Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Everett

Nuptials Read For La Bitha Robinson, Kenneth Everett

Miss Ta Bitha Monette Robinson and Kenneth Wayne Everett exchanged double ring wedding vows at 4 p.m. Sunday in the home of the bride's grandfather, J. W. Dalton, with the Rev. Don Boles, minister of the First Presbyterian Church, officiating at the ceremony.

Parents of the bride are Mrs. Jessie Robinson, and Pete Robinson, Muleshoe. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Everett, Muleshoe.

Note to new cooks; when you try your hand at rolled cookies and they are really fun to make — roll out only a little of the dough at one time so you can manage it! A small sheet of dough is much less likely to get warm and stick than is a large sheet.

Fill parfait glasses and store them in the freezer so they will be all ready for dessert for that company dinner. You might alternate vanilla ice cream and raspberry sherbet in them and top with a rosette of whipped cream.

SHOP MULESHOE FIRST

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a street length dress of white linen with white lace trim. She carried a bouquet of red and white stephanotis and carnations atop a prayer book.

Mrs. Robert Robinson, Lubbock, was matron of honor. She wore a green linen suit with matching accessories, complimented by a white carnation corsage.

The best man was Zoal Cody from Muleshoe. Mrs. Bobby Fender, Muleshoe, and Mrs. La Quinta Johnson, Odessa, cousin of the bride, provided wedding music. A reception was given in the Dalton home following the ceremony, with Mrs. Carolyn Spies, Littlefield, cousin of the bride, registering the guests.

Mrs. Everett is attending Isabell Powell Beauty School in Lubbock. Everett is a graduate of Three Way and is employed by E. R. Hart Co. They will make their home in Muleshoe.

Sprinkler Systems of Irrigation Gaining in Popularity Each Year

The use of sprinkler irrigation systems is increasing each year. They can do an efficient job provided they are designed properly and operated as designed. The manufacturers of sprinkler nozzles to fit various spacings. Each head and nozzle combination is recommended for a pressure where it will give a good distribution. Correct pressure at the nozzle is very important. Too low a pressure at the nozzle will result in a lower discharge and uneven water distribution. A higher pressure than the nozzle and head are designed for will add to pumping costs and increase evaporation under windy conditions. A pitot tube gauge is useful in checking pressures at the nozzles. Gauges left in the main line at all times soon corrode up and give inaccurate readings.

Irrigation water should be applied at the proper time and in the proper amount. To determine when to irrigate, the feel method can be used with good results. As a guide, irrigate when about one half of the available moisture has been used from the upper one-fourth of the root zone. On most soils, this will require an application of from five to six inches of water to fill the root zone back up to field capacity. By applying needed amounts of water at the proper time, the quality of crops can be improved and yields increased. Soil Conservation Service technicians assisting the local Soil Conservation District are available to assist you in making these determinations.

Don't Overgraze Pastures, Warns SCS Official

Native grasses are greening up. The leaves of a grass plant manufacture food for it to grow. Seems like when spring comes around and the pastures start greening up, everyone has a desire to put a few extra head of livestock on it. E. N. McCall, Secretary of the Soil Conservation Board says this is just opposite to what should be done. If the leaves of the grass plants are kept clipped off, the plant does not get a chance to produce a root system. The root system is called upon to furnish food when the leaves do not manufacture food for the grass plant.

Deferred grazing of the pasture will benefit the plant by establishing a root system, putting a good cover on the ground which reduces wind and water erosion, and also more water will be absorbed when cover is established. Deferment will make a vigorous plant out of a weak one.

The most important growing season in Bailey County for grasses is April, May, or June, or the spring growing season. Deferment should be done during these months for at least 90 days. Longer periods of deferment would be most beneficial.

McCall says that by deferring during spring growing season enables season grasses to produce seed and allows warm season grasses to produce seed and allows cool season grasses to become vigorous.

A simple test can establish deferring by putting a wire

Temporary Crops May Offer Aid To Area Ranches

Temporary grazing crops can supply a big part of the total forage consumed by livestock in the Blackwater Valley Soil Conservation District each year, according to Sherman Linn, Chairman.

He said a variety of hybrid sorghum, or sudan are excellent for temporary summer grazing. Usually both summer and winter temporary grazing crops of small grain are needed for a balanced livestock forage inventory.

Approximately 30 to 40 days after planting, the sorghums have made sufficient growth to start grazing. This added source of forage takes some of the grazing pressure off of the native grassland so the native grassland has been rested through most of the grazing season. As a result of the deferment, the range grasses have gained in plant vigor, made seed and a definite increase in sidecoats grama, and other native grasses have been noticed.

About half of the forage produced on the rangeland is being utilized in late fall and winter months. A protein supplement is available at all times and hay is fed when needed. Without this grass reserve on the rangeland, winter feeding would be much more expensive.

A District Co-operator in the Stegall Community utilizes his cropland to provide his livestock with both summer and winter temporary pasture crops. About 75 per cent of the total forage needed is supplied in this manner. Separate fields on the farm give excellent arrangement for rotating the grazing on both summer and winter temporary grazing crops. It also allows the producer to plant one field while the other is still providing grazing at the end of the growing season.

Ever add drained red kidney beans to a cheese sauce for Sunday night supper? If the cheese sauce is made with tomato, this combination will be especially good. Serve this rarebit over crisp buttered toast or steamed rice.

"YOUR GOOD NEIGHBOR SINCE 1914"

IRRIGATION TRIAL — Shown above is a field irrigation trial on the Billy Fields farm west of Muleshoe. This trial was to determine for producer by local SCS if even distribution was being obtained.

Even Distribution is Difficult Task in Irrigation of Crops

One of the most difficult problems in irrigation is getting good distribution of water over the field. Effects of poor distribution of water can mean the difference between a profit and a loss in farming operations. The objective in irrigation is to produce the maximum yields and highest quality with the least amount of water without causing erosion of the soil. Uneven distribution results in part of the crops not getting enough water while the rest of the crop receives enough water or part of the crop receiving an adequate amount of water while the rest of the field is receiving too much water; in either case, this results in lower production for the amount of water used.

Field crops reflect uneven distribution in various ways. Cotton will be uneven in its growth, have a different color varying from a dark green to light green, and vary widely in the age and the number of balls per stalk. The length of time water is applied as well as applying too much water will cause cotton to lead up at different times. Normally about twenty inches of irrigation water is required for cotton to make crop. With a good system, this would mean about thirty inches would have to be applied to get twenty inches in the soil for crop use. On numerous systems throughout the south plains area, where measurements were made as much as sixty inches of water was applied to produce one crop.

The cost of pumping irrigation water varies from $5.00 per acre foot up, depending on the depth from which the water is lifted and the fuel used. At $6.00 per foot acre foot for water pumped on hundred acres of cotton would have an additional cost of $1.50 for irrigation and no more cotton produced on cotton where production is limited by moisture, an increase in production can be expected by applying water in the proper amounts and at the proper time. An increase of one-fourth bale per acre for 100 acres would result in twenty-five additional bales of cotton. At thirty cents per pound and 500 pound bales, this would be an increase of $3,750. These figures do not take into account the possible increase in grade of cotton which might result from uniform maturity and improved harvesting conditions. Local Soil Conservation District, is available any your irrigation system with you. Feel free to call on us.
