RANGERS PROBING HUGE THEFT RING Government Maps Biggest Peacetime Borrowing Program

WILL TRY TO RAISE NEARLY TEN BILLIONS

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 5.—Fiscal experts planned today the largest peacetime financing program in history. They seek to borrow approximately $10,000,000,000 to cover government expenses and maturing obligations over the next six months. The money had President Roosevelt's approval in his budget message that the sum that treasury experts were put to work in mapping out the financing program. Only in 1928 has the treasury borrowed so much money in so short a time. The manner in which the $6,000,000,000 additional new money and $4,000,000,000 to pay off maturing obligations would be raised was not clear but it was learned on authority that the money would be raised as it has been in the past. This was through direct sale of bonds, notes, bills and certificates to investors, bankers and insurance companies. The current financing program resembles the final effort to finance the war in 1918 when a huge bond-selling campaign had raised more money than is contemplated over the next six months. The first step in the financing program was considered today by treasury officials. Despite the huge balance of $955,991,710 now in the treasury, a rapid increase in government expenditures over the next few weeks might require the issue of new securities before the end of January.

Accuses Max Baer

Max Baer—heavyweight boxer, screen actor and night-club entertainer—expressed himself as being "unconcerned" by the news that Bee Starr (above), circus aerialist, planned to sue him for $250,000 on a breach of promise charge.

FIXING DOLLAR VALUE LIKELY TO BE DELAYED

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 5.—The house approved a $2 a gallon whiskey tax today, quickly rejecting a series of amendments to change the levy as carried in the liquor tax bill. The body then turned to consideration of a tax on wine and beer.

Stabilization of the American dollar against the value of the dollar on a permanent basis, now demanded by a powerful section of big business appears today likely to be delayed beyond the end of the session of congress which convened here this week. The session will last at least until May 1.

It seems possible in light of discouraging information gathered by the state department and submitted to President Roosevelt that stabilization of the dollar will extend well into the summer. A period of rising clamor for definite announcement of monetary plans is foreseen by administration intimates. But as Mr. Roosevelt's message on the stage of the nation and his budget message are digested here, observers are arriving at the conclusion that implications of the two documents point to certain definite if temporary administration policies. Meanwhile the house of representatives resumed consideration of the liquor tax bill today with the leadership striving for passage before nightfall, despite controversial amendments designed to change the proposed tax rates.

Majority leaders hoped to adjourn the house until Monday after the passage of the big revenue measure which developed from repeal.

Admits Strangling Chum for "Lying"

"I lost my temper . . . She told stories about me." After hours of grilling this was the excuse police said Mary Kavala, 13, gave for strangling to death her eight-year-old chum, Josephine Waropay, whose body was found under porch steps at fashionable Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y. Hiding her tears with her hands, the Kavala girl is escorted by a detective after confessing the crime at White Plains.

OFFICER SLAIN IN AMARILLO; CHARGE FILED

Robertson was detailed as a witness. He told police he and Crutchfield staged a party at a hotel where Burnam and Officer George Hayden found them. The two had quarreled. A negro porter who said he was "marched all over the hotel" at the point of a pistol, summoned police. In 1925 Crutchfield was charged with robbery of a bank at White Deer. The case was transferred to Amarillo on charge of venue. Here he pleaded insanity. He was sent to a state institution for the insane at Wichita Falls, where he remained for a short time.

Torn from her moorings and hurled onto the rocks, the lightship "Dyck" was at the mercy of howling gales when this photo was taken off Gravelines, France. Four of the crew of seven perished. One of the exhausted survivors is shown below as two fishermen led him up the beach in safety.

OPERATIONS ARE CENTERED AT EASTLAND

A widespread investigation of an alleged oil field theft ring which is estimated to have stolen more than a million dollars worth of oil field equipment in this section alone, today centered at Eastland where Texas rangers, under command of Capt. Odneal, pooled a vast amount of evidence for presentation to the grand jury Monday. Although no charges have been filed, it was rumored that the rangers have more than a dozen persons under arrest and in various jails of the oil belt. Capt. Odneal refused to confirm these reports. He also refused to say whether or not six of the suspects had made confessions as reported.

It was also reported that numerous oil field truck drivers in this county and in surrounding counties have been investigated and that through information gathered from this source many thousands of dollars worth of stolen stuff has been located and recovered. Organized Ring. The rangers say that the activities are directed by a gigantic organized ring, with a definite head of more or less prominence. They are working to uncover leads that will bring them to the "brains" of the syndicate which has stolen great amounts of loot and transported it to east Texas and south Texas fields for disposition. Assisting the rangers are Eastland county officers and officers of other counties into which the farflung lines of the investigation reach. Yesterday and today the investigators were reducing their evidence to dispositions taken under the direction of County Attorney Grady Owen and other prosecuting officers. This evidence as well as oral accounts will be laid before the Eastland county grand jury, it is understood from which a number of indictments are expected to be obtained. The investigation of the theft ring, rangers said, has been going on for several months. The rangers centered their activities at Eastland yesterday for the first time, however.

AGENTS START DRIVE AGAINST LIQUOR GANGS

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—Secret orders from Washington today launched a tri-state investigation by internal revenue agents of reports that remnants of the Capone and other notorious Chicago gangs are flooding the midwest with cheap bootleg liquor. Revenue agents said they had information indicating several million gallons of bootleg and cut whiskey had been fed into legitimate liquor channels by gangsters and bootleggers of the prohibition era. Widespread arrests in the conspiracy were understood to be imminent. The United Press learned that a prominent former Chicago official was involved in the conspiracy.

Survey Shows Sales Tax Is Partial Cure

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—The sales tax claimed by some to be the panacea of all government revenue ills, has supplied only a fraction of the revenues of most states which have adopted it, according to a survey made for the American Legislators association by Joseph G. Riddle. In half of the states with general sales taxes, the returns have been under $250,000 monthly each—one sixth or less, of the total taxes levied in each of those states for state's purposes. A few states, however, have found the sales tax a lucrative source of income. California realizes about $4,000,000 per month from a 2-1/2 per cent tax. Illinois gathers $2,000,000 monthly with a 2 per cent rate. Such states are not common, according to Riddle. There are six states which collect a quarter or more of their state revenue from the sales tax; these are California, Illinois, Indiana, South Dakota, Washington and West Virginia. The last three named include in their gross income tax laws many different forms of tax which other states collect under different statutes. West Virginia, for instance taxes the gross income of public service corporations as part of the sales tax. The South Dakota gross income tax levies taxes on salaries and wages in excess of a given amount. In five states Riddle reports, the receipts from general sales taxes were less than 5 per cent of the total state tax revenues.

Single House Is Now Being Urged by Norris

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 5.—The two projects for which he waged a fight for years in the U. S. senate now crowned with success, Senator George W. Norris, indefatigable Nebraska progressive, has turned his home state for a new crusade in democracy. The creation of an unicameral legislative assembly, frankly an experiment in direct democracy, is now his objective. Norris, the man who bolted the republican party in 1928 to support Alfred E. Smith and left the ranks again last year to back the "New Deal," is directing the move for a one-house, non-partisan assembly from Washington.

The trial here is on charge of venue from Stephens county. The first trial court reached a verdict of guilty but the state court of criminal appeals set aside the decision and ordered a new trial. Although the second trial was scheduled as a regular trial, it was expected to develop into something of a sanity hearing as well. While incarcerated in the Stephens county jail and during his stay in the Tarrant county jail officers said he made strange noises which first resembled the barking of a dog but later developed into a sound similar to the cackling of a hen.

Mystery Gun Enters Trial of Minister

PIGGOTT, Ark., Jan. 5.—The spotlight in the murder trial of Rev. Dale Crowley, pastor of Jonesboro Baptist tabernacle, focused today on a "mystery gun." A witness for the state injected the mystery of a third revolver. Until then there were but two guns that figured in the case—the pistol used by Rev. Crowley and the unfired revolver owned by the victim J. W. McMurdo, 68, nightwatchman at the tabernacle. The third weapon was removed from the scene of the slaying by Mrs. Mary Roleson, 74, along with the weapons owned by Rev. Crowley and McMurdo Walter Montague, a transfer company employe, identified the third gun and claimed ownership. He said he had let someone have the weapon a few days before the slaying but the name of the wielder of the revolver remained undisclosed.

THE DAYTON PLAN

Dayton, Ohio, has been successful with a "self-help" plan of community enterprise for taking care of its unemployed. The jobless, through a system of organized "units" are producing the necessities of life and distributing them among themselves by the old barter system. Organized charity still has to lend a hand at some points of contact with the normal world—notably in the instance of rents—but within the sphere that they have created for themselves, the employed are happily providing for their needs. In fact, so well is the program working that those employed therein are entitled to be classed no longer as unemployed. The project embraces a great variety of production—from the weaving of cloth, making of soap and various other fabricative industries to community farming and the raising of chickens and hogs.

Each individual enterprise is carried on by a "unit" which is self-governing within its sphere and affiliated with a general council for community government. This council, with a president supplied by the city charities organization, is composed of two representatives of each unit.

The value of the "self-help" plan is not merely economic, although it does relieve society of much of the expense of caring for the idle and needy by providing the means for these idle and needy to produce their own requirements, but it serves the social purpose of restraining anarchical impulses. Anti-social tendencies breed in the soil of enforced idleness. Such people gainfully employed, their self-respect saved by a sense of honest support of their families, are rescued from that atmosphere of resentment and desire for revenge against society which they charge with their misfortunes.

A description of the Dayton plan appearing in the current issue of the Rotarian, is an interesting and instructive study of an approach to the problem of unemployment relief which attempts to get away from the old direct relief attack, with its deadening influences upon citizenship and self-respect and encouragement of the dole. The problem of recovery will become increasingly, now, a problem of restoring the great numbers of erstwhile jobless to normal employment. The CWA program has taken care of millions of idle hands. But the CWA program is merely a beginning. The great task is the task of switching these millions successfully back into the broad track of normal industrial and professional occupation, and the restoration of the conditions that prevail where demand for the products of employment equals the production. This problem has many phases. It means a correlation of effort, reaching from farm to factory. Such plans as Dayton has put into operation will materially assist that transition. The thought of every community as it endeavors to discharge the social obligation that the presence of needy and unemployed creates, should not be confined to the immediate end, but should look forward to the ultimate end of restoring the objects of its assistance to self-support in profitable enterprises.

HELPING THE CATTLEMAN

A congressional effort is under way, in both senate and house, to have cattle brought under the regulations of the agricultural adjustment administration. Texas Senator Connally introduced a bill for this purpose in the senate, and Texas Representative Marvin Jones submitted one to the house. When the farm adjustment measure was passed, cattlemen opposed including their industry, believing it would take care of itself. Sec'y Wallace recently suggested a plan for including livestock. Cattle prices have failed to respond to the inflationary commodity price-lifting program. For that matter, so have hog prices, which include a processing tax. But, in spite of the apparently depressing influence of the farm program as it affects hogs. That cannot rationally be done until after the hog reduction campaign has had opportunity to demonstrate results, which will mean a drop of at least. Meanwhile, cattle are being slaughtered and sold without a club to operate it.

The club itself is non-existent. Without a franchise and without anything definite, no players can be signed for next season, leaving the whole matter for development at the league's decision Saturday.

Cornstalk Gas Is Used to Light Farm

AMES, Ia., Jan. 4.—The time is not distant when rural homes will be lighted and heated from waste products of the farm, as experiments at the field station of the United States department of agriculture indicate. An experimental plant has been erected on a farm near the station for production of gas manufactured from cornstalks.

NOT THE FIRST

Lee Satterwhite, who served in the legislature from Carson county, and was speaker, and came later as a member from Ector county, wasn't the first house member to return, after a term as speaker. . . . There was a very famous lawmaker, Speaker Kennedy, who came back to serve in the house after he had been speaker. Satterwhite is by no means the first member who has been elected from one district and later from another.

QUIET YEAR

January 17 will mark the anniversary of Gov. Ferguson's inauguration, and the halfway mark of her term of office—her final term, she has declared. Except for dealing with the relief problem, in a sense external to the state government activity itself, the past year has been remarkably free of major matters of public concern. The state has rocked along quietly; it enters a year with only political campaigning paramount on the horizon.

A FRIEND IN NEED

Through the Editor's Spectacles

By GEORGE

Yesterday was the 180th day since Cisco has had a "wet" fire. Some of us, unfamiliar with the fire fighter's argot, may concede that statement a bit sarcastically. There are, indeed, no "wet" fires. But in the private glossary of the boys of the hose and the ladder, a "wet" fire is really wet. The adjective doesn't refer to the fire. It refers to what happens to the fire fighters. A "wet" fire, therefore, is a fire where water is thrown upon the blaze.

Noah Fowler, assistant chief of the department called my attention yesterday to the record with the request that I express the thanks of the department for the manner in which the citizens have cooperated to produce that record.

Cisco has room to have off considerable penalty upon its fire insurance rate.

The Cisco Garden club is working on a badly needed project of beautifying the high school grounds. The bareness of the campus upon which the adolescents of Cisco are prodded toward knowledge, is enough to suggest a Byrd expedition to the South Pole. The scene is happier in winter there, because the very state of the grounds accords with the dreary atmosphere of that season of fire-ran loss. The sole decorative influence outside of the really nice architecture and some shrubbery, is a yellow oil-splashed paint over the front, lovingly applied by a departing class.

The Garden club's move is certainly worthy. It should receive the united cooperation of Cisco people who are interested in their community to the extent of improving its living advantages. I do not credit children of high school age with so little aesthetic feeling that they would wilfully interfere with efforts to make their school surroundings beautiful. I believe they would welcome such a project, and help in its fruition.

What I said about beautifying Cisco with roses the other day ought to be repeated every day until it gets community action. I appreciate very much the response that I drew from some members of the Garden club. It is a project that falls to that club by virtue of its character.

But neither the Garden club nor any other single institution, can accomplish much alone. It requires community cooperation to put over a program such as this. There is always a great deal of so-called "practical-mindedness" to overcome—that blessed state of being so wedded to tradition that one is afraid to step out of the beaten path for fear of ridicule, or a shock to the egotism.

There is also much civic "laziness" to route from its slumbers.

One of the best introductory speeches that I have heard was made by Mr. Farr, new Laguna hotel manager, to the Cisco Rotary club yesterday. The new manager had a terrific handicap to overcome in the welcome he received—J. Stuart Pearce having admitted knowing him for 20 years and introducing him to the club.

But Mr. Farr overcame that with a tact and simple eloquence that was nice to hear. I noticed that he discovered common ground on another side, when he fell into close conversation about bird dogs with E. R. McDaniel, who makes coca cola and other soft drinks when he isn't hunting birds in Texas and lions in Old Mexico.

AUSTIN, Jan. 5.—The New Year found the state government of Texas as $7,000,000 in the hole, as to its general fund, but found its deficit far less significant negatively than the affirmative factor creating it—the lately-stared movement to take an unjust burden off the people who have tried to maintain themselves as owners of homes and land.

TEXAS CROP VAL. HIGHEST

The year just closing shows highest Texas crop value since 1931, says an article by Victor H. Schlemmer, agricultural editor of the Dallas News. According to federal government estimates Texas crop gained $120,214,000 in value during 1933, which is 52 per cent over the value of the preceding year. Federal estimates place the 1934 value at $333,378,000 as compared with $233,164,000 in 1932.

A DELICATE PROBLEM PARIS, Jan. 5.—The civil tribunal of the Seine is confronted with a delicate problem. A Frenchman died recently and bequeathed a sum of money and a part of the family burial vault to his mistress instead of his wife. An extra-marital relationship is no bar to the reception of a legacy in France, but the widow of the Frenchman, on behalf of herself and daughter, demands the honor of occupying a place in the family burial vault. The lawyer for the legatee, however, pleads that if the man's wife could not keep her husband when he was alive she isn't entitled to a place by him now that he is dead.

Thomas B. Love and the Texas Bread Bonds

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD
Thomas B. Love has been in the picture since 1896. He served three terms in the house of representatives. He was speaker of the house of representatives. As a state lawmaker he had a big hand and a larger voice in the enactment of the insurance and banking laws. He was the superintendent of the department of government. He put over the state deposit guarantee act. He is not a popular individual in many quarters. He is a brainy individual in all circles known as "the haunts of men." He was a distinguished figure in the later years in the senate of Texas.

His latest is that the bread bonds are as good as any gold bonds ever floated. He believes that the state life insurance companies should buy largely of the bread bonds. In other words he would have the companies form a pool with all other life insurance companies doing business in Texas and buy all of a part of the Texas relief bonds, a total of $5,500,000 of which have been authorized.

E. P. Greenwood, president of the Great Southern Life Insurance company, joined in the chorus. He declared that if the banks of Texas would purchase one-half of these bonds, the Great Southern Life would join a pool or group composed of the life insurance companies doing business in Texas and acquire its full and liberal share of the other half—or if the banks elect not to purchase and the life companies will form such a group or pool to purchase the entire amount we will take our full share of the whole issue. Bankers have their own loads to carry and their own responsibilities.

Life insurance companies have their own loads and their responsibilities. But Thomas B. Love started something when he broadcasted his suggestion as how to handle the bread bonds issue from Lovridge farm in the rural shades of the big black land county.

OUTLOOK FOR FARMERS BRIGHTER
Hermon Nichols of Chicago is a United Press staff correspondent. He made a flying trip in which he covered the states of the south and the southwest and reported his findings as on economic conditions.

Speaking of Texas, he said in part: "Agricultural Texas is said to be leading all other sections of the country in farm recovery. Farm workers again were in good demand. Retail sales of agricultural products were said to be gaining. Car-loadings in this region was on the increase. This region of the south was said to be 65 per cent better off at the present than at the first of the current year. The government's program to reduce cotton acreage by 10 per cent and thereby lift the price of this commodity will be to have been the backbone of the region's recovery."

Rome was not built in a day. Nationwide recovery will not come in a day. But through the ages the workers of the world have ever been the winners when led by thinking brains who believed in the coming someday, perhaps a million years hence, of that gospel known as "The Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man."

IN THE CAMP OF REPEALERS
Charles C. McDonald of Wichita Falls made the rounds of the corridors and the lobbies of Austin hotels just as the old year was passing out. He is for a referendum to take prohibition out of the constitution of Texas. He is a candidate for the democratic nomination for governor. He is for the repeal of all pro statutes, or rather the revision of the least important. State Sen. Clint Small, another gubernatorial aspirant, has declared himself. He will battle for the repeal amendment be submitted to the people. He not only battle for it but he will vote for it. Edgar Witt, who very fully admits that he voted for ratification of the 18th amendment and for the amendment bringing constitutional prohibition to commonwealth, is for submitting and repeal all along the line. Geo. B. Terrell is for repeal. Tom Hunt has promised to declare himself the proper time. James V. Allen will announce his attitude when campaigning opens, perhaps long before springtime. There are others on the way. Col. R. E. L. King, leader of the upstate democracy, called upon the democrats of the state to draft for the place as well as honor former Chief Justice Nathan Phillips of Dallas. Judge Phillips, a repealer, but whether he stands for the draft or not is not known to those who are not in touch with the celebrated jurist and lawyer—a native Texan and in many years a close confidential adviser and personal friend of the Joseph Weldon Bailey who has stepped out of the picture.

Married Flirts

BEGIN HERE TODAY

GYPSY MORELL and TOM WEAVER are married in a simple ceremony in a suburb of New York on the same day that LILA BOTALING and BERNIE BLISS marry with pomp and circumstance in the city's most fashionable church. Gypsy and Lila are childhood friends. The Weavers shack on a Long Island beach, and the Blisses go to Europe. Lila expects to live in luxury, but Gypsy intends to keep her job, as teacher in a settlement house.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER II
OCTOBER, Gypsy thought, was exhilarating in the city. It was a season, it held a mood, which belonged to Fifth Avenue, with its well-dressed women, its alluring displays behind plate glass windows.

Their little apartment, it is true, was a good long trek from the Avenue—five long blocks, in fact, but Gypsy and Tom admired it none the less and felt smart and urban because they now belonged in "the upper East Side" class. It was the first home Gypsy had ever known, other than the shabby mansard house in Blue Hills. And it was so different in all respects, so compact and shining and modern.

They had decided against living in a made-over "walk-up," as those apartments which have been wrested from the interior of stately old brown-stone fronts are called in Manhattan. Both Gypsy and Tom were tired of old houses, or thought they were, anyhow. The big, square, cream-colored block of apartments which they chose, with its tiled lobby and self-steering elevator, seemed the last word in comfort and convenience to them. That is, it did until they first caught a glimpse of Lila's place. But I am getting ahead of my story.

Their own particular cubbyhole consisted of two rooms, a living room and bedroom, and a kitchen and bath. The kitchen, in that quaint fashion known peculiarly to the New York apartment dweller, opened directly on the entrance hall, and the upper half of the door which closed it off was made of frosted glass. This distressed Gypsy mildly, but she numbered a handsome Japanese screen, all colorful dragons and flying birds, among her wedding presents, and this effectively hid the view from guests.

The whole place was finished pleasantly if uninspiredly in a cream-colored plaster, marked off by imitation paneling. Gypsy, used to the faded papers and liver-colored paint of the house in Blue Hills, thought it very modish and restful. She and Tom moved in on October first, the last day of their vacation, and hung pictures, pushed furniture about, and established in their spick and span kitchen the treasures in tinware and glass which they triumphantly brought home from the ten-cent store.

"Isn't it perfect?" Gypsy, her brown curls pushed back, a smudge on her charming nose, her frock completely hidden by a coverall of blue linen, demanded approval of her labors. The little room shone with cleanliness and fresh paint and good will. The day-bed, upholstered in green mohair, occupied the longest wall space. There were two Windsor chairs and a drop leaf table. There was an unappointed bookshelf. There were one or two nice black and white prints. The casual onlooker might have pronounced the room half-furnished, as indeed it was, bare of rugs and curtains and cushions, but to the young Weavers it seemed perfect

"I told you about her, Darling," Tom said, slipping his arms around her.

tion and therefore was. "Later, of course," Gypsy planned, "we'll get some deep chairs and some rugs. We simply can't manage them yet—and what does it matter?"

TOM, who had been hanging pictures, stepped down from his stool to embrace her. What a darling she was, how good, and brave and beautiful! Why, she might have had everything, this girl, and she had chosen instead to link her way with his! He couldn't believe in his luck, quite yet.

They picnicked in the kitchen that evening, enjoying a scrambled meal of canned beans and crisp bacon and salad. It was fun—it was all fun—from setting the table with a checked cloth to washing the blue and white dishes.

"You'll have to get some sort of part-time maid," Tom told her, firmly. "You can't work all day with those kids and come home to beds and dishes."

"We'll see about that," Gypsy said. But privately she was sure she was equal to anything. Let's see. . . she got $23 a week at the Settlement, and Tom's salary was $75 now. He'd had to take two reductions. That was more than $100 a week. It seemed riches to the girl. Back in Blue Hills there had never been anything so glorious, so utterly marvellous, as a regular income. Daddy had a way of defending penniless clients, and even when the cases he took were those of rich people, the latter had a way of letting their bills run.

Tom had lighted his pipe, was relaxing at ease on the day-bed. Gypsy went down the hall to contemplate for the hundredth time the bedroom. She loved every inch of it, from the green and white counterpanes, reproductions of some old pattern, to the dressing table, which, draped in green and white organdie, had cost the startling sum of $11! The beds were low-posted, of imitation mahogany. There was a hooked rug on the floor. In a week or two, she told herself, there would be apple-green curtains fluttering at the windows and a lamp or two to add notes of charm.

THE phone rang and she ran to answer it. She sounded important and young matronly, to herself.

"Tom, I think it's long distance," she said, holding her hand against the mouthpiece. "They're so long about it. . . ." Her heart began to beat rather fast. Perhaps it was Mother? Perhaps she was really ill, this time.

"Yes, Yes." Her expression changed, ever so slightly. "It's Mrs. Weaver, speaking. No, not his mother, his wife."

Glacially she spoke to the tall, fair-haired young man beside her. "Someone for you, Tom."

She went back into the living room—the telephone was in the hall—and tried not to listen. Tom's voice was stiff with embarrassment—and something else. What was it all about? A high, imperious, feminine voice summoning him from some unknown place. Gypsy had made up her mind, long ago—as long ago as last June, in fact, when she and Tom had become engaged—not to be a suspicious wife. But she couldn't help the sudden outcropping of a perfectly natural jealousy. Her resolutions faded in the face of it.

"Yes, that's great." How awkward Tom sounded! What was this mysterious woman saying, to make him so stiff and unnatural? "Why, I certainly wish I could. Didn't you know about it? I thought everybody. . ."

There was a long pause. The he said, with forced brightness. "I tell you what, you come and have lunch with Gypsy—with my wife and me. That would be better wouldn't it?"

Gypsy didn't listen to the rest. She was trying not to be too angry. Who was this person who intruded upon their first night at home? It wasn't fair.

TOM came away from the telephone with that suspicious, too-casual air which young husbands often wear, and with which Gypsy was not yet familiar. Something deep in her bones, however, recognized it and stiffened to meet it.

"Old girl friend," Tom yawned. The yawn, also, was a shade theatrical. Gypsy, straightened books, did not reply.

"I told you about her, darling," Tom pursued, coming up to her and slipping his arms around her. "Vera Gray—I saw quite a lot of her when I worked in Boston, you remember."

Gypsy remembered, quite clearly all she had heard of this Vera person. She was big and beautiful in a full-blown way, Rosina had told her. She had been making "a dead set for Tom," according to Rosina, when Gypsy had come upon the scene. Tom and Gypsy had known each other in childhood, but hadn't met until a little more than a year ago, at a studio party. They just back from Boston, feeling in a way about an unfamiliar city in New York, had taken one look at Gypsy and promptly relinquished the full-blown Vera.

"What on earth is she doing to you?" Gypsy said, trying to keep the crossness out of her voice.

"She's in New Haven," Tom said guilelessly. "She was driving down to see me in the new telephone book, just gave me a ring."

"I see," Gypsy sounded mild away, and quite as if she did not care.

"How could I help asking her to lunch, darling?" Tom coaxed. "I wanted to see you, for old time's sake, and naturally I want my friends to meet my wife."

WILL ASK NEW FEDERAL LAWS TO AID IN WAR ON CRIME

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—New legislation to strengthen the government's law enforcing powers will be asked in the present session of Congress. Attorney-general Homer S. Cummings indicated today in his annual report.

Cummings said that study is being given to matters of proposed legislation and that suitable bills and other information will be made available to the appropriate congressional committees.

Planned Legislation. Among these matters, he said, are regulation of traffic in machine guns and other firearms; prison escapes, including complicity of prison officers or employees; resisting and killing a federal officer; interstate transportation of stolen property; simplification of removal proceedings; escape from lawful custody while awaiting trial; waiver of indictment cases; and regulation of alibi defenses.

The attorney-general reported that additional strain had been placed on his department by the expansion of activities in connection with kidnaping and racketeering and by the great amount of legal work incident to the administration and enforcement of recently enacted emergency legislation.

197,384 Cases. Commenced. In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933, the period covered by the annual report, Cummings reported that 197,384 cases had been commenced in the federal district courts and 205,629 were terminated. In the 1932 fiscal year 220,738 cases were commenced and 216,087 terminated.

number of persons under supervision in federal jails, hospitals, training schools and state institutions rose to 55,060 from 52,466.

The decrease in jail population was attributed to relaxation of prohibition activities and the extension of the probation system to practically all federal district courts.

PINHOLE SPECS

LEIPZIG, Jan. 5.—Opticians have borrowed the principal of the photographic lens and devised spectacles with shutters which step down the light as in a camera. The lenses are replaced with two adjustable black plates with pinholes, or "optic diaphragms," which cut off the fringe of rays which cause glare of bright sunlight. The new spectacles, which are on exhibition at the Leipzig Trade fair, are so adjusted that the pinhole permits just the right amount of light to enter the inner eye, and is thus concentrated on the "yellow spot," which is the most sensitive part of the retina.

BOND MARKET IS IRREGULAR, BUT HIGHER

By OTTO E. STURM (United Press Financial Writer) NEW YORK, Jan. 5 — The bond market was irregularly higher at the end of 1933, despite appearance of weakness in the gilt-edged United States government securities.

Liberty bonds and treasury certificates broke late in the fall when the government started its gold-buying plan to boost price levels. This depreciated the dollar, but failed to raise commodity prices appreciably. Fears that a more direct form of inflation might be employed led to selling of the government group.

While inflationary fears were lulled to some extent by the triple over-subscription of the treasury's December 15 financing program, government bonds were hindered from rallying by a year-end firming of the money market and finished some 2 to 5 points lower than at the end of 1932.

The general list of domestic corporation bonds fluctuated widely, but was headed for higher prices as 1934 approached. Increasing signs of business improvement stimulated new investment buying.

Touched Lows

The market touched its lows for the year prior to and during the nationwide banking crisis in March when all classes of bonds were thrown on the market in a frantic effort of the banks to maintain the utmost liquidity.

When markets reopened on March 15 after a two-week shutdown during which the new administration straightened out the tangled banking situation, bonds began a forward movement which lasted until late in July. New highs since 1931 were touched on the rise, which was accelerated by business improvement cheap credit and plans of the government to raise price levels. A violent break in stocks and commodities terminated the rise in July and speculative bonds fell off sharply from their highs. Demand converged on United States government and other high grade bonds, which ruled steady until late in the year, when monetary developments reversed the trend. Speculative bonds, which had moved irregularly lower since July, firmed up.

Best Gains

Industrial corporation bonds, particularly those of steel, rubber and metal companies, showed the best gains at the end of the year. Railroad issues of the lower-priced speculative descriptions were sharply higher, advancing as much as about 30 points in some instances. Public utility bonds, with the exception of communication company issues, ruled lower on selling induced by fears of adverse legislation.

Foreign obligations were featured by sweeping gains late in the year in bonds of the European gold bloc countries, which soared as the dollar declined in terms of foreign exchange. French and Swiss loans were carried to new record highs. British and Japanese issues made wide gains and there was a substantial rally in Argentine bonds. German issues, which advanced early in the year when the Germans bought back large blocks of their dollar bonds and retired them, sold off with the advent to power of Adolf Hitler, but steadied as the year ended.

Leaning Tower of Pisa Reproduced

NILES, Ill., Jan. 5 — A reproduction in reduced size of one of the original seven wonders of the world, the leaning tower of Pisa, or Campanile Pendente, is a recent addition to the "wonders" of Illinois.

The tower, built in a private park here, is as accurate in detail as it could be made, even to the leaning.

It was constructed by Robert A. Iig, equipment manufacturer. Towering 94 feet in height, the structure leans out of the perpendicular seven feet and four inches, an effect achieved by copying one device used by the original builders to cause the tilt. This was the use of columns of varying heights on the seventh and eighth floor levels. Thirty-two tons of reinforcing steel were used in the replica which is 28 feet in diameter at the bottom. The original is of white marble and veruca stone while the reproduction contains 1,200 tons of concrete with columns made of precast stone. In contrast to the two centuries required for the erection of the original tower at Pisa, the Nile reproduction was built in less than a year. Delay in the building of the Pisa tower was said to have been partly due to discouragement caused by the repeated indications of the sinking of the foundation.
