is a near the centre of production as New York was transpecting assistance during the reign of the yellow fever to go to the camps provided for them. The situation does not admit of dilly-dallying. The authorities have provided rations of bread and meat at the camps, and have also plenty of powder and ball in the city, and the recalcitrant darkies should be given their choice, with a distinct understanding that prompt action was necessary and imperative. If the rule was intended to operate against the blacks and not against the whites, there might be some reason in the objection of the colored people to going to the camps, but such is not the case. The sconer the authorities act with determination in this matter the better will it be for all concerned.

M. Beyond It All. BY SARAH DOWNNET.

I hear a gladsome wind that sings
In budding copes and waving grass;
And on the hill, like living things.
The light cloud-shadows slowly pass.
How soon from forests far away
Will ring the wood-show's ammer call,
And rosso open day by day?
But I shall go beyond it all.

Beyond the hopes of life and time,
The songs that end when sunshine dies.
The blooms that wither in their prime,
The passing blush of evening skies;
Beyond theorbities of raise that heat.
On flowers that fade, and leaves that fi
Beyond the bitter and the sweet—
Beyond, it all! beyond it all!

Beyond the fifful light and shade,
The idois crumbling into dust.
She graves where pallent hearts have laidTheir memories of love and trust,
The voices that have changed their tone,
The dreams that fly, the Joys that pall;
The grief that only One has known—
Beyond them all, beyond them all!

I thank Thee, Father, for the thought.
That all the work of life is done;
The story told, the battle fought.
The rest eternal nearly won.
Thy love has kept me till the end,
My waiting spirit hears Thee call;
Draw mear, O sever changing friend,
And guide me home—beyond it all!

The following interesting essay on the in-uence a teacher may exert, and the manner of exerting it, was written by Mrs. M. W. Merrick, of this city:

Merrick, of this city:

Every person in the world exerts an influence, sensibly or insensibly, and by others it is perceptable or imperceptable. Not even an involuntary motion or glance-but has its effect, upon ourselves, if alone; upon others if in company; for involuntary actions become so by practice, the muscles had first to be trained though we may not remember when that training took place. We judge people by their actions. The manner in which a person walks across a room, tells us whether he be gentle or boisterous, strong or weak, slow and vacillating or energetic and decided. The manner in which one stands tells us whether he have self-possession and self. whether he have self-possession and self-control or whether consciousness of self-makes him hesitating and weak. The man-ner in which the head is carried gives us an impression of studiousness, reverence would tion, whether the attention is given to us or to something else in the room, or to semething far away; whether anger or offended dignity is roused, or whether happiness sits within. All these movements are temporary and continually changing. But let us consider the permanent features. The lines of the eye-brows and mouth showns smallness that the teacher has to deal with the thousand or weakness of interest of the electron to some thing else in the room, or to seme there are many more people ready to censure and make public what does not suit their own individual views, there so much thei ganized, the teacher has a lever of great power in the reaction of the culture and self-poise of the older pupils upon the younger. We find the heads of many of our older pupils like bursan drawers, with many compartments where knowledge has been tossed in by indiscriminate hands helter skelter, and to disentangle and smooth out all the ribbons and tapes and threads, wind them up and put them back again, so that they may be ready and fit for use when required, is no easy matter and occupies no little time and patience. Wruhles once made, whether they be moral, mental or physical, will always show thamselves. Unless they have much, very much, hard pressing, and even then the article is not as good as new, but looks dilapidated and is easily drawn back into its old creases. I know it

It was resolved that as the executive of the state was not disposed to set in apprehending the murderer, that the turners do all in their power to this end, and that in pursuance of this object, collections betaken by the different organizations.

Whereupon the convention adjourned.

At night, the new hall was the scone of life and merriment, it being the occasion of tion of the hall by the San Antonio association, short addresses being delivered by L.

C. Grothaus, Esq., and Mr. Ben Mauermaan.
The danding followed, and was continued until a late hour. The attendance was large, there being on the floor at one timupwards of 125 couples. About miduight a splendid supper was nerved and heartill partaken of by the "belie gents" and thei ladies fair, who had sharpened thei appetites by the exercise of the evening.
The closing axeroises of the reunion will be at the springs to-day, where some very interesting prize turning will occur.

Our readers will remember the met in last Friday morning a issue of the of the nine year old daughter of Heary deman and lady, at their residence on quia atreet. Editors San Antonio Express:

Major Courtney relieving LA. Ayers at Eagle springs, was notified one hour after his arrival that the reds, were in Pass canyon, he took the trail at night, and covertook them at Orissy springs, near Sait lakes, forty miles from Eagle springs. There were twenty-five colored troops against sixty Indians. The chief slared them to combat, and Courtney accepted the challenge and report says killed ten reds and routed them. Two soldiers were wounded, one dying since. One bug negro sergeant killed the chief after being knocked down with a tomahawk.
