"It's been a long time since I was here," Tollivar murmured.

"Yes," Rossy nodded. "That was the day my pappy was killed."

"Yes," Dr. Tollivar said, not looking at him.

"So you was the pitcher that day for the Tollivars. You are a Tollivar, and not a Tollivar."

"That's right. Before we go into the matter that really brought us here, McAfee, I'll give you some idea of all that was behind that game. Then we'll have a look at the land in dispute between you and your cousin. I understand, of course, that really hasn't gone into court yet."

"I may as well tell you, however, I have been corresponding with old Jesse Leverage, and I have had a lawyer down at Mountain City working on it too. Then my own attorney checking and rechecking in Knoxville. It's complicated, and there are plenty of places where things can slip. But I think we have something to work on, and it will stand up in court."

"I don't know that I'm keering as much about that now as I am about the other thing," Rossy said biter in spite of himself.

"Let's sit down," Dr. Tollivar said, and they took a seat on the lower planks of the grandstand. The college president lighted a cigar, smoking thoughtfully. Rossy did not smoke.

"All right. I was pitching out there. It was up to me to kill your father. I remember that all very well, Rossy—better perhaps than you do or ever can."

"You see, there had been a meeting of the Tollivar clan. My folks and I had only lately come back into the mountains from Texas where my dad had gone to avoid killing a McAfee or getting killed by the McAfees. We had heard the feud had died down and now the clans were playing ball. So father returned. But there was a dispute, had feeling was rolled again, and just to satisfy the

CHAPTER XI

NOTHING like that game could ever happen again, Rossy McAfee well knew, when the last ball was pitched. He had wrought a no-hit no-run athletic miracle out of as unpromising material as one could hope to see.

Rossy walked through the early evening as one who walks with ghosts. Afterward there was just a handshake with Dr. Tollivar, a smile from Judy, a funny leer, part of admiration and teasing and part, from Hannah Shrider, and not even a glance in his direction from Steve Hogg, who had come to see the game.

"Let's go to my office," Coach Hurd nodded, after introducing Ike Hill. They took chairs in the room, pictured with athletic teams, and Hill smoked.

"So you're Rossy McAfee," Hill murmured. "I knew your father."

"You did?" Rossy cried.

"Mighty well. I scouted the game when he was killed."

"You did!"

"Absolutely. It was the first Hell'n-Damnation ball game I ever saw—and the last. You know how stories drift out—the wildest, craziest ball players that ever were; feuded even in their ball games; great pitchers, great hitters, great everything."

"Part of course was true, part just myth. You still find the same myths coming out of the hills now, only they're about writers and poets. Anybody who can cook up a tale of a corpse of a great pitcher coming to life long enough to pitch a no-hit no-run game and settle the feud and let the gal and boy from opposite clans wed, and then the corpse relaxes in his grave with a grant of satisfaction, can become a mountain novelist and critics go made about him."

"But you, bub, have the goods, and no doubt about that. I'm going to offer you a contract that will nail you down, make it possible for you to go on with your education and play ball, and give you time for ripening a little. You're still too green in the husk. Later you'll probably have to be farmed out to one of the bush leagues. But if you grow like I think you will, you'll be up there some of these day dazzling the little old natives in the big time."

"There's the dotted line," Coach Hurd grinned.

"Give me a pen," Rossy said faintly, and he signed with irregular letters that betrayed his joy and excitement.

THAT evening at supper at Dr. Tollivar's the table talk was all about the game, about Rossy's great break. Dr. Tollivar said simply:

"McAfee deserved it. He had it coming to him. Now, Judy, I wish you would wrap up a change for me, and not put in my old straight razor—but the electric. Rossy and I are going up into Hell'n-Damnation early in the morning for the weekend. You'll excuse me now," he smiled. "I have some work at the office before I can get off." He took his hat and went out.

Judy smiled at Rossy. "I'll pack later. Let's sit in the front room and talk about everything. For this is a great day for you, Rossy, I need not tell you that, though," she added, as they sat on the sofa.

She gave him a penetrating look. "Maybe I shouldn't tell you this, Rossy. But really I want you to know it. You have a lot to thank to Daddy for this day's gifts. He arranged for Ike Hill to come, was in touch with him weeks ago about you."

"Daddy has strained every possible point to make college available to you. He secured the scholarship, worked it out with Coach Hurd that you were to stay with us without cost, and from the day Coach Hurd saw you been

Austin Bureau of Associated Press Provides Latest News for Members

AUSTIN, June 15 (AP)—By day and night, seven days a week, a staff of three men—increased to five during sessions of the legislature—keeps The Midland Reporter-Telegram and other Associated Press newspapers in Texas and their readers aware of all news developments in the state capital.

Collecting and disseminating news from the "hottest" source of information in the state, the Associated Press staff follows the complete maze of governmental activity in detail. Not only the legislature, itself, but each state official and more than 100 boards, bureaus, commissions and departments.

When the legislature meets, of course, there is an infinite variety of news. There are regular sessions of from five to six months duration every two years, and special sessions when called by the Governor.

Outstanding legislative developments covered fairly, swiftly and accurately during the last session included the bitter, month-long fight over S. J. R. 12 (the proposed sales-natural resource tax constitution) and S. J. R. 12 (the proposed taxes and tax-reimissions, appropriations totaling $77,000,000, old-age pension liberalizations and legislation dealing with liquor and horse racing).

In addition to the actual news, there were the background as well as the repercussions to political developments to which experienced Associated Press staffers always give particular attention.

However, the legislature "out of session" state capital affairs flow on. Such events as Governor O'Daniel's inauguration provide brilliant episodes, but from day to day, week in and week out, the Associated Press Austin bureau keeps its typewriters clicking and its collective ear to the ground.

An enormous amount of news pours from the railroad commission because of its regulatory authority over the state's huge oil industry, railroads, commercial motor transportation and gas utilities.

Hearings of the highway commission, with subsequent lettings of multiple millions of dollars worth of road contracts demand constant attention. Public health programs, state police work, the attorney general's decisions, land auctions, reports of the comptroller and state auditor, the agriculture department—all contribute to keep the life of an AP Austin "staffer" from becoming dull.

Almost any week either the supreme court or the court of criminal appeals—the state's two highest tribunals—may render some far-reaching judgement. The former recently upheld the constitutionality of Texas' anti-trust laws; frequently the court of criminal appeals must act in the case of a condemned criminal to return life or reaffirm death.

Bulgars Hope And Stake All On Neutrality. BY HUGO SPECK United Press Staff Correspondent. SCOTIA (UP)—Bulgaria is without allies and without agreements or pacts which would bring aid in case of attack and is banking on absolute neutrality to keep out of war.

Job of Installing Huge Circuit Breaker Today Is Cause of Temporary Shut-Off of Electrical Current

This automatic oil circuit-breaker was put into service at the Midland electric power substation of the Texas Electric Service Company Sunday morning according to R. L. Miller, district manager. Electric service was cut off from 8 to 7 o'clock this morning to make the line changes at the Scharbauer Hotel where a 250-horsepower air conditioning unit is being installed. During the time the current was off, 22 Texas Electric Service Company workmen made a complete inspection of all lines and equipment throughout the city.

The new equipment was done during the past two weeks. Shown installing the power but delicate oil circuit-breaker which will handle 12,500-volt current automatically are, left to right, W. A. Shaw, John Nabors and E. L. Whatley of the company's construction department. The "tuning up" of these sensitive devices preparatory to putting them in service was done by Harry Stafford and R. M. Rhea.

The Midland substation now has two of these automatic oil circuit-breakers, which are so delicately adjusted that they connect the current or disconnect it in a fraction of a second, much faster than could be done by human hands.

These huge circuit-breakers are specially-designed switches that break the electrical contacts in highly refined, non-conductor oil to quench immediately the electrical arc that occurs when a contact is broken. Like all equipment of the power system, these circuit-breakers are inspected and tested frequently to keep them in first-class operating condition and the oil is drained and filtered at regular intervals and new oil added when needed.

This sub-committee will make a study of farms throughout the county where such designation is wanted, and will choose the one thought best as a location for the various phases of AAA work.

The various agencies of the AAA then will carry out the respective programs of erosion control, water improvement, terracing or what is decided upon. The farm will become a "model project," with the program to be continued over a long range period.

Dr. Tollivar. Tollivar looked at him now, met Rossy's eyes. "I said that it was not the bean ball I threw that killed your father, although it knocked him unconscious. It was a blow on his head with a bar of iron, just back of this grandstand, that cracked his skull and was the actual cause of death. That was what I said." "I heard ye," Rossy said, hoarsely. "But how you know that when you hulled out? Didn't you turn tail and run after you seen what you had done?" Dr. Tollivar opened and shut his hands. His face was tight with remembered shame. "Yes, I did. To my everlasting grief I ran. I plead in defense the fact that it was all I knew to do. "My branch of the Tollivars were cowards. I suppose — in a physical sense. We were never fighters, had no idea ever of becoming killers. My father left the mountains because of that. He loved peace, and for myself, I was a scholar. So my legs moved with a fear I couldn't control, and there would have been no point in my staying and getting killed, as surely would have followed if I had not escaped. "So I left the mountains for ever. I went to school, to college. I made a name for myself. Always I had in the back of my head a hunger to come back and do something big for my people. Educate them, lift them out of the ruck of feuding. "I knew that soon or late Lincoln College would need a new president. I fitted myself for the place, and when the opening came, I returned, went to work, and poured all my soul into making that a big school. I have labored in the north to get funds for scholarships. Every time a feud boy wanted to come to college he always got in. "I never admitted I was a Tollivar. What would have been the value of that? I kept my mouth shut, and labored to make available education for worthwhile people like you — like Hannah Shrider — or a thousand others. That was the way I saved my soul after killing your father. "But, Rossy, I did not 'bean' your father on purpose. It was just another of those times where one does a thing because he is so terribly afraid he will — and he then can't help it. You were close to it yesterday when we played Southern. "I know. "Now we have a couple of things to attend to, and afterward I hope we'll have a big square dance. I haven't enjoyed a big dance for years and years. Let's go back down to Leverage's." THEY were back at Jude Jesse's in 30 minutes. The room had been cleared and chairs placed. It was not long before men, Tollivars and McAfees, were gathering. To Rossy's amazement Hannah Shrider appeared, accompanying Judy Tollivar. Rossy's mother came on horseback. Steve Hogg came with his mother. Constable Sneed brought them. There was no appearance of handcuffs, or the heavy hand of the law. Soon the small room was packed and Judge Jesse was clearing his throat getting ready for one of his typical courts that were not officially courts, but mountain justice. The last to appear was Scout Ike Hill, with Coach Hurd. Leverage pounded the table for order in

CHARLIE AND HIS FRIENDS

(C. S. Lackey and His Friends) (In the Hospital—May, 1940)

True friends, in sickness and in health, Do constitute our greatest wealth. Convinced am I that this is true, When Charlie's friends I do review, Consoling letters, fragrant flowers, In person like refreshing showers, — Are tokens of a friendship true, Thus lavishly bestowed on few.

His fan mail came from all the earth, From those of high and lowly birth, Solicitude and high regard, Expressed in measure by the yard, From Florida to Frisco Bay, From San Antonio to New York gay, Across the State, from shore to shore, — I've never seen the like before.

His faithful friends in Dallas town, From business men to Cap and Gown, Expressed the deepest heart concern, If they, perchance, good news might learn, While Art and Eddie, Dot and Bailey, Have never failed to see him daily, Including Williams and Eloise, — To make a group his soul to please.

A charming, gentle-mannered man, With heart of gold, a wit, a fan, With loads of common sense to spare, A prince is he of friendship rare. No wonder 'tis he has such hold On all who know him, — they are sold; The charm he has for every one Will live and bless till time is done.

With a brother's love, court, and said: "Folks, we are gathered together to settle something what's been hanging fire for high generation, namely, to-wit, who killed Rossy McAfee's paw, and how come. Now, I allus have said to let sleeping dogs lie. But this pup wants wakening. Dr. Tollivar, will you stand. "Yes, sir, Judge." Dr. Tollivar said, and got up. "Was you the Tollivar boy what pitched that Fourth of July game when McAfee was beaned?" "Yes, sir, Judge, I was. But it was an accident. Not for the world would I have done it. I've tried to atone for it to Rossy McAfee. But I was the one." He sat down. Rossy, sitting between Judy and Hannah, felt Hannah nudge him viciously with her elbow. "And he more than done it, too, fool. Pity he wasn't your paw. You'd be riding a pacing hoss." "Shut up!" Rossy whispered. "Stand up, Ike Hill."
