in Australia as an exchange student, presented a program to the students entitled "An Aussie School Day."

On Tuesday, students viewed a film entitled "Aborigines, The First Australians" which depicted the early tribes of Aborigines. Students also participated in a unit called "Didgeredo and Aborigines Art" where they constructed and learned to play a didgeredo, and to make an Aborigine picture.

"Boomerang-rang" was the topic of the day on Wednesday, when the students constructed paper boomerangs and took them outside to try them out. The Aborigines use boomerangs for weapons and sporting events. While outside, the students enjoyed Australian Tea Time, eating scones, jam and cream with hot tea prepared by the teachers.

Thursday, students watched a film entitled "The Great Barrier Reef" which featured fish found around the reef. A unit called "Those Crazy Animals" allowed students to discuss the unusual animal life found in Australia, and to color a picture and write a report or story about one animal.

To close the week of study on Friday, students heard about how students in Australia wear school uniforms in a unit called "Uniform Us." They also made a terrarium to show what makes the rain forest in Australia in a unit called "When It Rains, It Pours." They were also told about children's literature from an Australian author, Dorothy Wall, called "Blinky Bill."

"The students enjoyed the unit of study on Australia, learning and experiencing the customs of another country," said Mrs. Huffaker. "It was a nice change of pace for them."

Wetland Regulation On Farm Bill Has Changed

The Wetland regulations of the 1990 Farm Bill have changed according to Jon Weddle, District Conservationist of the SCS in Tahoka.

One of the most important changes involves the time frame when a person is in violation of Swampbuster. As of Nov. 28, 1990, when a person converts a wetland for the purpose or to have the effect of making the production of an agricultural commodity possible he or she will be subject to a fine plus loss of eligibility for USDA benefits until the wetland has been restored, stated Weddle.

Weddle stated that if a person is planning any new construction in a wetland he or she should contact the local ASCS or SCS office prior to starting construction.

Child Welfare Board Lends Helping Hand ...

first Wednesday of each month, and directs to the Dept. of Human Services any reports of suspected child abuse or neglect. They also see to the needs of any Lynn County foster children — those children who are taken out of their natural homes due to neglect or abuse, or because of parents' inability to care for their children.

When a report of suspected child abuse is received by a member of the Child Welfare Board, it is passed on to a case worker with the Dept. of Human Services. "This case worker, usually from Brownfield or other surrounding areas, must check any and every report of suspected child abuse, whether it is reported by phone, or however it may be reported," explains Mrs. Akard. The person's name reporting the suspected abuse remains confidential.

According to the circumstances reported, the case worker must decide whether there is an immediate danger to the child, and whether there is a need to go out and visit the child that day. "A case worker may visit the family at any time, day or night, in order to investigate an incident," says Mrs. Akard.

After a case is investigated, a letter is sent to the person reporting the suspected abuse, stating that the case has been officially investigated by a Dept. of Human Services case worker, and whether the case will be closed at that time or if there was any action taken on the case. In Lynn County, up to 20 investigations per month is a normal caseload, according to Mrs. Akard.

Depending upon the severity of the situation found, a case worker must decide how to handle each case. "If there are 'real' signs of abuse, such as broken bones, a case worker has the authority to take that child immediately, and bring him or her to the Dept. of Human Services offices until they can find a place for the child to stay," she explains.

The members of the Child Welfare Board keep a close eye on Lynn County children who are found to be abused or neglected, receiving reports from the case worker and helping in any manner which they can. The offenders are reported to the police and, in some instances, put in jail. "In the case of rape, incest or sexual molestation, we take the victims to a doctor or rape crisis center," says Mrs. Akard.

A case worker may find, upon visiting a family, that reports of suspected child abuse are unfounded, or that no physical evidence is present at that time. If there is reason to believe, however, that "something is going on," a case worker may go back at any time, day or night, to check out the situation again.

There is no paid staff case worker in Lynn County. "We use case workers from Brownfield or Post," explains the frustrated president of the Child Welfare Board. "There is a definite need for a full-time case worker here — it would take so much of the load and responsibility off me," says Mrs. Akard. "I have tried and tried (to get a case worker) to no effect. It's not the county commissioners here — they would be delighted to get one. But a case worker is a paid employee of the State Dept. of Human Services and they have the final say. It's not a county job," she adds.

As president of the Child Welfare Board, it is not Mrs. Akard's duty to handle all the details of foster care for children. "I do it because I care," she says. "My job is probation officer. I know a lot of these children because I see their families in the course of my job."

At the present time, there are ten Lynn County children who are under foster care. Because there are no foster homes in Lynn County, these children are placed in foster homes in adjacent counties. According to Mrs. Akard, there have not been any foster homes in Lynn County for several years.

"Nowadays, people are not willing to give of themselves to children and teenagers and to the problems that our society has today so far as kids are concerned," says Mrs. Akard. "We try to place the children with a relative or someone they know, and try to keep siblings together, but it's awfully hard to find a home that will accept, say, three little boys who are little live wires."

The parents have no say where their children will go. Their care is under the authority of the Dept. of Human Services, and they have the final say as to who will care for children taken out of their homes.

The parents may stay in contact with their children through the case worker and the Child Welfare Board. Foster parents and real parents have very little communication. "The real parents are not given the names of the foster parents or where they live," adds Mrs. Akard. "Contact is only through the case worker, who can arrange a meeting at another site so parents can visit with their children. Of course, older children can tell their real parents where they are, and there is some telephone communication. Each situation is different."

"If someone wanted to be on the Child Welfare Board ... we would greet them with open arms."

Children stay under foster care until they reach a certain age, or until they can get back with their parents. "That is the goal, really and truly, of the Child Welfare Board," says Mrs. Akard. "State children go out for adoption — for county children the goal is for the child to go back with his family in his natural home. We work with the parents towards this goal."

A counseling service works with the parents of the children, while children are counseled by the juvenile division counselors. "We try to get these people back to a functioning family. If we don't work with the family, there's not a bit of reason in the world to send the children back," she says.

"These people who abuse children are sadly messed up, and the sad part about it is they have so many of the people fooled. They can't believe this nice man has done so many mean things to this pretty little girl," says Mrs. Akard. "The one who molests a child is not the stranger, but in most cases is the person next door or someone in the family."

Through her job as probation officer, Mrs. Akard sees these families get into a cycle that just "goes around and around." She explains, "Once you start working with a family, it's a cycle that they never get out of. The Children's Protective Service, the police department, the sheriff's department, the attorneys in Lynn County, and I work with the same families over and over. They start as juveniles, they start as truants, they start young, young. Then I start with the parents and juveniles, and it goes right on around until they are incarcerated as adults, in many cases," she adds.

"I will say that in my juveniles, I've been juvenile officer for eight years, and I've only had two that have come back as adult offenders," adds Mrs. Akard, who is justifiably proud of these statistics. "But it's the same families that run in this cycle. It's usually true that an abuser has been an abuser."

When a child is placed in foster care, the county pays the foster parents between $1200 and $1400 per month per child, and then the state reimburses the county. The county purchases clothing, and Medicaid for foster children. "Over and above what Medicaid pays for, we have a fund to pay for small medical bills," says Mrs. Akard. "The Lions Club pays for glasses, and we have a clothing room upstairs on the third floor of the courthouse where I take donated clothing and sort and distribute it."

The Lynn County Child Welfare Board has no county funds set aside for its use. It is operated on donations only, according to Mrs. Akard. "At this time, we are getting ready to hit on the church groups, Sunday School classes, and other organizations to see if they would like to sponsor a child for birthdays, graduation and other special occasions," she says.

This past Christmas, Mrs. Akard says there was a great amount of donations given by area citizens. "I gave 'wish lists' to different families and groups who volunteered to help buy things for the children, and each one of the children was just supplied miraculously with everything they wanted. We even took many more families who are 'needy' and helped them because we had so many people donating last year. Because of my job as probation officer, I know of many truly needy families," she adds. "If we had a Dept. of Human Services office here, that would be their job. I do it because I want to."

The Child Welfare Board is gearing up to publicize the need for foster families in Lynn County, she says. "We have a phone number to call to contact about becoming a foster parent, and we are in the planning stages of conducting a program or seminar for interested persons to come and ask questions about what becoming a foster parent involves."

Basically, a foster home must be certified by the foster care division of Children's Protective Services. There is a regional office in Lubbock who would provide that service, and a representative would go out and approve homes. To qualify, a home would have to provide adequate beds, floor space footage per child, and a genuine love for the child. "These days, it does not necessarily have to be a two-parent home to qualify," says Mrs. Akard. "Many years ago, my husband and I were foster parents and had to go through some real rigid qualifications that they do not require now. I think this is because foster homes are harder to come by now."

And what about someone who would like to help these children without becoming a foster parent? "There are many, many things a person could do to help," says Mrs. Akard. "If someone wanted to be on the Child Welfare Board, all they have to do is tell me. We would greet them with open arms," she adds. "There aren't too many of us, because it's a whole lot of giving, and a very little thank you."

Other than serving on the board, a volunteer could also donate money, distribute pamphlets about preventing child abuse, or in other ways. "There are many things somebody can do to help without becoming a foster parent," she concluded.

In her way, Jeri Akard has done many things to help the plight of abused and neglected children. She, and the other members of the Lynn County Child Welfare Board, are giving what they can to these children — time, money, and most of all, love. "But the greatest of these gifts is love." — I Corinthians 13:13.

Energas Is Requesting Rate Increase

Energas Company has notified the four Lynn County cities and the 62 other incorporated communities on its West Texas distribution system that the company intends to increase rates by approximately 7 percent effective May 24. The company has also plans to raise its service charges.

The annual increase to an average residential customer using 96 Mcf of natural gas per year would be approximately $27.72, or 7 percent.

About 211,000 customers are affected including all sales customers who are not on irrigation or special industrial contracts with the company.

The last rate adjustment filed by Energas for the West Texas Distribution System was in 1984 and the subsequent increase of approximately 17 cents per Mcf was effective Nov. 1, 1984.

Governing bodies of the communities in the system will be provided with additional information from Energas as support for the company's rate increase request.

In its application to the cities to increase its rates, Energas has proposed an effective date of May 24, 1991. However, the cities have the authority to suspend the operation of the rates filed for a period not to exceed 90 days beyond this date in order to provide more time to study the filing.

"We feel the rate request is necessary and that the company has demonstrated a commitment to hold costs down," Company President Eugene Ehler. "Energas is prepared to meet with representatives of the 66 communities at the earliest convenient time to discuss the filing."

THUMB SUCKING IS NORMAL FOR INFANTS

Their thumbs are always handier than a nipple or pacifier, and helps them not to be irritable when wet or tired. They take the place of continuous petting. There are no apparent problems caused by infant thumb sucking.

After youngsters are older than two years and certainly when they become four or five years old, your pediatrician should be consulted if thumb sucking persists. It can not only be an embarrassment, but actually change the shape of a child's mouth. Your pediatrician can suggest one of the preventives we carry against thumb sucking.

ALZHEIMERS?

A London University study said that autopsies on diagnosed Alzheimers victims revealed more than half of them died of cerebrovascular disease (CVC) instead of Alzheimers. CVD is usually caused by cholesterol blockage of arteries in the brain, leading to blood clots, strokes, hemorrhages, with destruction of brain tissue. Eating less fat and cholesterol can lower the risk of blocked brain arteries and the resulting senile dementia.
