Dr. Wynekoop, Near Collapse, Hears State Recite Charge

TRIAL BEGINS DESPITE BAD HEART ATTACK

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—As Dr. Alice Wynekoop watched with straining eyes, Assistant State's Attorney Charles Dougherty told a jury today how the state contends she had murdered her daughter-in-law, Rheta, and shot her in cold blood. Dr. Wynekoop nearly collapsed as defense Counsel W. W. Smith started his answer to the opening statement of the state in the woman's trial on murder. Although her attorneys protested strongly, Dr. Wynekoop insisted that the trial continue today despite a critical heart attack which might have meant she would not be able to survive. At the white-haired woman's side as she listened to the opening statement were two physicians. At 3 p. m. on the afternoon of January 21, Dougherty told the jury, "Dr. Wynekoop asked Rheta to go with her to the basement operating room in her home for a physical examination. Dr. Wynekoop told the girl to come and climb on the operating table. Dr. Wynekoop gave her a hypodermic of chloroform, rendering her unconscious. Then Dr. Wynekoop went to an adjoining room, took a revolver and shot Rheta Wynekoop to death. That is how she died. We are prepared to prove this to you."

GOVERNOR IS SILENT UPON LEGAL LIQUOR

AUSTIN, Jan. 15.—Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson's lips remained sealed today on prospects of legal liquor for Texas. She failed to answer an inquiry whether she will submit amendment of the Dean liquor law at a special session of the legislature. If she does, and the legislature agrees to amendments now proposed, it is believed Texans can legally have the same beverages that adjoining states enjoy under the repeal of national prohibition. The opportunity is offered in a variation between state constitutional prohibition and the state's prohibition law known as the "Dean law." The constitution prohibits only manufacture and sale and gives further regulation to the legislature. The Dean law prohibits possession and transportation. Asst. Attorney-general Hooper has been asked by liberal legislators for consideration of amendments to the Dean act which will permit transportation of liquor into Texas by regular agencies such as rail and motor lines.

Deadlocked when a single juror refused to accede to the view of the 11 others the jury was dismissed shortly after noon yesterday following 69 hours of deliberation. The count stood 11 to one for conviction. It was reliably reported that 11 of the jurors voted for death and the 12th held out for imprisonment for life. The period of deliberation was the longest on record in Haskell county.

Testifies He Burned Postal Records

"So I took them down to the furnace and destroyed them." A disclosure that may have wide-spread political consequences was thus made by James Maher, a postoffice department clerk, when, as shown here, he testified that he was ordered to burn the official and personal files of Walter F. Brown while he was postmaster-general in the Hoover cabinet. Maher appeared at the hearing before the senate committee which is investigating air mail contracts.

The committee will help cooperating farmers draw their contracts for cutting down the amount of acreage they will plant to cotton in 1934 and 1935 under the government's plan which offers them three and one-half cents per pound upon the average amount of lint cotton raised on the acreage retired during the five-year base period from 1928 to 1932, inclusive. A grower may retire as much as 40 per cent of his acreage in 1934 and 25 per cent of the same in 1935. If he has raised an average of 100 pounds of lint cotton per acre over the five year period, he will be paid $3.50 per acre. Mr. Boland explained. Payments will be made in two installments, the first half between March 1 and April 30, and the second between August 1 and September 30. In addition, about the first of December a parity payment of $2 per bale on the average production removed from planting will be paid. On the land which he removes he may plant feed stuffs for his stock or anything that is used at home. Nothing for sale, either directly or indirectly may be grown on this land, however. Taylor, Houston juvenile officer. He had laid down a shrimp-baited hook, preparatory to casting. An observing gull swooped down, picked up the shrimp and flapped away. LONG PROTESTS MOORE APPOINTMENT

Daniel D. Moore of New Orleans was named by the president to be collector of internal revenue in Louisiana. Kingfish Long is offering strenuous opposition to the confirmation of Moore.

Moore is not "personally obnoxious" to Sen. Tom Connally. Connally is a member of the senate finance committee before which the Moore nomination is pending.

A sub-committee of the senate finance committee will handle the Moore case. It is composed of Sen. Alvan Barkley of Kentucky and Sen. Harry Byrd of Virginia.

Texas Topics

By RAYMOND BROOKS

AUSTIN, Jan. 15 — Texas election laws are in such a jumble that in at least one instance voters are given the right to cast their ballots several days before it is officially determined what names will be on the ballots.

The primary nomination system, as finally worked out by Texas legislators, makes it entirely possible for the backers of one candidate to organize and control party machinery while the other candidate is elected as party leader.

One of the freaks of anomalies of the state primary nominating system is that a party platform upon which in theory a candidate goes to the people, is not made until after the candidate is elected by the people.

Nomination in the primary has been equivalent to election so long that it is an accepted conclusion. The result is that the individual campaign platform of a winning candidate, no matter how much hokum it contains for vote-getting purposes, is solemnly promulgated after the fact as a party commitment for legislation and administrative guidance.

IN CONFERENCE

UNDER THE DOME AT AUSTIN

By GORDON K. SHEARER United Press Staff Correspondent AUSTIN, Jan. 15 — Rep. George W. Winningham, Mexia, is busily engaged in organizing an anti-sales tax bloc for the expected second session of the 43rd legislature.

If a special tax is needed to take care of the relief bonds, Winningham said, he favors a tax on labor saving machinery. It causes unemployment and should be taxed to support unemployed, he argues.

Now that the U. S. supreme court has ruled that a Minnesota moratorium on farm foreclosures does not violate the constitutional guarantee of contract rights, an early setting of Texas moratorium cases is expected to be made by the state supreme court.

Automobile insurers may begin to use the universal forms now. They must do so by July 1.

Texas legislators who have been waging a utility regulation as a matter of concern only to members from cities and towns should see figures compiled by the U. S. bureau of the census. Electric companies have consumers on 6,329 Texas farms who pay an average of $109 a year for service. The average rate being 35 cents per kilowatt hour.

Attorney-general James V. Alford has dodged the first difficult question put to him since announcing his candidacy for governor. At Port Isabel he was asked to rule which of two fishermen caught the first carpenter. The point was whether the fisherman who first hooked a tarpon or the one who got a bite later but landed his fish first, made the first catch.

Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson has asked for a general display of the flag of the Confederacy on Gen. Robert E. Lee's birth anniversary, Jan. 19. A proclamation asking the observance in honor both of Lee and those who "gave all that they had" to the cause of the Confederacy has been issued.

French Gamble on American Dollar

PARIS, Jan. 15 — Parisians are the newest recruits to the ranks of speculators in the exchange and particularly those who are gambling on dollar quotations. Officials of exchange bureaus and branch banks around the Bourse report an increasing number of French men and women, buying and selling dollars, francs, sterling, or florins, guessing on the next day's exchange rates.

While today's gambling by all types of middle-classes in France does not materially affect the exchange quotations, as it involves not more than a few million francs, it is recognized as a curious change in a nation of eminently prudent, thrifty citizens. It also is peculiar that so many of these small gamblers are women, who for centuries have held rigid control of the family purse.

Hunt nodded, and as the girl slipped upstair to change, she observed with satisfaction that the two men were deep in conversation. "We've got to run," Sue announced, scandalized by the lateness of the hour and the girl twin's announcement that tea was imminent.

"No, but I want you to myself some time, you know that," he grumbled, laying his young cheek against her glowing round one.

Did You Ever Stop to Think?

By EDSON E. WAITS Shawnee, Oklahoma.

There seems to be a lot of talk about a "constant" dollar, or literally a dollar which will always buy the same amount of goods, whether it be bread, socks or an automobile. We frankly admit at the outset that the whole thing is a mystery to us. For such a phenomenon, however, it appears to us that all commodities would have to remain constant and this in view of the innumerable factors—both natural and artificial—affecting commodities in various parts of the country, seems to us as an impossibility unless the intention is to close America to all outside influences or connections and the states to deal only among themselves. Even then, there are forces of nature which may bring about a scarcity of one or other of the commodities and thus engender the necessity for more dollars with which to purchase it.

In days of old, our politicians refrained from rushing in where angels feared to tread, but now things are different. In the old days the price of commodities fluctuated with demand or scarcity, but this was in obedience to a natural law and all from manufacturer to consumer—was prepared for it.

Today the professors and politicians are keeping everybody guessing whether the money they have worked hard for will be worth enough to pay their bills—or what it will be worth. This is not the road to contentment for the man who has a few dollars saved.

RELIEF CHIEF TASK OF "MA" DURING YEAR

By GORDON K. SHEARER United Press Staff Correspondent AUSTIN, Jan. 15 — Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson has had unemployment relief as the chief task of the year in office which she will round out on January 17.

High spot of popularity alternate with depressing blows to a governor's pride as the first year of her second administration of Texas affairs is viewed in retrospect.

Ushered in with a gala ball in the huge gymnasium of the University of Texas, taxed to hold those who came to do her honor, the early days of her office were marked by a mad scramble for jobs. For weeks the governor's office was packed with long-waiting applicants. There was no let-up until her husband angrily scoured them from the office saying their importunities left the governor no time for her work.

A legislature which proved hostile to some of her cherished measures already was in session when she took office. An early attempt to pass a sales tax crumbled before an unyielding opposition. The governor's husband and adviser carried the attack personally to the house revenue committee, only to fail.

In the senate the governor was meeting an even more personal rebuff. Frank Denison, former business associate of her husband and a former road contractor, failed to get confirmation from the senate when she named him for state highway commission chairman. Submission of a beer amendment to the state constitution, a provision for a beer bill, a race track betting bill and legalized prize fighting were measures of the legislative session. With them went submission of an amendment to permit $20,000,000 state relief bonds, and moratorium acts.

The legislature adjourned June 1. Within a week Mrs. Ferguson failed to receive an invitation to breakfast with Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt in Dallas and was again in the public eye, nationally, snubbed.

James E. Ferguson hurried off to Washington, interviewed national leaders, returned with glowing accounts of how they received him there and launched a fight to make himself head of the state relief forces. Apparently successful after a bitter fight, he suddenly withdrew his name as prospective chairman of the welfare convention and nominated C. C. McDonald.

Election of the repeal delegates to the state ratification convention and passage of the bread bonds by a large margin again brightened the political aura of the Ferguson.

The period of brilliance was short-lived. Mrs. Ferguson convened the legislature Sept. 14 to issue bond bonds. Almost immediately they began a revealing investigation, alleged relief administration abuses. Bonds were authorized for one-fourth of the total and the governor's power was greatly curtailed in setting up a new relief commission.

Before adjourning the house a committee at work investigating recurring tales of sales of state property by Ferguson supporters, collecting funds, which witnesses construed as contributions with a view to getting jobs, made a voluminous record.

On Nov. 29, 1933, Mrs. Ferguson sent an announcement to the capitol press room. In it she said: "In language of a distinguished statesman, I do not choose to say: 'Seven years in the governor's chair I termed 'enough honor for my family.'"

Married Flirts

BEGIN HERE TODAY GYPSY MORELL and TOM WEAVER are married the same day as LILA HOTALING and DEREK BLISS. Lila expects to live in luxury, while Gypsy intends to go on with her job, teaching in a settlement house. After returning from her honeymoon in Europe, Lila invites the Weavers to dinner. Among the guests is wealthy HARKO BLOCHGREN, who once asked Gypsy to marry him. He shows her with attentions which she accepts because she is jealous of Tom's interest in HELDA BLANCHARD. After the party Tom and Gypsy quarrel, but peace is later restored. They spend most of their weeks with Gypsy's parents in a New Jersey suburb.

"How's it going?" Gypsy asked. Derek smiled, "I'm running them ragged."

The hall was full of the scent of wood fire as they came in, rosy and glowing from the heat of doors. Gypsy's hand was linked in Tom's. It was one of those times to be looked back upon in life later with gratitude and wonderment, when two human hearts were perfectly in accord. But their moment was short lived. The hall was full of life and color and movement. Sue Canavan, her red curls crackling, her slim figure smartly set off by the blue wool frock she wore, came forward and greeted them gayly. "We were just about to leave—we had given you two wanderers up for good."

The tall man looming at her side was someone Gypsy had not seen before. He had a lean, humorous face; crazy brows over slate gray eyes that seemed to see everything. Gypsy liked his handclasp. It was firm and cool and assured. His hair was beginning to gray at the temples, making him look older than his years. Gypsy had heard Sue speak of Hunt Gibson before this. He had been described as "a forty-seventh cousin." But they had not met before. Hunt, Sue was now explaining volubly, was just home from Singapore and points east.

"Engineer" Tom inquired, with a shade of respect in his voice. Gypsy caught the note, remembering that it had been Tom's ambition to be a mining expert, before his father had died, leaving him to fend for himself, putting the possibility of further college years out of the question.

Hunt nodded, and as the girl slipped upstair to change, she observed with satisfaction that the two men were deep in conversation. "We've got to run," Sue announced, scandalized by the lateness of the hour and the girl twin's announcement that tea was imminent.

"No, but I want you to myself some time, you know that," he grumbled, laying his young cheek against her glowing round one.

SHE considered this. "I'll go along right now, if you say so," she began. Perhaps she was too insistent upon family ties. Tom himself had no mother or father, and so she didn't know what it felt like to be submerged by one's in-laws. Rosina they seldom saw, as the claims of a large and growing family held her in her own particular groove.

"You're never that!" She was indignant. "I won't have you calling yourself names."

"You bet your life I didn't!" he drawled, staring down at the girl beside him. Gypsy felt a queer little impulse of withdrawal; then, deciding she was imagining things, smiled warmly back at him. Just because you were married was scarcely good reason for refusing to be friends with another man. And there was no doubt about it—this young stranger was liking her tremendously. No matter what she said, no matter what she did, he applauded.

"She's cute," he told the assembled company, with his three-cornered grin. "Cute little girl, isn't she?"

"This is fun!" Hunt Gibson was at Gypsy's right. She smiled at him, liking the lean ranginess of him. He was far from handsome, this engineer from the remote places of the earth, but there was something definitely attractive about him, Gypsy decided. He had a way of talking slantly out of the side of his mouth; and his stories were delightful.

"Bet you didn't have anything like this in Afghanistan," Sue challenged, leaning across the table.

"You bet your life I didn't!" he drawled, staring down at the girl beside him. Gypsy felt a queer little impulse of withdrawal; then, deciding she was imagining things, smiled warmly back at him. Just because you were married was scarcely good reason for refusing to be friends with another man. And there was no doubt about it—this young stranger was liking her tremendously. No matter what she said, no matter what she did, he applauded.

"We honestly must be getting back to town?"

She raised her dark eyes to his smilingly. "No, we live in the city, East Fifties."

"Rotten night to start out," he nodded indicated the drifting snow against the windows.

"Isn't it? But it'll be better going now than starting out in the morning. And I have a job."

"You!" He seemed vastly amused. "So you're one of the modern young women, too?"

The tone nettled her, she couldn't have said why. "You've been away from civilization so long," she said him negligently. "that you've forgotten how these things are done..."

HIS great laugh rang out, and Tom Weaver, across the room moved one of his pink "men" to spaces and wondered what the chap could be talking about.

"Gypsy tossed her head. "Ah, he does. I'm proving it."

BELGIUM, LIKE FRANCE, ARMS ITS FRONTIERS

By SAMUEL DASHIELL
 United Press Staff Correspondent
 PARIS, January 15—Belgium is following France, and, mindful of the invasion of 1914, soon will rest more securely behind a formidable wall of concrete and steel facing Germany.

Agitation has been continuous in Belgium for modern fortresses, similar to the almost impassable chain that now protects France, and a definite plan has been accepted, which is considered the most impregnable in Europe.

Inasmuch as the defenses of both France and Belgium are almost interdependent, in the event of invasion from Germany, accords were discussed between the two countries since the termination of the last war.

In 1921, France signed with Belgium a military defensive pact, and the various treaties and agreements concluded since never have affected the validity of this original pact.

Plans Took Shape
 Although a defensive accord had been drawn up between France and Belgium, it was not until 1930 that defense plans took shape. Then the general staff found itself facing two separate plans.

The first plan was that of General Gallet, and bore his name. Gallet's plan was in case of war almost immediately to evacuate the three Walloon provinces near the German frontier and retire systematically to Flanders.

The second plan, that of Generals Maglaine and Hellebaut, called for complete defense of these frontier provinces and for integral protection of all Belgian territory from any direction. The larger plan of not abandoning one-third of the country naturally anticipated a close co-operation with the French, according to the treaty of 1921.

In 1931, these two theories were so violently agitating Belgium that one ministry fell, and Premier Jaspard retired, having tacitly supported Gallet's plan.

Definite Policy
 The Renkin cabinet, which followed, voted 210 million francs for other in the Renkin cabinet until the present Minister, Albert Deveze, was appointed; then a definite defense policy was crystallized.

His first act was to create a modern fort at Eyben-Eymael on the Albert Canal, east of Liege, which today is the most formidable block against any movement of troops from the east. Minister Deveze created a defense committee and it worked out the project for a ring of concrete and steel which not only would block the path of oncoming Germany to Belgium, but would check the invasion of France via Belgium, thereby winning warmest support from Europe.

The Defense Minister Deveze also started the fortification of the Plateau of Herve, which serves many railroads and acts as a corridor for passage into Belgium from Cologne and Aix-la-Chapelle.

Goose Creek Will Ask Junior College

GOOSE CREEK, Jan. 15.—Establishment of a junior college here will be sought at the state board of education meeting in Austin January 29.

Petitions signed by 284 residents of the independent Goose Creek school district asked that the junior college district be created and that an election be called to vote a tenth of a mill levy (10 cents on $100) to maintain the college for the first year. Valuations of the district are estimated at $22,398,508.

Sponsors of the movement for the college believe that $25,000 will be enough to purchase needed equipment and pay operation costs the first year. Tuitions from students outside the district would supplement the revenue from taxation.

Many people in the district seek post-graduate at the high school but are denied entrance because of crowded conditions. It was set out in the petitions. Plans are to hold the junior college classes in the high school building after regular school hours.

WALL STREET IS STILL WAITING UPON CONGRESS

In its weekly review of business and financial conditions The Wall Street Journal says:

A business fare which provides definite encouragement to those constructively inclined served to furnish a background for a small forward movement, but uncertainty as to what the congressional session may bring forth in the way of regulatory legislation had a restraining influence.

Conversations in Washington between the president and his monetary advisers, centering about devaluation of the dollar, attracted major Wall street attention last week. Devaluation is quite well recognized would furnish the basis for a very large expansion in credit, but the supply of credit already is large and there is no assurance that a move which would increase it enormously would force an expansion in its use.

So far congressional activities have not been calculated to influence the markets importantly in either direction. Passage of the $2 a gallon liquor tax was a foregone conclusion, and the other items on the agenda of congress for the near future are not of major immediate monetary matters should bring forth interesting material. Wall street still is waiting for some indication of the temper of congress in regard to the securities markets.

Rising prices for bonds and buoyancy in the commodities markets helped stocks in the week just closed. As long as those two markets show strength, and the trend of business holds, the financial community does not look for any major reaction in stocks. Railroad traffic started the new year in good style the loadings for the week ended January 6 constituting a larger percentage of the 15-year average than for any week in 1933. Electric output figures were good, and retail business is at a better rate than in the corresponding period of 1933.

Steel operations in the past week held steady and about double what they were in the corresponding week of 1933. While some of the companies specializing in the lighter articles are producing material for stock in anticipation of an increased demand before the end of next month, the leading interests are credited with keeping their output about in line with the shipping requests of their customer.

Following is the range of the Dow-Jones averages:

	High	Low	Last
30 Industrials	$99.77	$96.73	$98.73
20 Railroads	42.01	39.97	41.71
20 Utilities	24.83	22.42	24.33
40 Bonds	86.45	84.73	86.45

AUSTRALIA IS RECOVERING FROM SLUMP

By LEE WILLSON
United Press Staff Correspondent
LONDON, Jan. 15 — Australia in 1931 was in desperate straits. That country today is far advanced on the road to financial and economic recovery.

The southernmost member of the British commonwealth of nations was one of the first countries in the world to feel the full effect of the economic upheaval.

In 1928-29 Australia enjoyed a considerable measure of prosperity. Prices for her exportable surplus of products were satisfactory, even though they were then 27 per cent below the peak prices of 1924-25. Her export and import trade in commodities was balanced at approximately 145 million, and she was able to meet her obligations for external public and private interest of some 30 million by the amount she was able to borrow for developmental works.

At the end of 1929 in the face of the drop in world prices Australia was not in a position to continue buying large quantities of goods overseas if she was to pay her debts. This was especially so because of the cessation of public and private interest. So the external adjustment necessitated not only the wiping out of an adverse trade balance of over 30 million for the year ending June 30, 1930, but provision had to be made for interest and other obligations overseas of approximately the same amount.

For the year 1931-32 the volume of exports was one-third greater than for the year 1928-29 the value of the exports of merchandise was 138 million, in 1931-32 it amounted to only 75 million.

Drastic Action
With such a drop in the value of exports, Australia was faced with the necessity for drastic restriction of imports and a general revision of the internal position. Premiers of the commonwealth and state met, drew up a plan, and put it into immediate action.

The results of two-years operation of the plan clearly justify the policy, for the overseas credit of the country now stands higher than it ever did. When the plan was put into operation, the estimated aggregate deficit of the commonwealth and states for 1931-32 was 40 million. This was reduced to 20 million, the commonwealth actually showing a surplus of $6,500,000. During the year ended June 30, 1933, the actual aggregate deficit of the commonwealth and states (which includes the deficit on the railways) was $25,320,000, the commonwealth having a surplus of $17,500,000. And this surplus was obtained despite the fact that during the year $5,000,000 of taxation was remitted and $12,500,000 provided from revenue for the relief of primary producers.

$365,000 Paid by Humble to Kill Well

CONROE, Jan. 15 — Humble Oil and Refining company paid out $365,000 to kill the crater well of Conroe oil field, a high official of the company estimated, to save oil valued at approximately $300,000,000.

Humble gave Jim Abercrombie and Dan Harrison, Houston independent operators, $300,000 for the privilege of attempting to shut off the uncontrolled flow of their "ruined" Alexander No. 1 well. Drilling a relief well through which water was pumped into the oil sand to stop the crater well's flow cost $52,000. Safety measures cost $10,000, and H. John Eastman, California griller who diverted the relief well diagonally to the bottom of the crater well, was paid a $3,000 fee.

A company geologist feared the 600,000,000 barrel reserve in the field would be ruined by the crater well but that half of it had been saved by shutting-in of the Alexander No. 1. With oil at $111 a barrel the computed saving of the field is $300,000,000.

The ruined well brought its owners about $1,500,000 in oil which bubbled over the crater's rim, and the fee paid by Humble to kill it.

Beer Licenses in Houston Decrease

HOUSTON, Jan. 15 — There will be less beer consumed in Harris county if the decrease in the number of establishments selling it is any indication.

A third of the 994 places selling beer at the close of 1933 failed to renew their licenses for the new year, according to records at the courthouse.

However, Tax Collector J. W. Hall believes that with return of summer months more licenses will be purchased.
