

'The Wind'

West Texan's book, written in 1925, capable of creating stir

By KATHLEEN CARROLL
Associated Press Writer

West Texans occasionally complain about the periodic sandstorms that fill the air with blinding, choking dust, clogging the eyes and throat and leaving behind a fine grit coating.

But for many, the wind is a source of both pride and despair. After all, it takes a stout heart to live on the flat prairielands where gusts are clocked at up to 45 miles per hour. Not to mention sturdy legs.

And if they weren't a bit proud, why name football teams like the Floydada Whirlwinds, the Lamesa Golden Tornadoes, the Amarillo Golden Sandies, the Texline Tornadoes or Winters' Blizzard.

Still it's THEIR wind, and if they want to gripe, well, they've got to live with it.

But back in 1925, folks didn't take so kindly to a novel entitled, "The Wind." Written by a Texan transplanted to Chicago, Dorothy Scarborough, the book was first published anonymously. That was Miss Scarborough's idea. Growing up in Sweetwater, she must have known how her tale of a young girl driven to madness by the howling, incessant winds would be accepted.

"I have been accused of disliking West Texas, but that's a mistake. It's a great section and I love it," she wrote of her former home.

"The Wind" is the story of Letty, a young Virginia woman who moves to barren West Texas and marries a good-hearted, but definitely unromantic cowboy. In the poverty of her splintery shack there is no escape from the screaming, swirling winds. She begins to lose first her beauty, then her mind.

The novel was republished this spring by the University of Texas Press. Aside from a small waiting list at public libraries, the novel has caused hardly (you'll forgive the pun) a stir.

My, how times have changed. And so, add West Texans, have weather conditions.

"It can drive you bananas," declared Ray Christopher, a Brownfield cowboy and land dealer. "We went through the Dust Bowl days. They were something. They planted trees for windbreaks but they just caught the sand and piled it as high as the courthouses.

"The wind would blow and you'd put an old bandana handkerchief over your face like an old highway robber. At night, you'd wet a sheet and hang it over the head of the bed to make a wet tent, the air would be so thick with sand.

"The livestock would choke to death, smother to death. It would be where absolutely you could not see in front of you. You'd get out in it and you'd just keep going.

"You didn't (leave). You just survived. You survived because it was the way of life. But we don't have it like we used to. I'm pushing 70 years old and we just don't have it like we used to."

"Of course," Miss Scarborough penned in a profile of her 1929 life in Texas Monthly, "I realize as well as anybody else that West Texas is vastly improved now over what it was then, but it was of then that I elected to write."

The basic premise of the novel — the constant assault from the wind and sand and the realization there is no escape, not one moment of peace

Store closings mark 'end of era'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Downtown Midland is changing. And those changes go beyond the rising of skyscrapers and proliferation of offices and parking spaces.

A corner drug store, for example, is no more.

"It's the end of an era," said Anne Kirkland in the final hour of Kirkland Pharmacy.

"I'm not happy that I had to (close down)," said her pharmacist-husband, Joe Kirkland.

The Kirkland business and other stores are being shut down to provide parking lot spaces and as part of the building of the Midland Exhibit Hall.

The drug store will go the way of the old Scharbauer Hotel: down into rubble.

Across the street from the Kirkland outlet, The Midland Hilton replaced the Scharbauer. Asphalt and parking stripes are probable replacements for Kirkland Pharmacy.

"The whole town was down" for the falling of the Scharbauer, Mrs. Kirkland recalled.

The demise of Kirkland Pharmacy and adjoining businesses won't be as traumatic as was that of the sturdy, stately Scharbauer, which was built in the late 1920s while Midland was being transformed from a cattle town to an oil town. The hotel was torn down in October 1973.

"People really hated to see the old landmark, an old business establishment, destroyed," Kirkland said.

A THING CALLED progress dictated the fall.

The same thing goes for Kirkland Pharmacy and its snack shop; the Paper Clip, office supply store; Houck's Jewelry Store; The Readers World bookstore-newsstand, and Lones Travel Agency.

"It's sad," said Irmalee Ingrham, who frequented the drug store for years. "Progress is not always better. But my opinion doesn't always matter. I'll sure miss it (the drug store)."

After he has cleared his books, Kirkland will be mixing drugs and filling prescriptions for someone else. So, too, will pharmacist J.C. Lawrence, who for years worked for Kirkland.

"It's amazing to me how many friends you make over the years," said Kirkland, who took over the drug store in 1959. "You're not fully aware...."

Aquilla Watson, who operated the drug store's snack bar, said she will miss not being her own boss.

"I always worked for somebody else," she said last week as she was cleaning up for last time.

"I never had the opportunity before to work for myself. You work twice as hard working for yourself as you do working for somebody else."

"We didn't try to get rich," Mrs. Watson said. "We just tried to stay ahead — keep from going broke."

But she seemed confident and resilient about getting into another business. The monogrammed T-shirt she was wearing seemed to give her a boost: "Never underestimate the power of a woman."

ON THE SAME CORNER with the drug store is The Paper Cmp, owned and managed by Betty Jones.

Unlike Kirkland, she'll stay put until Dec. 31, when the building must be vacated, or until she finds another place to lease.

"I'd love to stay (downtown)," Mrs. Jones said, "but the prices (of leasing) are astronomical."

She was leasing 5,000 square feet of floor space for $1,500 a month from Mrs. Fred (Edith) Wemple. But retail rent anyplace else downtown is several times that. And cost of buying property and constructing a building is prohibitive, she said.

"We can't afford that," she said. "This business doesn't make that much money."

But Mrs. Jones said she is reasonably sure she'll find another location.

"Oh, we'll find another place," she said. "My friends are constantly calling me, and my customers, too."

On the southside of the corner and

Novel session of Legislature to end tonight

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The 66th Legislature's regular session, accused of serving special interests and made livelier by the "Killer Bee" saga and the novelty of a Republican governor, comes to an end tonight.

No matter how much unfinished business it has, the session must end at midnight. The Texas Constitution says so.

A pile of major bills awaited final action in each chamber, including a $20.2 billion 1980-81 state budget, a $1.2 billion school finance bill that raises teachers' pay 5.1 percent and legislation carrying out the 1978 Tax Relief Amendment.

The House argued for more than an hour Sunday night about the proposed compromise on tax relief but put off a final decision until today.

Meanwhile, efforts by Gov. Bill Clements for a constitutional amendment giving Texas governors more "budget execution" got a new breath of life Sunday. Earlier, it appeared doomed when Sen. Gene Jones, D-Houston, a Killer Bee, blocked a committee hearing.

Jones relented Sunday, saying he owed Clements a "silver bullet," and withdrew his objections. The committee met and quickly cleared the measure for Senate debate today — if enough senators want to discuss it.

Clements put on a big push for the budget management proposal and succeeded in the House, which only Friday sank his wiretapping and initiative and referendum proposals.

The measure would give the governor limited power to shuffle money among agencies to meet unforeseen needs and block expenditures he deemed needless or excessive.

Defeat of Clements' initiative and referendum proposal means adjournment of the regular session won't end the 66th Legislature's labors.

Clements, first Republican governor in over a century, told the largely Democratic lawmakers to count on a special session if they rejected initiative and referendum.

Clements refused Sunday to say when he would call a special session, hinting it might be in the midst of 1980. Most state legislators will be running for re-election, plus the presidential campaign where Clements has sworn he will fight to swing Texas against President Carter. He also denied such a session would be limited to initiative and referendum, mentioning wiretapping as a good second issue.

Speaker Bill Clayton says he believes the session has taken a bad rap for serving special interests and neglecting those of consumers and the public in general.

Some of the session's loudest quarrels were over raising home loan interest rates, changing the Deceptive Trade Practices Act, stripping cities of the right to regulate electric rates and allowing auto dealers to charge "documentary fees."

Clayton said he was satisfied, however, that home buyers — not lenders — were best served by raising interest rates and asserted that even some consumerists thought the Deceptive Trade Practices Act needed trimming back.

FAA announces grounding of DC-10s for inspection

WASHINGTON (AP) — All DC-10 jetliners operated by U.S. airlines will be grounded at 3 a.m. EDT Tuesday for inspection of engine bolts such as the one involved in the nation's worst air disaster, Federal Aviation Administration chief Langhorne Bond announced today.

Bond acted three days after an engine fell from the wing of an American Airlines DC-10 as the jumbo jet took off from O'Hare International Airport in Chicago. All 271 persons aboard the Los Angeles-bound plane and two persons on the ground were killed Friday when the airliner flipped, crashed and burned.

Bond also urged all foreign airlines operating DC-10s "to follow our urgent advice" and conduct similar inspections.

The plane's manufacturer, McDonnell-Douglas Corp., said approximately 279 DC-10s currently are in use by 41 airlines worldwide. The delay until early Tuesday morning will help minimize disruption to Memorial Day holiday travelers, but Bond said schedules played no factor in the decision.

"As a practical matter, we didn't think word could get out...before that time," the FAA administrator told a news conference. He also said "the risk appears sufficiently small" that a similar incident could occur before Tuesday morning.

The inspection ordered by the FAA requires mechanics to remove the bolt attaching the DC-10s wing engines and either replace the bolt or test it for possible cracks. The procedure takes several hours.

Bond said aircraft can operate without the inspection through today, but that most airlines operating the DC-10 have already begun inspecting them without waiting to be ordered to do so.

Only those aircraft that have not been inspected already will be affected by the grounding order, he said.

McDonnell-Douglas and the National Transportation Safety Board had urged the inspections on Sunday.

Elwood Driver, vice chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said Sunday the board voted unanimously to recommend that engine-support systems on all DC-10s be inspected immediately.

Asked if an engine on another DC-10 would fall off if there were a similar bolt break, Driver said, "Under the same circumstances, you could expect the same results."

Driver said today that investigators' next step would be "to find out why the plane crashed."

"What we have found out so far is perhaps why the engine came off. The fact that the engine came off does not necessarily mean that that's the reason the aircraft crashed," he said in a televised interview on NBC's "Today."

"The two are not necessarily congruent or the same," Driver added. An order grounding the planes likely would create problems for air travelers completing their Memorial Day weekends.

Requests for reservations for air travel were reported normal in Chicago on Sunday, although a TWA spokesman said some persons were asking what type of aircraft would be used. TWA does not use DC-10s.

There are currently about 275 DC-10s in use by 41 airlines, said a spokesman for McDonnell-Douglas, manufacturer of the aircraft.

Rav Towne, a spokesman for McDonnell-Douglas, said on Sunday in Long Beach, Calif., that the company had asked airlines to inspect their DC-10s.

"We are recommending this inspection be accomplished on all DC-10s within 50 flight hours or 7 days... whichever comes first," he said.

Two British airlines with DC-10s — British Caledonian and Laker Airways — began urgent inspections of their aircraft today, spokesmen for the airlines said.

McDonnell-Douglas are getting in touch with airlines on details of the checks, but we decided to go ahead immediately," said the spokesman for British Caledonian, which has three DC-10s flying between London and South America and Africa. Laker has six DC-10s, some of which fly the Skytrain route between London and New York and Los Angeles.

American Airlines mechanics inspected the engine-support systems on 26 of the 30 DC-10s in its fleet over the weekend, said airline spokesman Art Jackson. "Throughout these inspections no faulty bolts have been found. But as an extra precaution we have replaced all the bolts." He said the other four DC-10s would have their bolts changed before they were flown again.

United Airlines, which began resuming operations today after a 58-day strike, said it was making the same inspections on its 38 DC-10s.

The inspection calls followed the recovery Sunday of the 3-inch-long bolt, part of the load-bearing assembly that held an engine to the wing of the plane.

Discovery of 'broken bolt' does not explain crash

CHICAGO (AP)—The broken three-inch bolt that caused the left engine to drop off an American Airlines DC-10 seconds before the aircraft nose-dived in a fiery crash was part of a complex load-bearing assembly holding the engine to the wing, officials say.

However, the discovery Sunday of the bolt in the grass along the 10,600-foot runway did not explain why the jet veered off course and cartwheeled into its fatal plunge, killing all 271 persons aboard and two on the ground, authorities said.

"The loss of that engine should not normally have caused that crash," said Elwood Driver, National Transportation Safety Board vice chairman. "That is why our investigation is continuing."

Driver said the bolt, which was found in a grassy area 8,000 feet from the point where the DC-10 began its takeoff run, had been partially cracked as a result of "fatigue" prior to the crash.

"The bolt we found had failed," Driver said. "It had been coming apart for some time."

But he said it was possible the bolt could have snapped when the jet landed at O'Hare International Airport from Phoenix several hours earlier. The break could have gone unnoticed because other bolts would have supported the engine's weight.

Art Jackson, a spokesman for American Airlines, said a dozen of the company's 30 DC-10s have been inspected for similar bolt malfunctions and no evidence of cracking was detected.

Larry Strain, another American spokesman, said the engine was attached to a pylon that in turn was bolted to the wing spar, which is the main support of a wing and runs its entire length.

The pylon, whose shape Strain likened to an upside-down canoe, is bolted to the underside of the wing. It extends forward from the wing with the engine attached to its base.

The defective bolt, known as a thrust-link bolt, was one of the primary fittings holding the wing to the pylon, and was critical only in bearing the forward and reverse thrusts required of the turbofan engine on takeoff and landing, Strain said.

The pylon itself is held in place by a cylindrical bushing, which in turn is kept in place by the steel bolt.

Strain emphasized that the thrust link bolt does not support the entire load of the pylon and engine and that other bushings and bolts hold the engine pylon to the wing.

Douglas Dreifus, an NTSB investigator, said the bushing actually had two fittings, one of which was connected to the spar — believed to be intact when the plane plummeted to the ground — and the lower bolt which was fitted into the pylon. It was the lower bolt which broke.

Once the bolt snapped loose, Strain said, the only other major support bolt holding the pylon to the wing was the pylon aft attachment near the top back portion of the pylon.

Federal investigators, top, examine the engine that fell from American Airlines flight 191 that crashed in flames at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport Friday, while Elwood Driver, left, the vice chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, holds the three-inch thrust link attach bolt that fractured, causing the engine to fall off and causing the crash of the DC-10. The bolt was found 8,000 feet down the runway from where flight 191 took off. (AP Laserphotos)

Crash has had no effect on air reservations

CHICAGO (AP)—People are making reservations for air travel, spokesmen for four major airlines say, but some want to know what type of plane they'll be aboard following the crash of a DC-10 that killed 273 persons.

The volume of telephone reservations at American, TWA, Eastern and Delta airlines in Chicago was normal for a holiday weekend, spokesmen said Sunday — two days after the fatal crash of an American Airlines jet at O'Hare International Airport.

The crash has not deterred people from making reservations on future American flights, said spokeswoman Mary Rose Noel.

"I think people are pretty sophisticated now to realize that something like this was probably once in a million years. Reservations have not fallen off," she said.

"It's been a little quiet for the weekend," said TWA spokesman David Murphy. "Maybe with people being away right now it's quieted off..."

Murphy added, "We've had one or two inquiries about the plane and a number of people asking about the type of equipment their flight" will use.

TWA, Eastern and Delta Air Lines fly Lockheed L-1011s, not DC-10s, officials said.

"We just opted for those planes. It's like one person will buy a Ford and another will buy a Chevy," said Eastern spokesman Robert T. Raynesford. "They are similar to the DC-10s. To the layman's eye they probably look like the same plane. But they are built by different companies and have different engines."

The crash, said Raynesford, had had "no effect at all (on Eastern's reservations) that we could detect... One of the things you'd be looking for is a rash of cancellations and we're not experiencing that at all."

Delta spokesman Darrell Hatton said that when the airline bought the L-1011s six to seven years ago, they were $250,000 to $500,000 cheaper than the DC-10s.

Hatton said Delta's reservation calls "were running just about what we would expect on a holiday weekend."

A spokesman for United, which is scheduled to resume flights today after a lengthy machinists' strike, refused to comment on the number of reservations calls.

King Carlos reviews parade

MADRID, Spain (AP)—King Juan Carlos reviewed the only Armed Forces Day parade held in Spain after the government cancelled other observances because of terrorist violence in which 16 persons were killed in two days.

The terrorists kept quiet Sunday as the king rode in an open car through the streets of Seville, in southern Spain, and then stood for more than 85 minutes as 12,000 troops and police marched past the royal box. Queen Sofia and their three children sat at his left.

His name was on the list, but he's still very much alive

PASADENA, Calif. (AP)—Warren Lollich has been busy on the telephone, telling friends he is still alive, even though his name was on a list of persons killed when an American Airlines DC-10 crashed in Chicago.

"But I never made the trip at all," said Lollich, 50, of Pasadena, an account executive for the advertising firm of Young & Rubicam Inc. He had a ticket for the flight, but gave it to Jack Edward Reich, 53, a friend and co-worker.

Friday's crash killed 273 persons in the worst aviation disaster in U.S. history.

"I had planned to be in Chicago but, late in the week, we changed our plans," Lollich said. "Ed went instead of me. But because of the tight reservations for the Memorial Day weekend, we left the ticket in my name."

"I knew Ed Reich for 20 years. He had a wife and four children. I visited them last night," Lollich said Saturday, weary from "handling telephone calls all day long."

Lollich said the bereaved family "accepted the roll of the dice" upon learning that fate had exchanged his life for that of Reich's.

La Nor Lollich, 51, said she and her husband were "aghast, agape, amazed and very fortunate, but very humbled, too" by the quirk of luck that spared his life.

Reich had taken Lollich's place at a national meeting in Chicago for franchisers of International House of Pancakes, a Young & Rubicam client, he said.

It was the second bizarre incident involving an airliner for Lollich.

In 1965, he said, he was aboard a United Airlines jet hijacked from Los Angeles to Cuba.

Columnists try shufflin' along in New Orleans

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
Ap Special Correspondent

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The National Society of Columnists met here this past week in this City That Care Forgot in the same hotel as the American Gas Distributors Association.

This may strike some people as a duplication of effort or double jeopardy or something, but it was not difficult to tell the two seminars apart.

The gas peddlers were the ebullient effervescent folk howling up the corridors with paper cups in their hands and wearing T-shirts that said "Belly Buttons Need Lovin' Too," while the columnists mooned about the lobby in comatose camaraderie wondering where their next idea was coming from.

They did perk up a bit when some unknown benefactor crashed their wake with a 50-pound box of freshly boiled Louisiana crawdads on his shoulder. It's difficult to remain down in the mouth for long while unzipping the roseate spines of these succulent crustaceans and dispatching them gulletwards with a heady elixir called Dixie Beer, which is brewed with a built-in crying towel.

Hearts were also lifted when fellow scrivener Lewis Grizzard of the Atlanta Constitution revealed how he launched a contest for his readers to find the perfect beer joint in his circulation area, which not only got them to write several columns for him but allowed him to field test the nominations on the expense account.

The prerequisites for the perfect beer joint, as best I can recall them, specified that the juke box had to play only real country and western songs — dirges like "I Gave Her the Ring, She Gave Me the Finger," "Don't Cry on My Shoulder, Your Tears are Rusting My Spurs" — the place had to have a bartender named "Hoss," no fancy beers like Pauli Girl or Heinekens, an old Miller's High Life sign over the bar that bubbled up neon globs in psychedelic, mind-bending spasms and a select female clientele with names like Billy Sue Marie and Barbara Jean May and no Shanans, Danas or Lanans.

Grizzard was the envy of his colleagues, having recently been syndicated, which means that editors on other papers besides his home base (known in the trade as his flagship) will have the right to tenderize, pulverize, vulgarize and emasculate his copy regularly.

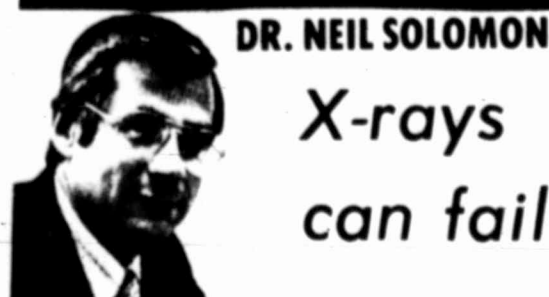

During one of the business sessions, Seymour Rosenberg, the resident pundit in Spartanburg, S.C., sought the advice of his brother and sister scribblers as to whether his devoted Baptist readership would tolerate a yarn he heard about a Jewish importer who wanted to open up a speciality food store in a shopping mall under the sign of "Cheeses of Nazareth."

He was told that considering the gas shortage and prices at the pump, getting ridden out of town on a rail wasn't such a demeaning thing anymore.

This reminded another of the essayists Jim Dent of the Charleston (W Va.) Gazette, that the rabbi in his town had hung up a sign outside the synagogue: "No Parking, Violators Will be Circumscribed."

Somewhere during this congress of wordsmiths the first steamboat race in 100 years on the Mississippi River got under way from the docks along Poydras Street between the Delta Queen and the Mississippi River Queen.

Occasional boat races may have been held at the Fair Grounds race track in the intervening years, of course, and this one seemed to have that sort of aroma about it, since both paddlewhellers were owned by the same company. Not only that but the judges for the first leg of the race, up river to Audubon Park in the direction of Baton Rouge, were three New Orleans newspapermen: George Healy, Peter Binney and Bob Roesler. They took up their positions along the polished mahogany bar of the Mississippi River Queen, the larger of the two boats, and some people wondered how you could judge a boat race while riding on one of the boats, especially since the bar didn't even face the port holes and the mirrors were occluded.

X-rays can fail

Dear Dr. Solomon: A very close friend of mine recently died of lung cancer. Since he was a two-pack-a-day smoker, I suppose the result should not have been expected. But since he went for checkups every year, including chest x-rays, I can't understand why the doctor didn't learn of the cancer until it was too late. —Mr. W.W.

Dear Mr. W.: A chest x-ray will detect lung cancer about two-thirds of the time; the other one-third, however, are missed. By the time the cancer is detected in those cases, valuable treatment time has been lost.

The best method now available for detecting lung cancer is full-lung tomography performed by new body-scanning machines. A full-lung tomogram will show lung cancer about 95 percent of the time. With this high a rate of detection, it is advisable that the procedure be used with any patient for whom surgery is being recommended.

Dr. William F. Sindelar and his colleagues from the National Institutes of Health compared the reliability of chest x-rays with full-lung tomography in 415 cancer patients. Routine chest x-rays showed lung cancer in about two-thirds of the patients with the disease.

In the same patients, however, full-lung tomography showed cancer in almost 95 percent. The result was that the treatment that had been recommended for 35 of the 415 patients was changed, permitting some of them to avoid surgery.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I visited my nephew recently when he was a patient in the pediatric accident ward of a local hospital. I was surprised at how uncomfortably warm the entire area was. Isn't it unhealthy for children to be kept too warm? —Mrs. C.C.

Dear Mrs. C.: Pediatric trauma centers—operating rooms, intensive care units, and so forth—generally are kept at a constant warm temperature because rapid loss of body heat is a problem with children who have suffered severe injuries. In addition, warming lights and warming blankets frequently are employed.

A child's body surface is relatively large compared with its weight, and children therefore are subject to rapid loss of body heat. The problem is intensified if large quantities of refrigerated blood are used for transfusions. The rapid loss of body heat, in turn, can result in an irregular heart rhythm, and may cause

Fouled lab dish sparks probe

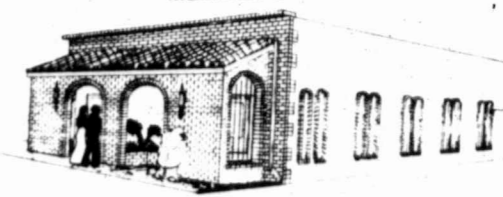

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — An evacuation ordered after scientists found an apparently radioactive frog and a deformed lizard near a site of 1960s atomic weapons tests was accidentally triggered by a fouled laboratory dish, a University of Mississippi spokesman says. However, authorities said tests would continue at the 1,400-acre test site about 25 miles south of Hattiesburg because there is evidence of low-level radiation contamination. Gov. Cliff Finch asked a dozen families living near the Tatum Salt Dome to evacuate their homes within 1 1/2 miles of the test site on Friday following reports of the scientific findings.

Plane crashes, burns in Utah

MOAB, Utah (AP) — One of two light planes from Colorado on a holiday excursion together crashed and burned, killing three persons, as two friends in the other plane watched from the ground, authorities said. Grand County Sheriff Jim Nyland said the single-engine Cherokee from Colorado Springs, Colo., crashed about 12:30 p.m. Sunday after the other single-engine plane experienced engine trouble and landed successfully on a dirt road 30 miles east of here.

The Alamo YMCA will have a Summer Co-ed Volleyball League, with matches played at the Alamo "Y" on Wednesday nights between 7 and 10 p.m., starting June 6 through July 18.

Guy Fish, director of health and physical education at Alamo, explained that this will be an adult league and that "Y" members may sign up for the league as a team of 7 to 12 or they can come in as an individual and be assigned to a team. All players should be registered by June 4, said Fish.

Fish also said that this league will be playing skill level ball, using international type rules. However, this league will not allow power spikes, but will concentrate more on good technique and placement of spikes, he added.

Anyone interested in playing should go to the Alamo "Y" or call 694-2528.

THIRTEEN GRADUATING SENIORS at the First Christian Church Sunday were honored at the morning worship as a traditional part in the life of the church.

The 1979 seniors are Tyler Alcorn, Mark Denny, Lisa Evers, Davis Friday, Beth Hammond, Lynn Harris, Dan Killins, Rock Kimball, Brenda Manauagh, Clay Midkiff, Robert Montgomery, Susan Trobaugh and Kathryn Weidenbach.

The activities began with a continental breakfast served the seniors in the church parlor.

This year, under the guidance of Mrs. Twana Evers, the Oxford Study Edition of the New English Bible with Apocrypha was chosen as a gift to each senior.

PHILLIP AND STEVE HARLEY, graduating seniors from Lee High School, were entertained recently with a dinner party given by Mr. and Mrs. Billy Don Green and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Sullivan in the Green home at 2809 Maxwell St.

Phillip and Steve plan to attend Midland College in the fall. They were presented a hostess gift.

STEPHEN DEHLINGER, honoree at a swimming and hamburger party, recently, is a graduating senior at Lee High School who plans to attend Midland College.

The party was given by Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Martin of 1404 Country Club Drive and Mrs. James Harvick, uncle and aunt of Stephen.

Stephen is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Dehlinger of 2302 Culpeper St. Twenty-five guests attended.

PENNY DELONG, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gene DeLong, was honored with a banana split party in the home of Jeanne and Julie Miller, hostesses.

Penny is a graduating senior at Midland High School and plans to attend Midland College in the fall.

Shower fetes

Tracye Trimble

A miscellaneous bridal shower honoring Tracye Trimble, bride-elect of Michael Vaughan, was held in the home of Mrs. Charles Richardson of 4312 Monty Drive.

The home was decorated with spring flowers, with the bride's table centered with a spring arrangement.

Hostesses were Mrs. Charles Richardson, Mrs. Dale Rittenhouse, Mrs. Jim Holman, Mrs. Ray Fraser, Mrs. Paul Long, Mrs. Carroll Nall, Mrs. Mike Bell, Mrs. Jimmy Walker, Mrs. Terry Claiborne, Mrs. Herman Gunter, Mrs. Jack Francis and Mrs. Kenneth Marks.

Honored guests were Miss Trimble's mother, Mrs. Bobby J. Trimble, her sister, Sherry Trimble, and the prospective bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Arlen A. Vaughn, the honoree's grandmother, Mrs. L.B. Hambricht, and Vaughn's grandmother, Mrs. E.E. Vaughn.

Don Jones, right, and Don Evans, sitting, have been named chairman and co-chairman, respectively, of the Beekeepers Ball, slated Oct. 12. Ferrell Davis, left, will be chairman of food and drink. The proceeds of the ball, sponsored by the Children's Service League, will go to the Cerebral Palsy Center. (Staff Photo)

DEAR ABBY

Son smirches Mother's Day

DEAR ABBY: How does a mother thank her 23-year-old son for a most inappropriate Mother's Day gift? He sent me a T-shirt with a very vulgar message printed across the front. (It did have the word "Mother" in it, but it's so obscene I can't write it and, if I could, you couldn't print it.) I can't understand a gift like this. I've never worn a T-shirt in my life.

My son is married and lives in another state. At first I thought maybe his wife picked it out because she has a coarse and somewhat twisted sense of humor. However, my son's signature was on the card that came with it, so apparently he knew what was being sent.

What should I do? — WONDERING IN N. J.

DEAR WONDERING: Thank your son for remembering you on Mother's Day. And the next time you see him, ask him who selected that gift.

DEAR ABBY: I would appreciate your help about a matter that has puzzled me for years.

When ordering flowers for a funeral, what kind of message should be written on the card? Most important of all, to whom should the message be addressed? For example, "Rest in Peace, Mary," or "Sweet Dreams, John"?

Or should the flowers be sent to the nearest of kin? If that's the proper way, have you any ideas about what to put on the card?

For years I have kept my ignorance about this to myself, but recently I learned that there are many among my acquaintances who are as ignorant as I, so you'd be helping a lot of people by printing your answer. Thank you. — WANTS TO KNOW

DEAR WANTS: Flowers should be addressed to the family of the deceased. An appropriate message would be, "With loving thoughts," or, "My heartfelt condolences." Or simply, "With love," followed by the signature of the sender.

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Many delays can be in effect now in putting across your views. You need to spend more time and thought on important matters before they can be finished. Good for working out family problems.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) You have to give your home more time and attention if you want it to operate more ideally now. Show that you are a patient person. Entertain friends at home.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Get your books in order and don't mail out any letters unless you go over them carefully for possible errors. You have to be particularly careful in travel.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Study how to cut down on expenses and build a reserve quickly. Forget that adviser who is not up to par and could give you the wrong advice. Get needed information on your own.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) You are unable to make progress as you wish, so use the time to clear up work left standing for some time. Improve your appearance and make a nice impression on others.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) You feel limited now but if you keep at the work ahead of you you still accomplish a good deal. Don't rely on a trusted adviser who is too busy now and could steer you wrong.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Friends could be disappointing now so avoid them for the time being. A delayed wish becomes more enjoyable when finally reached.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Don't take any risks where your reputation is concerned. Be patient if you meet with delays where personal wishes and desires are your aims. They may not be good for you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You are too busy to get out to new outlets, so be content to study into them more. You may argue with a new contact early in the day, but can reconcile in the evening. Make no mistake in money matters.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Try to cut down on expenses and interests so that you need not drive yourself so much. Wait until late in the day to have a talk with a co-worker and get good results.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Relegate talks with associates to the latter part of the day for best results. You have made plans that need revision now. Take no risks while out driving or walking.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Take it easy with co-workers since they are apt to be in a rebellious mood today. Take good care of your health and improve it via right treatments. Poise is the keynote now.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Make sure you maintain control whether in business or home matters. Don't plan recreations as yet, since there are bound to be delays.

Lioness Club elects officers

The Lioness 700 Club, auxiliary of the West Side Lions Club, met Monday in the home of Mrs. J. E. Barrington. Mrs. Marshall Whitmire, president, presided at the business session.

Officers for the 1979-80 year were elected, including Mrs. Carl Pirkle, president; Mrs. Bill Drummond, vice president; Mrs. Bentley Anderson, secretary-treasurer; and Mrs. L. R. Shannon, reporter-newsletter.

Officers will be installed along with the West Side Lions Club officers at a Ladies Night meeting in June.

The program was presented by Mrs. Tom Nipp on "Paper Towel Pictures."

THE FAMILY COUNSELOR

Mediator role causes problem

By the Staff of Family Services of Midland

Q. While I have a family of my own, I always get called upon by my sister (who still lives at home) to mediate problems between her and Mom. Why can't they handle problems without me? My husband is totally fed up and I don't know how much longer this can go on.

A. What is it that you feel might happen if you didn't respond? How dangerous is it really to not jump in? Perhaps the more people involved, the more complicated quarrels become. You are already aware that this is causing a stir in your marriage. Your involvement of time, energy, and emotion takes from your husband and children. If you are creating difficulties for yourself in your household, what is behind it? Are you fighting your husband on an unrelated matter or simply unable to extricate yourself from your own family.

Your sense of responsibility for your family can come from the role you play as helper, whether or not you are the oldest child. In some cases, this actually results in weakening the authority of your parents with their children.

They might be brought to a family counselor, where they could get help without forcing you to side up with one or the other. When we see families keeping grown members involved in their struggles, we know there is a reason. It definitely means that the family boundaries are not clear between people. Your having changed from a family member to a grown and separated person has not been accepted yet. It may be that you will need to draw a line to start emphasizing that you are different now. Perhaps later, your sister and mother could see each other and accept each other's differences better. The unique problems your Mom and Dad had running their family may be due to their inability to get together, help one another, etc. Your mother may take out her anger at your father on your sister and your sister serves as a "marriage saver" for them. You can't "raise your own parents," however. Your frustrations over realizing this may be accompanied with discomfort when you need to tell them that you don't want to mediate. But sometimes, we get angry at having expectations put on our shoulders we don't want. Therefore, if you want to continue to enjoy your relationship with your family, it is time to decide for yourself, what part you will play, rather than resent the part you are given.

4-H seniors

feted at party

Cotton Flat 4-H Club recently honored three Midland High School seniors with a graduation party.

Honored were Rainy Calhoun, Scott Locklar and Pam McCain.

Miss Calhoun is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rayford Calhoun, Locklar is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Locklar and Miss McCain is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom McCain. All are members of the Cotton Flat 4-H Club.

Approximately 20 people attended, including the honorees parents. Refreshments of cake and punch were served.

In a business session, club members signed for upcoming crafts and clothing projects.

South ruffed the third diamond with the ten of spades, and West gleefully overruffed with the jack.

"Never send a boy to do a man's job," West advised. He should have sought advice instead of offering it.

CLEAR UP TRUMPS

South won the heart return and led the queen of spades for a finesse clearing up the trumps without further loss. There was no other problem, and South made his contract.

West could defeat the contract by declining to overruff at the third trick. West should discard whether South plays the queen, ten or nine of spades. West can then make sure of two trump tricks by covering South's next trump trick as cheaply as possible.

West's eight of spades is the key card that enables him to defeat the contract — with a bit of restraint.

Chariot racing coming back

POCATELLO, Idaho (AP) — The Bannock County Fair ground isn't the Roman Coliseum, and Ron Carter isn't Ben-Hur.

But Carter and about 7,500 others who jammed the Pocatello racetrack for the world chariot championships share the same enthusiasm that historians say packed the arena in Rome.

The sport's changed some since the old days. Modern charioteers run a two-horse team, usually quarter-horses, down a 140-yard dirt straightaway. The chariots resemble — and in some cases are — sawed-off 50-gallon oil drums attached to a pair of motorcycle wheels.

Racers now compete for trophies and horse blankets instead of olive garlands. And a disqualification means being bumped a notch in the standings, not being sent back in chains to a galley.

Darryl Harris, historian of the World Championship Chariot Racing Association, said the sport was pretty much limited to the Intermountain West, with most racers coming from southern Idaho, northern Utah, Nevada and Wyoming.

Modern chariot racing began in Wyoming in the 1930s, Harris said.

Ranchers would come to town in the wintertime and sit around the pot belly stove and talk horses, he said. That led to them challenging each other and they started using bibbles.

Races between bibles gradually evolved into races between wheeled chariots, and sled or "cutter" races are rare today. The WCCRA was formed in the mid-1960s. It now has 29 member associations and has run world championships since 1965.

Member associations must run at least nine races a year during the November through March season, and each organization sends its top four teams to the world championships. Some 112 teams were fielded at the 1979 world meet held recently in Pocatello.

Harris said the sport "is essentially a quarter-mile drag race for horses. Teams line up in a starting gate, then barrel down the track in times often under 23 seconds.

There's no tote board, tip sheets or $2 windows. Instead, spectators many clad in cowboy hats and boots, drink beer and talk horses. As teams parade to the post, the announcer describes each horse by bloodline and American Quarter Horse Association ratings.

Carter, the Utah state champion who drives a rig called Generator Exchange and Galco Construction, said most owners were amateurs who were nuts about quarter horses. The horses he said are gentle, smart and love to run.

"You don't have to push them or use funny mechanisms to make them run," he said. "They run just out of desire."

Carter, who runs Generator Exchange in Salt Lake City, said it had cost him about $11,500 for his team, which pulls a custom-built chariot valued at $1,500. However, he said some teams were worth up to $50,000, especially if the horses were raced singly at summer-time meets.

For his efforts at the world championships,

Jewish Tovah stars as Brazilian dancer

NEW YORK (AP) — She's been a little boy, a Czech freedom fighter, Katharine Hepburn and a "hot, sensual, shimmering Brazilian Catholic."

She's received two best actress nominations on Broadway, sings and dances up a storm in her latest show, and hopes "it's only the beginning."

Tovah Feldshuh's name — "Tovah" means "good" in Hebrew — is growing more and more familiar on television and on Broadway.

In fact, her name landed her one of her first big parts. Five years ago she auditioned for the role of a Jewish girl in a Broadway play "Dreyfuss in Rehearsal." When they were casting for the part of a girl called "Miriam Polodnik," one of the producers went down the list of hopefuls, spotted "Tovah Feldshuh" and said: "With a name like that, she's just got to be right."

Tovah Feldshuh was right, but the play didn't last very long. She became very close with the star, veteran actress Ruth Gordon, who later was matron of honor at Miss Feldshuh's wedding to attorney Andrew Levy.

Right now, Tovah Feldshuh is almost ecstatic with her starring role in "Sarava," a lavish musical based on the Brazilian film "Dona Flor and Her Two Husbands." More precisely, she is ecstatic about the show itself, which has managed to survive on Broadway longer than expected despite a lack of great critical acclaim.

"The audiences love 'Sarava' and keep coming to see it (it's the show in which she portrays the sensuous Brazilian woman). I suppose the critics felt it was, well, too much like Tchaikovsky and not enough like Stravinsky. 'Sarava' belongs to the public and it is my privilege to do it or them."

She takes great pride in "Sarava," for which she won a Tony nomination as best actress in a musical, but keeps a special place in her heart for the television miniseries "Holocaust," in which she played the part of Helena, the Czech freedom fighter. So special, in fact, that she takes time to travel around the country for lectures about the series, which caused such a stir

Musica Sacra plans to gamble with 'Basically Bach' Festival

NEW YORK (AP) — Rock and Bach have more in common than a rhyme, says Richard Westenburg, who hopes the same people who head for summer rock festivals will bite on a Bach festival.

"I grew up with big bands. It was richly textured, big stuff, so people who enjoyed serious music gravitated to big orchestral music," he says.

"Rock has more to do with baroque than Glen Miller had to do with Mendelssohn. There is a taste now for simple, direct music, which is consonant with the baroque," says Westenburg, music director of Musica Sacra, a professional chorus and orchestra.

Musica Sacra is gambling on the public's appetite for Bach by staging a six-concert "Basically Bach" Festival here June 11-22.

The festival, based in Lincoln Center, features Westenburg leading performances of Bach's "Mass in B minor" and two of his cantatas, Margaret Hillis conducting the "Magnificat," and two of the Brandenburg Concertos, and harpsichord sessions with Rosalynn Tureck and Anthony Newman. The festival also spreads out to include free outdoor concerts, organ recitals in three churches, cantatas at another church, free lunchtime lectures on Bach, and 100 hours of Bach programming on the city's public radio station, which also plans live broadcasts of the concerts.

Which is hardly enough to satisfy Westenburg. "I had a kind of missionary part of me that regretted that New York had no kind of Bach festival," Westenburg said in a recent interview in his office at the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine. He is the cathedral's choir director, heads the choral music department at the Juilliard School and leads the Collegiate Chorale, an amateur chorus.

"We do not, in New York, get to hear enough decently performed baroque choral music," he says. "Our performance of the St. Matthew Passion last year was the first full concert performance in the city in 10 years."

That's like the Beethoven Ninth not being heard here in five or 10 years. You would wonder, what the heck is wrong?

June also is a slow month on the city's cultural calendar, with the New York Philharmonic and the Metropolitan and City operas all taking a break, and the six-week "Mostly Mozart" Festival a month away.

Musica Sacra, which started out performing in a church, pays its 30 or so singers, but not extravagantly.

"New York has more professional choral activity than anywhere else," Westenburg says, "but a singer is very, very lucky to make $4,000 a year. Some of them have jobs which allow them to rehearse, some live frugally like you would not believe, some have income from solo fees."

"I don't know why they do it."

Musica Sacra has its own frustrations. Despite a growing following in New York and critical esteem, it is hardly known elsewhere.

One solution, Westenburg says, would be to record. One record company told Musica Sacra it was a bad risk because it does not tour and is not known outside New York, Westenburg said. But when the group tried to set up a tour several years ago, it could not get bookings. Why?

"Because we didn't record, and no one knew us," he says.

Rail fan Pins simply can't resist true love of luxury private cars

By IRA J. DREYFUSS

NEW YORK (AP) — Among the great loves in the life of George A. Pins are the Pennsylvania, the Shenandoah and the Virginia Beach.

Pins, a lawyer, likes trains so much he has his own cars. And they're not models. His cars, their scenic names conjuring the glory days of railroading, are the real thing.

"I love them because there's something deep in me that likes trains and can't be explained in logical or rational terms," says Pins. "It's like asking me, 'Why did you marry your wife?' I don't know."

He does know, he says, that he likes seeing the country from the windows of his private rolling stock, and he likes owning a small part of the luxurious heyday of rail travel. The attraction is strong enough for him to spend many hours and thousands of dollars maintaining and operating his minirailroad.

Pins owns a classic private car — the elegant, mahogany-paneled Pennsylvania — which was built in 1928 to carry top executives of the Pennsylvania Railroad. It has a parlor, four bedrooms, two showers, a dining room that seats eight, a pantry, a kitchen and quarters for a cook and a steward.

Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry Truman, Dwight D. Eisenhower and John F. Kennedy rode in it, Pins says, and it carried the coffin of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy from New York to Washington.

It's the pride of his collection. The Shenandoah and the Virginia Beach were built to carry the merely wealthy traveling public. The Shenandoah has 10 roomettes and six double bedrooms. The Virginia Beach has six double bedrooms. The other half of the car is a buffet-lounge.

To keep his hobby going, Pins offers the cars for charter as business promotions and for tour groups. He makes what he calls an "operating profit." The revenues of the charter are more than expenses. But add in the costs of maintenance, he says, and he winds up $20,000 to $30,000 a year in the red.

It takes some money to keep a hobby like this going. Nonetheless, Pins says he's "only one poor guy."

"The people who own railroad cars today are not dilettante millionaires who have playthings," Pins insists. "They are people who are very serious about their avocation — if not profession — of railroading."

Pins started with the Pennsylvania. He says he picked it up in 1971, when the Penn Central was in the throes of bankruptcy and "disposing of some of its more exotic possessions."

It was, he says, dirty and drab. Yet...

"The light bulb went off inside my head and I was just going to have that car and that's all there was to it," he says.

Have it he did — for about $50,000, plus repairs. Even if railroad cars are no longer playthings of the rich, they're not cheap. Pins says he paid less for the other two, but they wound up costing almost the same

Heads not that hard

NEW YORK (AP) — Some motorcyclists refuse to wear helmets in the belief they make riding unsafe — but don't you believe it, says the University of Illinois.

Reporting on a behavioral study conducted by the university, the Motorcycle Safety Foundation reports 15.3 percent of the riders interviewed said they never wore helmets.

Many of these believe helmets restrict vision, some contend they interfere with hearing, and others think a helmet might cause neck injury in an accident.

A review of reports on thousands of accidents involving motorcycles showed that even full-face helmets permit ample peripheral vision, according to the Foundation, which adds that a helmeted rider's hearing is not impaired and no evidence was found that neck injuries resulted from wearing helmets.

'Biggest robbery' leads to insurer's fraud accusation

DALLAS (AP) — At the time, it was reported as the biggest residential robbery in the history of Dallas County.

Janiece Christner — owner of the famed "Christner Collection" of silver and porcelain — told police a man and a woman forced their way into her palatial residence in the exclusive Highland Park section of Dallas and stole $1.4 million in art works, jewelry, antiques and cash.

That was Sept. 24. Today, eight months later, Mrs. Christner has been accused by an insurance company of faking the robbery.

In a copyright story Sunday, the Dallas Morning News reported Lloyd's of London has filed documents in District Court in Dallas which it says backs up its argument the robbery was a concoction of a woman who built a charade of wealth and high society on borrowed money.

Mrs. Christner, in a sworn affidavit, has specifically denied the allegations.

The matter came to civil court after the 61-year-old widow filed a claim for $857,875 with Lloyd's of London, the company with which she had insured most of the jewelry. Lloyd's refused to pay, and Mrs. Christner filed suit against the prestigious firm.

In answer to that suit, Lloyd's has argued through affidavits and documents that the robbery never took place, that Mrs. Christner's claims to being an heiress are unsubstantiated and that she used falsified appraisal reports to borrow money, the Morning News reported.

The newspaper report comes two weeks before a celebrated auction of Mrs. Christner's multimillion-dollar art collection scheduled in New York for June 7-9.

Mrs. Christner's attorney, Carl Skibell, said in an affidavit in a separate civil case that one reason for the auction was "for the purpose of paying off an existing debt in favor of First Texas Savings and Loan Association in the amount of $5.8 million," the newspaper reported.

Skibell told the Morning News there were "many reasons" for the auction, "including the robbery of her home... the death of her husband, her declining health and advancing age."

The News also reported First Texas has a lien against the entire Christner Collection up for auction.

There have been no criminal charges filed in the case, and Highland Park Police Chief Henry Gardner has declined to discuss the matter with The Associated Press.

But according to the Morning News, Lloyd's uses a sworn affidavit from Gardner in its case against Mrs. Christner in which the police chief says Mrs. Christner first said $40,000 in $10 and $20 bills were stolen from a desk drawer during the robbery. When police told her that many bills wouldn't fit in the drawer, she changed her claim to $9,000, Gardner said in the statement.

The chief's statement also said when officers returned to Mrs. Christner's home to question her about her background and that of her friends and family, "she became most uncooperative and hostile and indicated that she was not going to give them any information concerning her friends, and it was none of their business."

The newspaper said Mrs. Christner told antique dealer Carl Wright she was an heiress of the founder of Coca-Cola. The News also said, according to court records, Mrs. Christner told others she was also an heiress of the founders of Burlington Mills and American Airlines.

She and her husband, retired American Airlines pilot John W. Christner, moved into the Highland Park mansion about 1972. Christner died in October 1975.

The News said after that, Mrs. Christner began collecting and dealing in antiques and art works on a grand scale, making several acquisition trips to Europe.

But Lloyd's claims through documents filed in the civil case that Mrs. Christner had no source of income other than bank loans from First Texas Savings and Loan, and further that she used falsified appraisals of art treasures as collateral to borrow money.

Mrs. Christner declined to comment on the matter, referring all questions to her lawyer.

In a separate civil action, the parent company of Neiman Marcus filed suit against Mrs. Christner for nonpayment of a $175,000 diamond-studded necklace she bought on credit at the department store a year ago, the newspaper said.

The article said a writ of attachment was ordered in that suit April 3, and a sheriff's deputy went to seize $100,000 worth of Mrs. Christner's property pending settlement of the suit. But the paper said the deputy returned and said he was unable to find anything of value that did not have a substantial lien against it.

The necklace was among items reported stolen in the Sept. 24 robbery. The suit was settled May 18 when Neiman-Marcus agreed to accept a $100,000 share of Mrs. Christner's claim against Lloyd's of London.

Remaining quint request privacy

ST. BRUNO, Quebec (AP) — Born in a depression-weary world hungry for miracles, the Dionne quintuplets rebelled against the publicity that accompanied their every childhood move. Today, on the 45th anniversary of their birth in a northern Ontario farmhouse, the three surviving sisters live quietly, hoping their peace will remain undisturbed.

"How could anyone still be interested in us?" Cecile Dionne Langlois asked a Canadian Press reporter who visited this town where they live 12½ miles east of Montreal.

Publicity encourages publicity, Cecile said, adding that she and her sisters want to be left alone.

"Everything has changed now," she said, briefly breaking the silence the sisters have maintained for years.

Today Cecile works as a cosmetician in a beauty shop while Yvonne, who never married, and Annette Dionne Allard work in the town library.

Today they receive exclusive control of the trust funds they earned for their childhood endorsements on products. Once they amounted to $1 million, but they have dwindled to between $50,000 and $100,000 apiece, according to a book about them.

Cecile was divorced in 1964, and Annette has been separated from her husband for five years. Both live comfortably with their children. Cecile has four teen-agers, three boys and a girl while Annette has three sons 16 to 20 years old.

Yvonne, who tried unsuccessfully three times to become a nun, still attends Mass every morning. Emilie, the fourth quint, died at the age of 19, suffocating during an epileptic seizure. The fifth sister, Marie, was suffering mental depression after the breakup of her marriage when she died alone in a Montreal apartment in 1970, apparently of a blood clot on the brain. She was 36.

Their father and mother, Olivia and Elzire Dionne, still live outside Callander near the farm where the girls were born. The quint left home in 1952 after a bitter family squabble and were last photographed with their parents at Marie's funeral

Federal investigation launched in violence between Klan, SCLC

DECATUR, Ala. (AP) — Federal agents have been dispatched to Decatur after a Memorial Day weekend marred by violence between blacks and Ku Klux Klansmen, officials say.

Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., said Sunday that Attorney General Griffin Bell had sent FBI agents from Washington to "assess the situation."

Meanwhile, blacks were expected to gather today to plan further protests, according to the Rev. R. B. Cottonreider, a project director for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

The violence occurred Saturday when shots were exchanged between the SCLC and the Klan, leaving four people wounded. Police said shooting erupted as Klansmen tried to stop a march in support of Tommy Lee Hines, a 27-year-old black man convicted of rape.

SCLC National President Joseph Lowery led the noontime march. He said his wife, Evelyn, narrowly missed being hit by a bullet that shattered the window of her car.

Two stores were firebombed Saturday night. One was heavily damaged.

Sunday, riot-equipped police looked on as some 50 robed Klansmen and women, many armed with clubs, staged a peaceful rally on the steps of City Hall.

Special Wizard Bill Wilkinson led the march that culminated with a cross-burning at the scene of the shootings the day before.

Wilkinson, who was in Georgia when the shootings occurred, told reporters Sunday that the Klansmen did not attempt to block the black marchers, but to "oversee" the march.

"We were offered the opportunity to march in front of or behind the SCLC by the authorities," he said. "Our men were intending to march in front of the SCLC. Apparently they took more time than the Negroes liked and they started moving in. Our only intent was to ensure that we were in front."

Police reports indicated the Klansmen attempted to stop the march. The reports also indicated that when the confrontation began, the first shots were fired from the SCLC side. Cottonreider said no one in the march was armed.

Bullets struck Klansman David Kelso, 30, in the chest. He remained in intensive care today.

Man charged in two deaths

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A 24-year-old man killed his girlfriend and her sister, then held his 2-year-old son hostage for three hours before surrendering, police said.

Warrants charging Steven Reasonover with two counts of second-degree murder and one count of kidnapping were issued Sunday by the St. Louis Circuit Attorney's office.

Police said they found the body of the young boy's mother, Yolanda Allen, 21, of Ferguson, and her 18-year-old sister, Cassandra, in separate upstairs bedrooms in the home of the boy's grandmother, Ida Allen.

Mrs. Allen said Reasonover had come for a visit Saturday night, bringing Yolanda and the couple's son, Marquis.

"He was talking like nothing was bothering either one of them. They were watching television and he just got up and started walking around nervously and upset. He seemed so calm, but later he wasn't," she said.

Mrs. Allen said she was sleeping in the bedroom next to the room where Reasonover, Yolanda and their son were when she heard shots. "I ran out of the house to get a telephone to call the police and get help," she said.

Police arrived at Mrs. Allen's house in a residential area of west St. Louis shortly after 3 a.m. Sunday. Officers began searching the basement when Reasonover called to them from the second floor, saying he had already killed two people and would kill the boy, authorities said.

Several officers remained in the house talking to him. He surrendered three hours later.

Mrs. Allen, who searched for some motive in the killings Sunday, said, "It was just some kind of feeling of anxiety, or frustration, or depression that was working on him."

Peking news bureaus to begin

PEKING (AP) — The Foreign Ministry said today it has given permission to four U.S. newspapers to establish permanent bureaus in Peking.

They are The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, The Los Angeles Times and The Washington Post.

The correspondents expected to represent them are now based in Hong Kong. They are Frank Ching of The Journal, Fox Butterfield of The New York Times, Jay Mathews of The Post, and Linda Mathews of The Los Angeles Times. The Mathews are husband and wife.

Postal changes mulled

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress, which created the Postal Service nearly a decade ago in hopes of eventually making mail delivery pay for itself, is considering abandoning that goal and underwriting the service with new subsidies.

A bill awaiting a House vote would change the 1970 Postal Reorganization Act's mandate to start reducing the subsidies this year. The legislation would, instead, inject new revenue into the mail agency in an effort to hold down future postal rate increases and prevent cuts in service.

"In the euphoria surrounding the development of the new 'business-like' Postal Service in 1970, Congress accepted some of the predictions of the proponents of postal reorganization and set 1984 as the year when the Postal Service would be able to 'break-even' — pay its expenses solely out of revenues," a report to House members says.

"Unfortunately, the Postal Service has not made sufficient progress toward self-sufficiency," says the report by the House Post Office Committee, which approved the legislation. It noted that the agency has lost money every year since it was created.

Under the reorganization law, the politics-laden Post Office Department was replaced by the Postal Service, a new agency made largely independent of Congress and the White House.

The theory was that a new agency organized like a private company could eventually eliminate the subsidies, money from taxpayers that traditionally has supplemented that raised through postal rates.

The reorganization act created a "public service appropriation" equal to 10 percent of the 1971 postal budget, or $920 million annually. This is scheduled to be reduced, beginning next year, by $92 million a year until 1984. After that, under existing law, the subsidy may end.

Instead of reducing subsidies, the pending bill would increase the authorization to $1.1 billion next year, $1.2 billion in 1982 and $1.3 billion a year after that.

The committee said that what exists, rather than a business-like agency, "is a heavily indebted organization which now will begin to lose the already-inadequate level of public service financing."

"Congress must decide whether a nationwide postal system is to be maintained at its present level, and whether to keep popular public services, including six-day-per-week home delivery and small local post offices," the panel said.

The report said the bill, which the House is expected to vote on early next month, would "modify the policy in the current law that the Postal Service must 'break-even' no matter what the cost in service reductions or how high the price of a stamp."

Although committee staff members predict the House will pass the bill, it is expected to face problems in the Senate, where budgetary austerity may kill it.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, chairman of the committee that would handle the bill after House passage, is known to be reluctant to approve new postal subsidies. "There is nothing in the (congressional) budget targets that would accommodate this legislation," an aide to Glenn said.

Cross gets two life sentences

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — A Laramie County District Court jury has recommended two consecutive life sentences for a young plumber found guilty of murdering a suburban Cheyenne couple.

The sentencing verdict, which spared Thomas Michael Cross, 23, the death sentence, was read shortly after midnight today.

It followed the jury's verdict Sunday that found Cross guilty of two counts of first-degree murder in the rifle slayings of Larry Sprouse, 33, and his wife, Carolyn, 35, last Oct. 14.

Prosecution attorneys argued for the death penalty Sunday night, calling it a deterrent to "atrocious, heinous and cruel" crimes. But defense attorneys asked the jury to spare Cross's life because of mitigating factors, especially his mental condition.

Justice flays court rulings

BUCK HILL FALLS, Pa. (AP) — In an unusual display of criticism from within the U.S. Supreme Court, Justice Thurgood Marshall assailed recent rulings as dangerous to constitutional rights and personal liberties.

Marshall criticized two recent rulings on which he had dissented: Bell vs. Wolfish, which dealt with the rights of jailed prisoners, and Herbert V. Lando, which said journalists are not protected in libel suits from questions about what their thoughts were as they put an article together.

In a speech to the 2nd Circuit Judicial Conference, Marshall called freedom of the press a "dying liberty."

"Last year I told you freedom of the press has not fared too well in recent decisions," he said. "Unfortunately, but as expected, this trend continues."

The court's ruling in the prisoners case said the presumption of innocence has "no application" to a jailed defendant before his trial.

PUBLIC NOTICE

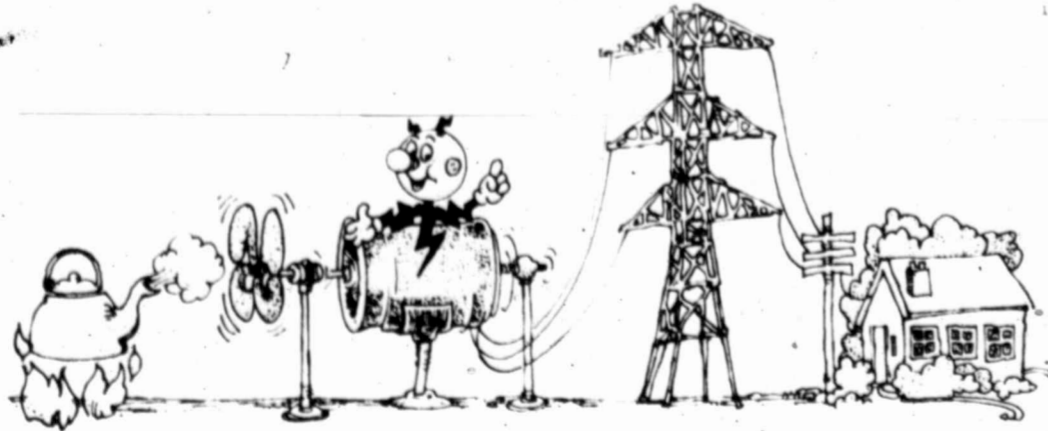

Texas Electric Service Company, in accordance with the rules of the Public Utility Commission of Texas, hereby gives notice of its intent to implement new rate schedules for electric service in areas served by the company, effective June 21, 1979, or as soon thereafter as permitted by law.

The new schedules will result in a 16.1 percent increase in the adjusted gross revenue of the company.

A complete copy of the new rate schedules is on file with the Public Utility Commission at Austin, Texas, and with each affected municipality. Copies also are available for inspection in each of the company's public business offices.

TEXAS ELECTRIC SERVICE COMPANY

Here's why it takes fuel to make electricity.

It takes fuel to make electricity. A lot of people don't understand that, but it's true. Most of the power plants in this country require steam to generate electricity. To make steam you must boil water, and that requires a lot of heat. That's why we have to buy and burn large amounts of fuel, such as lignite coal and natural gas, every month. The steam we make with it turns the generators that make your electricity, which we distribute to you right when you need it. The fuel we use costs money, more all the time, which is why we show it separately on your bill. At Texas Electric, we want you to know what you're paying for. And to remember: it takes fuel to make electricity.

Office buildings taking on 'energy saving' character

By LEE MITGANG
AP Urban Affairs Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In a state office building planned in San Jose, Calif., a room full of rocks will keep things cool and save precious energy resources.

That is just one novel solution architects have come up with to meet changing energy realities for the latest generation of urban office buildings.

The energy crunch has not resulted in drastic changes in the appearance of most city architecture, and is not likely to in the foreseeable future, architects say.

But buildings on drawing boards around the country are much more likely than ever to include all "state of the art" energy-saving strategies, such as reflecting pane glass that provides insulation, or positioning the building to let in sun rays or create shading.

"In large buildings, there haven't yet been that many big changes. A lot of what's happening is just very careful integration of existing technology," says Joe Demkin, an architect with the American Institute of Architects.

Beyond that, however, a number of structures on the drawing boards or under construction are showing some striking innovations.

In Atlanta, an office building under construction for Georgia Power Co. will use high-pressure sodium lighting similar to street lights, which is far more energy efficient than fluorescent lighting.

It also will be built in two-levels: the lower level will contain a television station, a data processing center and other big energy users.

A 24-story tower would house office employees. During non-work hours, electricity in the tower would shut down automatically, resulting in a huge energy saving.

In Calgary, Canada, where winter temperatures reach 40 degrees below zero, an office building under construction for Gulf Oil Canada Ltd. will have no conventional heating plant at all. Heating for the building will be provided by a sophisticated heat recovery system that will circulate the heat created by lights, machinery, and even people.

The name of the game, according to several architects trying to build more energy-efficient downtown office space around the country, is "Btu," and how to use fewer of them.

A Btu — British thermal unit — is the standard measure of how much energy it takes to heat a given amount of space. Technically, it is the amount of heat required to increase the temperature of a pound of water one degree Fahrenheit.

The federal General Services Administration has set a hoped-for energy goal of 55,000 Btu per square foot a year for office space.

Federal studies find at present it takes between 65,000 and 223,000 Btu a year to heat or cool a single square foot in conventional office buildings in New York City.

One of the most novel energy savers on the drawing boards is a three-story state office building planned for completion in 1981 in sunny, hot San Jose, Calif. When completed, its designers claim it will use only 25,000 Btu a year per square foot, less than half the federal target for office space.

David Baker who works for Sol-Arc, the Berkeley-based firm that did the energy design for the building, explains that there will be a room in the building filled with 1,500 square feet of rocks.

At night, outdoor air will be blown through the rocks to cool them. During the day, building air will be circulated through the rocks, and this should take care of 25 percent of the building's air conditioning load.

Solar power will be used to make hot water, as required in all California government buildings.

And lighting fixtures will automatically shut off when the building can be illuminated by natural sunlight.

By using its new energy-saving techniques, the Georgia Power building will need no more than 35,000 Btu per square foot, says Larry Lord, the project's architect.

"Based on the averages we found in 30 high-rise buildings in Atlanta, our building should be at least 50 percent more energy efficient than other buildings in Atlanta," says Lord.

The federal Tennessee Valley Authority, meanwhile, is drawing up plans for a highly energy-efficient office building-computer center in downtown Chattanooga, Tenn., scheduled for completion in 1982.

Melbourne, Australia, resident Jean Hopcraft is ready for the latest import from America — disco roller skating. Ms. Hopcraft manages a city disco and keeps well ahead of the fashion with skimpy but well-protected gear. (AP Laserphoto)

TVA spokesman Jerre Wilson says that while final plans will not be made public for another month or so, the hope is that it will serve as an energy demonstration project "that other office buildings can emulate. We're certainly hoping for some dramatic design changes." Among the energy technology to be incorporated would be solar collectors and heat recapturing equipment, possibly similar to that planned in Calgary.

Energy-saving architecture has even reached the Bronx, in New York City. A Ronzoni spaghetti factory there is recycling the heat generated from making pasta to heat the plant.

Union official blames firm's alarm system

PITTSBURG, Calif. (AP) — A union official contends that Dow Chemical Co.'s alarm system was inadequate and that a poorly tested chemical mixture caused an explosion that killed two men and injured 101 others.

"This won't be left lying," said Monte Manwill, business manager of the International Association of Heat and Frost Insulators and Asbestos Workers Local 16, which represents 65 workers at the plant.

Three teams of company researchers were to begin work today to try to pinpoint the cause of Saturday's blast in a newly installed 600-gallon tank used in making pesticides, according to Dow spokesman Jack Jones.

The California Occupational Safety and Health Administration also sent in investigators.

The new unit will remain closed until the investigations are completed, Jones said.

Manwill said Sunday that he had been misled by the company about the new unit's safety, and that there were several leaks at the plant, located on a 100-acre site 35 miles northeast of San Francisco.

He alleged that five men were exposed to gas leaks on two separate occasions, and that two workers called in sick the morning of the explosion because "they were exposed to something the day before."

The tank that exploded was used to heat iron powder and liquid chlorine to produce ferric chloride, a chemical used in making pesticides.

"The chemical reaction was thoroughly researched and tested. We're baffled. We thought we knew everything about it," said Jones.

"We didn't speculate at what caused it, although we have some chemical clues," Jones said. "The answer might lie in the chemical reaction."

Jones denied there had been earlier reports of leaks at the plant.

For unexplained reasons, the temperature in the tank suddenly jumped from a normal 284 degrees to 464 degrees and exploded, spewing metal fragments, gooey black ferric chloride and chemical fumes. Damage was estimated at $1 million.

Jack Simon Wright, 48, of Oakley, was killed instantly. Gabriel Martinez, 64, of San Francisco, died while being flown to a hospital burn center.

Jones said 101 persons were treated at local hospitals. Only 89 were workers were in the area of the explosion, all employed by three subcontractors who were preparing the unit for production. The rest were rescue workers. Twenty-eight of the injured were hospitalized overnight, one in serious condition.
