A little over two months ago I started off for the central provinces. A missionary lady, Mrs. Drynan, of Rajputana, accompanied me part of the way, to gather some children for mission orphanages of Poona. We went to Sohagpur first, and began the work at once. We found out that we could not get the orphan children without the permission of the government. So our first business was to go and see physician in charge of the hospial and the tabsildar in charge of the poor house. Right before that hospital were walking three little famished skeleton-like forms. The three children, we found out, were of the Chamar aste, their father had died some time ago, and the mother died only the day
