Live Stock in Sight. The following shows the estimated receipts of cattle, hogs and sheep at the five principal western markets:

CATTLE Small Showing of Fat Steers, Trade in Slightly Stronger Tone. There is some falling off in the supplies of cattle that are moving to the leading markets this week and, while the selling off has not been sufficient to start a slightly better feeling in the trade, although there is complaint among the packers that the increase in arrivals is not in good and lively condition. The supply at the five leading markets for the week to date is 209,000 and is 18,000 less than for the same time last week but 19,000 more than for the same time last year. At the local market there is a shrinkage of 1000 compared with last week and 2,000 less than for the like period last year.

CATTLE, Cows, Huls and Mixed. There is some falling off in the supplies of cattle that are moving to the leading markets this week and, while the selling off has not been sufficient to start a slightly better feeling in the trade, although there is complaint among the packers that the increase in arrivals is not in good and lively condition.

Rainbow Gold

By Temple Bailey

(Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.) The dimness of the big drawing room was slightly lessened by the glow of the light through the perforations of the samovar. Evelyn Herriek was pouring the tea.

"I had a letter from Christine this morning," she said as she handed a cup to Bruce McKenzie.

"What did she say?" he asked, eagerly. "Wait until these people go," she murmured, "and then I will read it to you."

It was an hour before the crowd melted away, and even then they were not alone, for Phillip Herriek lounged on the couch in the corner. Evelyn read the note in an undertone.

"I am coming home, Evelyn. After all these years of study my voice is a failure. Do you remember that I used to say that I would find my pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, and Bruce would tell me that no one ever really found rainbow gold?"

Bruce and Evelyn looked at each other. "You see, she knows," Evelyn said at last.

From out of the shadows Phillip Herriek asked, "Has she lost her voice?" "Yes," Evelyn told him, "her beautiful voice; and she gave up everything for it."

She did not say, however, what was in the thoughts of each one of the three as they sat in the dim room. They had all loved Christine, and she had been engaged to Bruce; but feeling the call of her genius, she had chosen a career rather than marriage.

Behind the samovar Evelyn whispered to her lover, "I am afraid." "Of what?" he demanded.

sing—and now no one will care to hear me." Phillip sank down on the fur rug in front of her. "Is it all gone, your voice?" he asked softly.

"I still have a little voice," she said, "but no one cares to hear it."

"And again there was silence. There was constraint, too, in the atmosphere, for Bruce and Evelyn had grown into each other's lives and away from Christine's. Only in Phillip's heart was the real welcome that she craved."

She felt this instinctively, and it was her need of him, perhaps, that made her ask later, when the four had talked of many things, "Will you ride back to the hotel with me, Phillip? I know Evelyn had a dinner engagement and Bruce will want to say good-by to her without us."

Phillip insisted upon a stop at a tea-room, where they ordered ices as an excuse but ate nothing.

"I could not tell you. You understand," he asked eagerly. "I did not dream that you cared, and I thought Bruce's life was bound up in you."

"I knew it wasn't," she said. "But that had to be proved, and only my going away could prove it. And I am more than glad that I went away, Phillip, because I have learned now that love is the greatest thing in the world."

Behind the samovar Evelyn whispered to her lover, "I am afraid." "Of what?" he demanded.

"What then she comes back you will find that you have not forgotten her."

He shook his head. "She did not love me, and now I know that I did not love her—not in the way that I love you, Evelyn."

IOWA FARM FIGURES.

Census Bureau Reports Increases in Land, Buildings, Etc., Ranging From 51 to 122.7 Per Cent.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 1.—The Census Bureau's first preliminary comparative statement concerning the general farm data derived from the recent census of agriculture, as a part of the Thirtieth Decennial Census, was issued by Census Director Durand today. It relates to the state of Iowa and contains principally the results of the Census Bureau's tabulation of the number of all farms and farms of specified classes, and also the acreage and value of farm land in the state in 1910 in comparison with the Twelfth Census figures. It was prepared under the supervision of Chief Statistician LeGrande Powers, of the division of agriculture. It is stated that the tabulation totals, while tentative in character, will not be appreciably changed by later revisions.

Similar statements concerning the other states are being prepared, and early issuances of those for Indiana, Illinois, Minnesota and Wisconsin may be expected soon. Following these will be others showing the same facts for the individual counties within each state. Statistics relative to the acreage and yield of crops, and the number of domestic animals on farms and ranches will be next in order.

These advance statements form another of the important statistics instituted by Director Durand in order to give the public the earliest possible use of the census data, and to anticipate, by more than six months the time the publication of these data in bulletin form at previous censuses.

The extraordinary increases. Comparisons between the 1910 and 1900 totals in Iowa shows remarkable changes. While there have been noticeable decreases since 1900 in the total number of farms, farmers, owners, part owners, total acreage, improved acreage, and on the other hand, there are extraordinary increases in the value of land, buildings, and implements, which range from 51 to 122.7 per cent.

From 1900 to 1910, according to Director Durand's statement, the total value of Iowa's farm land alone rose from $125,752,000 to $279,025,000, an increase of $153,273,000, or no less than 122.7 per cent; the value of all farms, including that of their buildings, increased from $1,437,555,000 to $3,253,719,000, a gain of $1,816,164,000, or 117.3 per cent; and the value of the buildings alone rose from $249,592,000 to $454,849,000, an increase of $205,257,000, or 82.3 per cent. The value of farm implements and machinery rose from $57,561,000 to $93,723,000, a gain of $36,162,000, or 64.4 per cent; and expenditures for labor from $16,376,000 to $24,732,000, an increase of $8,356,000, or 51 per cent.

It is expected that later data will show that the number of people employed on the Iowa farms did not increase, therefore the reported increase in the total expenditures for labor represents approximately the relative increase in the wages of the individual farm laborer.

Decrease in Number of Farms. The total number of farms reported, during the decade, from 228,622 to 216,807, a decrease of 11,815, or a trifle over 5 per cent. This falling off in the number of farms is one that has been anticipated by all students of agricultural conditions in Iowa, and is believed to correspond quite closely with an anticipated decrease in the rural population of the state.

The number of farms operated by white farmers decreased from 228,335 to 216,603, the amount being 11,732, or 5.2 per cent; the diminution in the number of colored farmers was from 287 to 204.

The number of farms cultivated by their owners fell from 116,185 to 105,658, a decrease of 10,527, or 9.1 per cent. Those cultivated by part owners decreased from 28,988 to 26,531, the difference being 2,457, or 8.5 per cent; while those being cultivated by a partnership of owners and tenants decreased from 2,129 to 621, a loss of 1,508, or 70.8 per cent.

ARIZONA BOUNDARY LINE.

Question in Constitutional Convention May Require Action of Congress.

Phoenix, Ariz. Nov. 2.—The constitutional convention has turned back to the presenting committee the second proposition on which the constitution of the new State of Arizona shall be based. It is the section which defines the boundary line of the state, and there is a possibility that even congressional action may be invoked before the matter has been settled.

It is hardly possible that tract of several thousand acres in the extreme southwestern corner, embracing the northern half of the town of Yuma and a considerable part of its business section, may legally belong to California, though that state has made no claim upon it, and probably would cheerfully surrender its claim if a proper mode of procedure could be devised for such an action.

Following the Mexican war the territory of Guadalupe Hidalgo established the international line to a point at the intersection of the Gila and Colorado rivers, thence running to a monument three leagues south of San Diego was given as the boundary line of the United States along the course of that stream, which has its source near what now is the northern Arizona. It should be observed that the direction given from the junction of the two streams made no allowance for the fact that the Colorado, from the point of confluence with the Gila, makes a bend to the northward. It must be apparent that no monument could be established at the junction point, but one was erected, a large cross of Penitentiary Hill, within the limits of the City of Yuma, in line with the old-time mouth of the Gila, the stream having changed its course about half a mile.

Valuable Interests Involved. Following this line in its intersection and continuation the present southern boundary line of California to the north of Arizona Penitentiary, the Southern Pacific depot and bridge, the Reclamation Service offices on a tract that once was used as an army quartermaster's depot, the "scoop wheel" spanning plants of the Reclamation Service and the great shippen under the Colorado, several important business blocks of the town, residential property and a stretch of very valuable farming land, that will have additional value as soon as water is brought through the shippen from the Laguna Dam, upon which such a large share of the future of the locality depends.

When the Territory of New Mexico was established, in 1850, the same corner was defined at the junction of the two streams, that portion of the locality affected thus legally being placed within the new territory and the United States.

In 1854, by the Gladsden purchase, was acquired by the United States the locality then known as Pimaria, lying south of the Gila River, as far as 21 degrees 29 minutes of north latitude at a point near the present City of Nogales, whence the line was drawn to the northwest to a point nearly twenty miles northwest of Yuma. There it struck the Colorado, the course of that stream being followed northward to a junction with the line of California theretofore established. This added territory was given New Mexico.

In 1863 Arizona was created from the western half of New Mexico, its northern boundary line extending through to the eastern line of California on the thirty-seventh parallel of latitude. It thus embraced what is now the southern part of Nevada. The Nevada, through the first legislature of Arizona allotted a delegate from that section, designated as the county of Ute. It never had a regular government of its own.

The first definition of the land district of Los Angeles, created in 1872, follows the line from the junction of the Gila and Colorado rivers to the Pacific Ocean.

The question has been brought into court only once. It came before Judge Ross of the Federal Circuit Court for the Southern District of California, on a habeas corpus application made by Calvert Wilson, a Los Angeles lawyer, who sought the release of a client and of all other Arizona convicts imprisoned at the Arizona penitentiary at Yuma, on the ground that they had been ordered imprisoned in Arizona, and that the Arizona penitentiary was in California. Judge Ross refused to go into the merits of the case, probably considering that his court was no place to adjust boundary disputes. He simply dissolved the writ and directed the broad ground that to sustain the contention would be an action against public policy.

LAND OF THE COMMON PEOPLE

In America a Sense of Manhood and Equality is All-Pervading. Says Englishman.

America, writes Joseph Burt, an Englishman, is a young giant who has fought for and won a virgin land and the sweat of his toil is upon him. In his eyes are the hopes that move the world, and as he gazes on his bride nothing seems too high for their united destiny. We of the same stock are proud of the magnificence of this new chaplain in the world's tourney; and yet to us, who remember our long centuries of painful growth and see England as she still is, the simple faith of the American in time and material progress is pathetic. It is the optimism of a boy who thinks all will be right when he is a man. I loved America before I went there, and no words can tell what it was to me to see for the first time the happiness and freedom of the common people and the wealth and abundance in which they live. I paced the streets of Boston last September, thrilled by the possibilities of human life as I saw them before my eyes. A cabman as when he can, but even the cabman who drove me to the boarding house seemed a friend; and the girls in their offices moved about their work like queens, conscious of their womanhood and knowing that no man could make them afraid.

In all I spent four months traveling and lecturing in the eastern cities of the states and met many men of varied classes. In my wildest dreams for the race I had never foreseen such wealth, such freedom, such equality. America is the land of the common people, as England is the land of the classes. If I were a young workingman I would go to the states as soon as I could earn a passage, because, once on her soil, I should cease to be a laborer and become a man—which is a very different thing. Better than the boundless wealth of America, better than any material benefit she can bestow, is this sense of manhood and equality that is as all-pervading as the air.
