Mayor Yeager today if he would be a candidate for reelection to the office of mayor of Artesia in city elections coming up April 3, Mayor Yeager said that there was a lot of pressure on him to make up his mind.

Thirteenth, representing the Third Ward; Dr. J. J. Clarke, Jr., 901 W. Texas, representing the Fourth Ward; Joe Alvarado, 1003 N. Roselawn, Second Ward; and Clayton Menefee, 32 W. Dallas, First Ward.

Of the four councilmen, only Menefee said that he did not think he would be a candidate for reelection. Walker, said that the council job took more of his time than he felt he could spare from his business.

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP)—A missing B25 light bomber carrying four men from Goodfellow AFB, San Angelo, Tex., was still sought today in the snow-covered San Bernardino Mountains.

The plane was en route to Norton AFB here last Thursday when it reportedly had only 30 minutes of gasoline left. Ranchers soon afterward reported hearing a crash.

Toll High As Mob Panicks In Fire

BALTIMORE (AP)—At least 10 women perished in a mad dash for the exits and nine other persons were reported missing last night after fire touched off panic in a hall jammed with a church crowd of about 1,000.

Some were even throwing out of the windows friends they didn't think could make it any other way.

Barthelme said the fire was first detected in a duct.

Several of the fellows got up on a ladder to put out. All at once the flames burst out. You might say it was an explosion. The fire engulfed the guys on the ladder for a minute. I don't know what happened to them.

Such a libretto for the inescapable last act would be humane and valuable. I renew my suggestion that the poets spit upon their gods and confect it at once.

Eden

At a news conference, before departing from the Queen Elizabeth, Eden termed "admirable" the President's reply to Soviet Premier Bulganin's proposal for a 20-year peace pact.

Bulganin's move was regarded here as a propaganda effort and an attempt to steal a march on the Eden-Eisenhower conferences even before they began.

Eisenhower turned it down over the weekend in a conciliatory letter designed to smash the idea of a two-way deal between Moscow and Washington while keeping open his personal contact with Bulganin.

Eisenhower released his and Bulganin's letters to try to get the Soviet move as far to one side as possible prior to Eden's arrival. The two were sure to discuss the proposal and assess Soviet motives however.

Eden and Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd were scheduled to lunch with Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles at the White House.

British and American officials have done much spadework for the talks, particularly on the Middle Eastern situation. Two weeks ago they decided it was essential to get Israel and the Arab states into active negotiations early this year if the Middle East is to be saved from a crisis later on.

Officials say that without an Israeli-Arab peace it is difficult to see what actions can be taken effectively to block the spread of Communist influence and Soviet power in that petroleum center of the world.

British and American informants say Eisenhower and Eden will discuss every problem of common interest in the world.

Prime Minister Eden's Arrival May Shed Some Light On Three Puzzles Worrying Businessmen

By SAM DAWSON
NEW YORK — British Prime Minister Eden's arrival today to talk over world policies with President Eisenhower may shed some light on three of the puzzles worrying American businessmen:

1. The talk about Russia's planning economic warfare in world markets, and all the new trade and political problems that could spawn.

2. The olive branch Russia has just extended with its other hand, and all the economic uncertainties that could bring, on the off chance the branch has real leaves.

3. The dispute over more American aid to friendly nations, and all the turmoil that inspires among politicians, American exporters and importers, and American taxpayers.

Until recently talk about Russian plans for economic warfare have been pooh-poohed. There is still great doubt about her ability to make good.

But American businessmen are paying a little more attention now because of two things: 1. Russia has been making tempting offers to Far Eastern nations. She has made barter deals in the Middle East, trading excess military equipment for cotton and the like. She has been wooing Latin America—where United States is so strong—with offers she may or may not be able to fulfill.

2. Russia has recently announced a new five-year plan with stress on the production of heavy industry—which makes goods the military can use, but also goods that could be exported if that serves the Soviet world plan better.

At present Russia's industrial production capacity is believed to be less than half as great as that of the United States. Her 1955 steel production, for example, is thought to have been 45 million metric tons. That is about 40 million American tons of 2,000 pounds each. American mills turned out a record 117 million tons last year.

But the disturbing fact is that since the war Russia's industrial output has increased at a notable rate. She is still way behind the United States but she appears to be closing the gap a little.

In other fields, especially in nuclear energy, her plans call for pulling much closer to the American potential.

Her schools and colleges stress the training of engineers and scientists—one of the raw materials of industrial progress.

The Colorado - Montana - Wyoming area has the lowest regional natural gas rates in the nation, although it is not the largest producing area.

The reports say Kansas has the lowest rate for any state—50 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. West Virginia is next with 51. Other rates include Wyoming 55, Montana 58.9, Colorado 60.2, Utah 68.1, New Mexico 67.9, Arizona 98.6 and Nevada 98.6.

Highest rate listed is $3.10 in Rhode Island.

Tyrannical Bosses Becoming But A Memory In United States

By HAL BOYLE
JERSEY CITY, N. J. — Many an old-time industrial leader thought he'd be a workman's favorite by keeping him on the payroll.

This breed of boss is rapidly vanishing from the American scene. He is being replaced by executives who recognize that employee loyalty is a keystone in any successful business if it is to endure.

A leading spokesman of the "happy shop" principle in industry today is Frank G. Atkinson.

Atkinson, whose weak eyes forced him to give up his dream of becoming a professional baseball player, took a $4 a week job at 15 with the Joseph Dixon Crucible Co. here. Now at 57 he heads the firm, one of the nation's largest manufacturers of pencils, crucibles and industrial graphite paints.

During his steady rise from office boy to president, Atkinson who comes from a long line of Methodist ministers, developed a conviction that the Golden Rule was as important in industry as it was in religious life.

"Business is people," he said. "The dignity of the individual worker is important. But applying the Golden Rule isn't merely good business. It's the only way to live."

Atkinson takes it almost as a personal blow when any of his 1,000-odd employees quit, and few do.

"One of the greatest loss factors borne by industry today is traceable to a high rate in personal turnover," he said. "A management which does not realize that will not succeed."

But how can a management avoid losing its skilled employees and escape the expense of training new ones?

Atkinson feels it should pay wages "as high as the business will stand," schedule the work so as to avoid layoffs, install profit-sharing programs and pensions, medical aid and insurance plans.

But above all—and I know the value of a buck," he continued, "there is much more to keeping people than just the amount you pay them or the extra benefits they get. They have to be recognized, to feel that they themselves are essential to the success of the business."

"Before we go outside to bring someone in to fill an important post, we look over everyone on the payroll to see if we can't find one who can be advanced within the organization."

"We encourage our people to study and prepare for a better job. We sometimes even pay their tuition."

The incentive program seems to have paid off. The 129-year-old firm has never had a strike. When outside interests threatened to get financial control of the company several years ago the employees bought stock themselves and prevented it.

"About 40 per cent of the employees own stock," Atkinson said. "We think that's a good thing but we don't campaign for it."

Atkinson feels opportunity has never been greater in industry, that it has never been easier to get good business training. But it worries him that many young men today prefer the security of a safe job with seniority to the risks, challenge and rewards of management.

"They ought to knock that spirit out of their heads," he said. "Isn't the American idea merely to look for something safe and comfortable? Business is a hard ball game. Maybe we ought to find another word for hard work. 'Nothing you're really interested in is work. What is happening anyway? When you become interested in your job you are conscious of the passing of time and you are truly happy.'"

"I could feel the flames on the back of my neck," she said. "I kept saying 'This is it, this is it. All I could think about was my friend of mine who was there with four small children. Then finally got pulled out of a door.'"

Brooklyn Park firemen, from some 35 companies to respond, logged their first alarm at 10:15 p.m., 50 minutes before the fire hour celebration was scheduled to end.

"Some man called us from a hall and said he wanted to see a 'small fire,'" said Lt. Charles Doegen. "He sounded very nervous and collected."

Doegen said the tar-paper-covered wooden roof was blown throughout by the time he arrived on one of the first engines.

"The whole thing went up in minutes," he added. Only white-painted walls were standing as he spoke.

Inside, firemen and survivors searched the blackened, smoking beams were strewn over a mat of soaked ashes, cinder blocks and twisted steel folding chairs.

Russian Peace Offer Obvious Attempt To Turn The Tables

By JAMES MARLOW
Associated Press News Analyst

WASHINGTON — The Russian's treaty of friendship offer to the United States — rejected by President Eisenhower—is a pretty clear propaganda try at turning the tables.

The Russians suffered psychological and propaganda damage when they rejected Eisenhower's sensational "open skies" proposal. It took them six months to think of an equally dramatic way to get even.

At Geneva in July Eisenhower suggested the United States and Russia agree to aerial inspection of each other's countries as a necessary step toward disarmament and protection against surprise attack by either.

With this proposal Eisenhower put the United States in the position of taking the initiative for peace. World reaction was good. Men everywhere could visualize it, airplanes taking pictures from the sky.

The proposal had the appeal which propagandists must dream about: a simple idea easily grasped. And it was bold. Upon examination it was not so simple.

It has never been clear whether Eisenhower's plan had been carefully thought out or was pulled from his hat on the spur of the moment. And he did not say whether the demand included America's overseas bases, which the Russians might want to watch more thoroughly than anything inside this country.

And it still is not known whether Congress ever would have approved it, since Eisenhower's plan would let Russian planes poke around inside this country. But there was never any need to get into a deep examination.

The Russians had a choice, to be made fairly fast, of saying yes or no. It was almost certain they would say no, since their whole regime is based on concealment. They said no. The no did not make them look good.

Then last week the Russians came up with the friendship treaty plan, knowing Eisenhower could not go for it.

It would, from the words used by Premier Bulganin, force the United States into agreeing to an endless Russian grip on the satellites; drive a wedge between the United States and its allies; and create an illusion of peace when there was no peace.

Eisenhower replied that if the Russians really want peace, they can prove it by deeds, such as the unification of Germany and the freeing of the satellites. The Russians can get propaganda mileage out of Eisenhower's no when they broadcast their offer and his rejection. The millions who can't read or who never see a Western paper giving Eisenhower's reasons will be told only that the President refused the offer of a treaty of friendship.

Eisenhower and Bulganin no doubt were highly conscious of what world reaction would be — Eisenhower's aerial inspection and Bulganin's treaty of friendship. Neither rejected the other's offer with the word no but their answers were nevertheless a rejection.

engineering and production units of the weapons complex were put underway. A mention was made of the series of tests at Nevada site begun last November by the Los Alamos laboratory to "further the knowledge concerning the safety of weapons in storage and transit."

Los Alamos personnel plus others from the state are expected also, according to the report, to participate in the Eniwetok test series.

The report said Dr. Alvin C. Graves of Los Alamos would be deputy commander of the test series for scientific matters. There have been unconfirmed reports, however, that in view of Graves' recent illness that he might be replaced in the high position.

Among other points made by the report: A fast breeder reactor concept of advanced design is being investigated by the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory;

Work on the development of aqueous homogeneous reactors using uranyl phosphate solution and a different mechanical arrangement has been undertaken at Los Alamos;

Los Alamos has figured in other general engineering and development studies;

"A major research effort" in the field of developing the controlled release of energy from atomic fusion, is being operated by the University of California at Los Alamos.

The report also took note of the appointment last October of Kenner F. Hertford as manager of the Santa Fe Operations Office of the AEC with headquarters in Albuquerque.

Know YOUR Schools

By JO CONNELL
DID YOU KNOW that school administrators are just as concerned with the individual pupil as classroom teachers?

For instance, New Mexico school administrators have formed a state organization for the purpose of improving the effectiveness of their services to the educational program, as a group and individually.

This organization is called the CPEA, or Cooperative Program for the Improvement of Educational Administration. Sometime I would like to find out why there is no "I" in the initials since Improvement is the key word in the name of the organization!

The administrators feel they can find some answers to their constant question, "How can I as an administrator improve the effectiveness of my work and therefore improve the educational offerings among politicians, American exporters and importers, and American taxpayers.
