Range Riders

The task of the early cowboy was grim, full of hardships and responsibilities.

a lot of courage, honesty and loyalty to the outfit for whom he worked.

The old timer would say, "If you would make a good cowpuncher, you must have a strong back and a weak mind.'

The call of the wide open spaces was irresistable to youth in the teen age. Although they had good comfortable homes, kind parents, and almost everything that heart 15.70c. could desire, yet the urge to mount a horse and ride the vast ranges was a dream that must come true.

When once inducted into an outfit and became inured to the hard, dangerous work, he loved it, and insisted that his outfit was the best on the range.

He would stand night guard with the herd, and stay with them during the fiercest storm that ever wind did blow with never a complaint. When lightening played so so that a ball of fire stood on the point of the horns of each animal, he would whistle "Hell Among the Yearlins' as gaily as if it were a calm morning in May.

If the herd stampeded and ran like the clatter wheels of perdition, he would take off the slicker that shielded him from the cold, pelting rain and rode to them. He would ride to the front of the leaders and shake his slicker at them and turn them into a milling mass and then bring them back to the bedding ground. Only a dead cow will fail to run when a slicker has been flaunted in her face.

Then after the deadly drama is over and the cattle are peacefully grazing, all the cowpuncher asks is a cup of coffee which the "coosy" has kept hot for him and a fill of hot biscuits reposing in the bake oven. Maybe the boss will grant him two hours under the chuck wagon in which to rest and sleep.

While the task of a cowboy was grim and hard, yet he was usually a merry cuss and loved the fun which he manufactured for him self and his pals. When his mind dwelt on the girl he left behind, he would sing in a minor key:

"My foot's in the stirrup,

"My quirt's in my hand,

'Farewell, dear Mollie, "My horses won't stand,"

While the life of a cowboy was strenous and hard, yet he loved it, and only when he was old would he retire from It to dream about it the rest of his days.

In getting ready to drive a herd up the trail, they usually recruited a boy named Gid. Gid was a verdant youth about 17 years old. He had been brought up in town with fine school opportunities, but the only thing he knew about cow punching and the wide open spaces was just what he had read in the Mrs. D. Hall, wife of the Santa stories of Wild Bill, Kit Carson, Thunderation Sam. Gid was well posted on Indian ways and bow to kill them.

> He also informed John, Tom, Hank. Jeff and Harvey that he was the best poker player that ever wore an ace up his sleeve. He also told the boys that he was a crack pistol shot, but the pistol he carried had a broken mainspring and wouldn't Gid was informed that the boys in the outfit didn't know how to play poker, but they crayed that he would teach them the mysteries of the art of poker.

When the herd had crossed the Brazos, and was well in the hills of Brown and Hamilton Counties, the country looked wild to Gid, and he informed the boys that according to Buffale Bill, it must be Indian Country.

The boys told Gid that his conelusions were correct. That he must always be on the lookout and never go out without a gun. At noon one day, Gid was posted on a hill to watch the cattle and was told to keep his eyes peeled for Indians. [There were no Indians nearer than Oblahoma, but Gid didn't know it.)

Presently, Gid came full speed on his pony into camp shouting, "Indians coming boys, get your guns" Every puncher grabbed his gun and made ready to defend the camp, according to plan, while Gid took refuge in the covered wagon. He explained that as his gun wouldn't fire, he could not join in the carnage. (Gid had seen two cowboys which he mistook for Indians.)

That night Gid got permission from me to sleep with me in my bed. Before going to bed he explained to me that he had an engagement with John and Tom to teach them how to play poker. I warned him not to take all the boys had.

About ten that night, Gid came to my bed crying bitterly. He had on nothing but his underwear. He was barefooted and practically naked. He explained that after he had so kindly taught Tom and John how to play poker, they had won all the money I had given him as well as all his clothes, including his shoes, and would I help get them back?

Next morning I told Tom and John to manage for some shoes and clothes for Gid. Hank was the biggest man in the outfit, so they got a discarded hat, a pair of old boots, a pair of old britches and a shirt from Hank. All this regalia was about three numbers too large for Gid. When they got Gid rigged out in these fancy togs, Gid was a sight to make the Angels weep.

They forced him to wear this outfit all the way to our destinanation. As we passed through a town, Gid would take refuge in the chuck wagon.

At the end of the drive, Tom and John restored all their winnings back to Gid, and admonished him to never bet on "Grannies' Tricks." The friendship between these boys was never broken, Gid had caught on.—Uncle Bill.

From where I sit ...

by Joe Marsh

We had a real old-time church supper the other night. Bert Childers played the fiddle, and the ladies brought refreshments. Of course, we missed the boys who were away—but all in all it was mighty pleasant.

Only sour note was Doc Mo-Ginnis. "Shucks," says Doc, "we oughtn't to be enjoyin' ourselves when American soldiers are over there fightin' a war."

Now from where I sit, Doc's absolutely wrong. All of us are wesking overtime to help the war. We've got our worries and troubles. It's a mighty good thing we can relax with a little wholesome enjoyment.

And I believe it's what the men over there would have us do... keep up the little friendly customs they remember – like the evening get-togethers, having a glass of beer with friends, and all the little pleasures they look forward to enjoying.

> The highlight of the affair was the fortune telling. Now that the future holds no secrets from us, we are just waiting for our next funmaking celebration.

Saturday found most of the Sterling people in San Angelo again. We were taking in the rodeo, bowling alley, the Hangar and several other places. A few who were having a swell time were Paula Sue and Fred, Charley and Neal, Beth and Arthur Bird Phillips of Ozona. There were just gobs more-but I was so busy that I couldn't see everyone.

Sunday there was a large crowd at the picture show. However there were several couples back in San Angelo. (Could it be because this is Leap Year?)

Tom D. Davis is here for the first time in several months. He said that he would be here for five days. We are all glad to see the EX S.H.S'er back home.

Class Activities

The homemaking classes are busy with problems in clothing. The girls in the freshman class are working on school dresses, now that they have completed their first project, which was the making of pajamas. The sophomores are completing dresses for themselves and are about ready to begin the construction of children's dresses. The third year girls have finished their nice dresses, and are ready to take up the remodelling of old dresses.

The senior and sophomore English classes are in the midst of an intensive study of grammar and composition. The seniors are diagramtences. Also the seniors are writing familiar essays on a variety of subjects. The sophomores have been writing descriptions of persons.

The juniors and freshmen are engaged in the study of literature.

Activities of the Girls' Volley Ball Team

The girls' volley ball team, coached by Mrs. A.T. Bratton, was scheduled to play two games this week, Both games were matched with the Water Valley team. The first game was Tuesday night at Water Valley and one will be here tonight.

The starting line-up included Sue Everitt, Venera Mitchell, Charlie Brooks, Betty Jane Donalson, Mutt Martin, and Frances Hudson. Substitutes were Alma Lawson, Jerrie Snead, La Vone Allen, and Beth Abernathy.
