KEEPING A CLEAN HOUSE

The Roosevelt pronouncement against the practice of high democratic party officials combining law practice in the national capital presents another concept of the high character of the democratic party's mission as viewed by the president. The attitude will hardly meet with the approval of many practical politicians, who hold the "spoils" theory of political power dear.

SECTIONAL CRITICISM

One section is always inclined to minimize the dangerous character of the other's criminals, implying a feeling of pride in its own, and telling the other how to handle its bad men. Thus New York's commissioner of corrections scoffs at Clyde Barrow, calling his crimes "frontier stuff" easier to meet than racketeering.

Neither Clyde Barrow nor Mr. MacCormick's gangsters are desirable elements of modern society. A bullet from the gun of a city gangster will kill just as dead as the bullet from the gun of Clyde Barrow.

There was no more reason for urban Mr. MacCormick to make the criticism he did than for a chauvinistic Texan to claim that New York's gangs or Chicago gangs are so many children with toy pistols whom one Texas ranger could clean up in a few hours.

As for Barrow and his ilk they never last long. They will be brought to account either at the muzzle of a dead-end gun or before the stern bar of a court.

try has every reason to have complete confidence, he feels, since consumption will hold up, and the fields whose flush stages came together will not last forever.

All of which is conservative enough to indicate that, at last, the industry is thinking aloud honestly and not merely talking to build up a superficial confidence in the forlorn hope that it may be the final push to set an immovable ball to rolling. Indeed, there are signs of awakening in our own area.

SAID THE WISE OLD OWL---

Through the Editor's Spectacles

By GEORGE

I want to take advantage of my prerogative in this column today to pay tribute to a friend of mine who is one of the "stick-to-it-ist" fellows I have ever known. He is H. G. Bailey.

All you had to do to get an object lesson in the rewards of patience and grit was to invite the obstinate House—who can talk more and faster than Levin Cobb—to your home, set him in front of a bowl of chili on a cold night and listen. The words would flow.

Now 'Cowboy' Evans is a great character and an ornament to the gallant profession of the wildcatter for oil—that doughy pioneer of the subterranean world whose drill is as restless as his spirit and whose heart is as light as his courage is undaunted.

But had House known Bailey he would be equally complimentary. If instead of fortune were wealth Bailey could buy the Rockefeller fortune with the pin money he gives his wife.

I don't know the number, but he must have drilled about 40 different holes. As fast as one was completed without success, he and his partner would shove off on a new venture.

Some day, that fellow is going to strike. You can't get around that kind of stuff. It pays dividends in any language.

Cisco people will learn with regret of the passing of W. A. Myrick, of Lubbock, who has been instrumental in several major commercial enterprises here, notably the Lake Cisco Amusement company and the Laguna hotel.

A very able and resourceful business man, Mr. Myrick was fighting a slowly successful battle to recoup losses in the depression which struck his estate at a period of ambitious expansion. He was a hard fighter and his interests here involved him in local municipal political disaffection when the depression caused a shakeup in the former order.

The fact that Mr. Myrick saw a valuable resource of the character in the lake area is an important fact to consider in connection with your memories of him.

Nature and Human Nature

Lucky Stars

At milking time of a morning Jupiter almost overhead, and as I milk of an evening Venus half way up the western sky, two neighboring earths, look as if they would like to break the silence and exchange a friendly word.

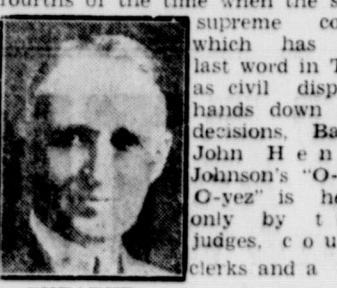

Since man has always felt that the stars influence his fortune perhaps it is more than a superstition. After all superstitions may be kernels of truth coated over with superficial fancies and ignorant fears.

UNDER THE DOME AT AUSTIN

By GORDON K. SHEARER

United Press Staff Correspondent AUSTIN, Jan 18—Texas' most important court has the smallest attendance at its sittings. Three fourths of the time when the state supreme court, which has the last word in Texas civil disputes, hands down its decisions, Bailiff John Henry Johnson's "O-yez O-yez" is heard only by the judges, clerks and a few newspapermen.

GORDON K. SHEARER

Not since former Gov. Ross S. Sterling challenged the nomination of Mrs. Miriam A. Ferguson to succeed him, has the little court room been filled when a case was being argued. When the case was decided there were but a few present.

The supreme court sits on the third floor of the state capitol. Usually it meets on Wednesday. Uncertainty about the time when the nine judges may be expected to file into the court room and take their places behind its long desk may have something to do with the lack of attendance.

Whatever the reason the court is almost entirely without what the movie magnates call "box office" appeal.

Across the hall the state court of criminal appeals has bigger audiences. It is a supreme court in cases involving crime. One reason for its greater attendance is that it combines hearing of arguments and an ouncement of decisions at the same session.

Of course the judges do not decide cases on the same day they are argued. The decisions announced are those in cases that may have been argued a week or months before. Rulings are first announced, then a docket of arguments is called.

Frequently relatives of defendants attend to hear the arguments for new trials. Relatives seldom come to hear the decisions.

Announcement of the decisions is double checked as the court sits. Alternating from left to right, the five judges in turn announce the rulings in cases that have been assigned to them. As the announcement is made, Judge W. C. Morrow presiding, checks the entry in his docket. When he announces his cases, Judge O. S. Lattimore checks the court docket.

Assignment of a case to a judge does not mean that he alone decides it. He writes an opinion and submits it to all of the others. If all agree it becomes a court opinion. If the judges do not agree, a minority opinion may be filed. A minority opinion has no effect in preventing the judgment but preserves that judge's view of the law.

State Senator Albert Stone of Brenham, County Judge Sam Low and Sheriff H. L. Reese of Washington county all reached the state capitol last week brushed but happy over escape from serious hurts when Sheriff Reese's automobile overturned while they were riding in it from Brenham to Austin. Low is a former state legislator. He served in the 33rd, 34th, 35th, 37th and 39th legislatures.

Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson has appointed Henry C. Meyer, former mayor of Rockdale, for a full six-year term on the state board of control. Meyer already was serving on the board to fill out the unexpired term of Adrian Pool, El Paso, who resigned to become U. S. Collector of Customs.

James V. Alred is fast acquiring fame in a new role. He now known as the "rhyming" official. Verses telling of the varied cases made upon a state attorney-general have been written by Alred. He recently recited them to the entertainment of the San Marcos Kiwanis club.

Judge O. S. Lattimore of the state court of criminal appeals starts his friends with the announcement that he is 60 years old this morning. He looks at least 10 years less. He can outwalk, outstare, outlast and outwork most youngsters. "I have done anything to injure my body," he said when asked his secret for continuing youth. He has smoked and never tasted whiskey. He has missed attendance at but one Baptist General convention of the state since the one held at Marshall in 1894. In public life he has risen from county attorney at Fort Worth to the bench in the state's highest court in criminal cases.

"A prophet is not without honor but in his own country."

One of the big plums of the first administration fell to a Texas so little known in Texas that a dozen state officials couldn't find him. He was Wright Matthews, Palestine, appointed deputy commissioner of internal revenue by President Roosevelt.

Matthews has been living in Washington so long that his home of fame here can be understood. He was acting assistant to Commissioner Guy T. Helvering at the time of his appointment. Miss Lois Johnson, a resident of Palestine, enlightens newspaper men about who Matthews is.

Married Flirts

BEGIN HERE TODAY

GYPSEY MORELL and TOM WEAVER are waiting for the day as LILA HOVALING and DEBKIE BLISS. Lila expects to live in luxury while Gypsy tends to go on with her job, teaching in a settlement school.

After returning from her honeymoon in Europe Lila invites the Weavers to dinner. Among the guests will be MARIO BIRCHINGTON, who once asked Gypsy to marry him. He shows her with attention which she accepts because she is jealous of Tom's flirt with BILLY BLANCHARD. After the party Tom and Gypsy quarrel, but peace is later restored.

Shopping for Christmas, Gypsy meets Broughton who offers her a job cataloging his library and gives her an advance payment of $50. She uses the money to buy Tom's Christmas present, a watch.

Tom and Gypsy spend Christmas at the Morell home. Throughout the evening, Tom is troubled by the fact that Tom does not know about her work for Broughton and that if he were to be sure to disapprove.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XIV

MRS. WEAVER was expected, Mr. Broughton's man-servant said, quietly. There was something about his matter-of-factness that calmed Gypsy's nerves. Of course it was all right! Why shouldn't she work for Marko? He knew she had dabbled in library work before she had gone into the Settlement.

What she had expected, exactly. In the way of a reception, she could not say. Only this quiet, high-ceiled room, with its dark Bokhara rugs, its wood paneling, its shelf on shelf of volumes, was distinctly reassuring. She gave the man her hat and coat and gloves. She ran her hand over her unruly curls. Gypsy looked rather like a little girl today in her dark green jersey frock with its demure white collar.

Then she forgot herself, her surroundings, her nervousness, in the serious business of her task. It was fascinating. Marko's books themselves were that! She lost herself in the absorbing work. She climbed the ladder a dozen times. She sat at the typewriter the man had disclosed, cleverly hidden in one corner of the mammoth walnut desk. She listed and rubbed out and listed again.

She was aroused by a footfall on the deep rugs. Looking up, startled at the interruption, she saw Marko. "My dear child!" His gentle tone betokened surprise, and Gypsy flushed.

"I quite forgot the time," Gypsy stammered, her eyes on the crystal clock face nearby. It was half past five! And she had meant to leave at five at the very latest. She had said something casual to Tom about shopping. But she had meant to be home early enough to get dinner. Dinah was "off" tonight. Now she would be too late.

"Ah, you mustn't run away like this," Marko protested, mildly. "Bates will shake us up a cocktail... or you may have tea, if you'd prefer."

Gypsy's one thought was to rush away, to get back to the apartment. Yet she didn't want to offend Marko. She said something vague about a dinner engagement.

"Oh, quite, quite," drawled Marko. "Another time, perhaps."

He wasn't in the least the satyr type, Gypsy reflected, pulling on her little hat. He was just kind, friendly, generous. She would have to have an understanding with him about the $50 though. They would have to come to some entirely businesslike arrangement.

But when she spoke of this, Marko waved it aside. "Nonsense," he boomed. "That was merely a retainer. If you do the work as well as I know you will, that amount will only be a drop in the bucket."

He saw her to the door, pressing her hand gently. She was a treat to any one's eyes, he told her fulsomely. She quite lightened up his lonely home. But then everybody knew Marko's gallantries. They were just the casual coin of every day. He was like that to everyone!

Gypsy rode down in the elevator with the sense of being released. She must rush home to Tom now, inventing an excuse for her late return.

She took a trolley bound southward and it seemed fairly to crawl, stopping at every corner, starting again with painful jerks. Gypsy's nerves were taut. At last she alighted at her own corner and turned east. A sharp wind was blowing up from the river and she shivered, buffeting it with her slim figure. She tried vainly to determine whether or not her own apartment windows were lighted but in the darkness she could not be sure. She was conscious now of an intense fatigue, sharpened by her growing sense of nervousness.

Reluctantly she inserted her key in the lock. Was Tom home? And if so, what was she going to say to him?

But the door swung into a darkened room. Gypsy drew a long breath of relief. Doubtless he'd been kept at the office.

She switched on the alabaster lamp on the drop-leaf table and stood, irresolute, for a moment. What to do now? Should she wait and see what Tom's plans for the evening were; or should she telephone the grocer at once and order things for a late dinner? She decided on the latter course and, with a kind of wild reaction after her needless fears of awkward explanations, rushed out, setting the table, making everything gay and fresh against his return.

The clock struck seven. The grocer's boy, bearing chops and vegetables and materials for salad, had come and gone. Now it was half past seven. It was eight. And still no Tom. Gypsy's mood of exultant relief waned—changed to indignation, to apprehension.

She put the food back in the ice-box. She had thought she was hungry, but now the very thought of food sickened her. She went to the telephone and with trembling fingers dialed the number of his office. As she had expected, there was no answer. Of course, no one was working at this hour.

THE moments lagged by. Nine o'clock. Half past ten. At five minutes past ten when Gypsy, all silver with worry, paced the floor of the living room, Tom's key was inserted and the door swung wide. Gypsy ran to greet him. "Darling, wherever have you been? I've been so worried..."

She stopped. Tom looked so strange. He strode past her. His eyes were glazed. He was pale. Her heart plunged, her throat thickened. Had he heard, then? Did he know about her pact with Marko?

But Tom's first words dispelled at least a little of her fears. "Sorry, dearest," he said dully, and then stopped. Gypsy stared at him curiously. How strange his voice was, and how odd he looked! His overcoat was soiled, too. It looked as if it had been in contact with the pavement.

"Were you hurt, darling?" she prompted. "I've been simply frantic. I was just on the point of calling the hospitals..."

He said, in that unfamiliar, dragging voice, that he wasn't hurt—what gave her the idea—but he was detained.

"Unavoidably detained," said Tom with dignity.

Struck by a new, stabbing suspicion, Gypsy gazed at him. He—no, he couldn't be—drunk. Tom never drank to excess.

"We went to Simms' Club," he said slowly. "We were playing cards. We got to talking. 'Fraid I didn't notice the time."

"And all the time I was worrying, eating my heart out, frightened to death," Gypsy said with indignation. "Oh, Tom, how could you?"

She was wounded past bearing. This was an unfamiliar person sitting there in her pleasant living room. She just didn't know him. Forgotten was her relief a few hours before, on discovering she had reached home before him. All other emotions were swallowed in a desperate fury at his callous indifference to her feelings.

Tom knew he couldn't afford to play cards with Simms all his crowd. He had virtually pushed to give it up, long before the marriage.

"You lost!" she accused with calm. "Oh, Tom, you lost, did you?"

HE nodded, dully, his eyes on his linked fingers. Of course he had lost. He felt a slow, dull sort of indignation at her for having guessed. Why else should he have stayed so late, except that he hoped to see back what had gone before?

Gypsy sat down on one end of the daybed. She felt sick. She had been beaten. To try so hard to get ahead to work and plan and save so proudly, and then to have Tom have like this—it was past bearing.

She shook her head, dumb with the injustice of it. Tom looked at her with a gray face. If he hadn't let Simms fill his glass so often, he'd explain to Gypsy now, tell her just why it was he wanted that money. It was for her—for her alone!

But Gypsy's face was cold, closed to him. Without a word he stripped the gayly laid tablecloth, folded the cloth, brushed a wash-silk left him scrubbed, without a word bathed meticulously. She told herself her heart was quite, quite dead. And she had been feeling so so utterly dependent on Tom before. She had thought, as the dreadful trolley car ploughed toward, she would tell Tom all about her work in Marko's library and how she had managed to buy that Christmas watch. She had decided that there should be no secrets between them. It made her so happy to share everything, good and bad, with him.

Now everything was changed. Everything, she told herself indignantly. Tom had betrayed her trust. He had not only forsaken her completely, he had lost money that belonged to them both. She had worked for it, as well as she. There was simply no justice in this. Deliberately she closed her eyes to his possible motives. The days were these: he had been drinking and gambling all day, while she had been pulling her weight in the boat.

Nothing, said Gypsy, would be the same again. Tom stopped at the daybed that night. She looked at her door against him.

TEXAS COACH IS DYNAMIC PERSONALITY

(Special to the News)
By DICK WEST

AUSTIN, Jan. 19.—Jack Chevigny is the new University of Texas football coach—probably the most talked-of man in the state today. The Athletic Council has indeed made a wise selection in this son of Notre Dame, a school which instills in its players a spirit lasting forever.

From the moment that this Herculean youth walked out on the floor of Gregory gymnasium between the halves of the Texas-Baylor basketball game and electrified 6,000 spectators with his dynamic spirit of elocution, he has won the hearts of Longhorn supporters.

With the enunciation of William Jennings Bryan and the gestures of Clarence Darrow, Chevigny replied thus to his introduction by Regent Beauford Jester: "It is my ambition to see the flag of Texas unfurled at the top of the great institutions of this land. I will concentrate every effort in building a football team that is representative of this great institution."

With that he bowed a graciously as an English lord, and walked to the sidelines while the Longhorn band played uproariously and students cheered wildly for five minutes.

The writer had the good opportunity of being one of the few invited to the first convocation between Chevigny and his prospects for the coming season. The following is the substance of his "inaugural address." It was short, to the point precise, but replete with the idealism and pragmatism that characterizes Jack.

CUBS TO TAKE SQUAD OF ONLY 25 TO CATALINA

By GEORGE KIRKSEY
United Press Staff Correspondent
CHICAGO, Jan. 19.—When the Chicago Cubs gather at their Catalina Island training camp in March they will be only two players over mid-season major league limit of 25. The Cubs' squad of 25 will be one of the smallest any major league team will assemble for spring practice.

"You and Me"
"You have no idea of the job that we have to face, fellows, just you and me. We have to build from the ground up—learning fundamentals. Hours mean nothing to me. What I want is perfection as far as possible in this game, and what I'm asking from you is cooperation to get this."

"Effort is the main thing. I do not care if a man is on the fifth team, he will have just as good a chance as the regular to break into the following game if he gives me effort all the time. Hilliard and Coates have told me already that if anyone can beat them out they are ready to be displaced. That is the spirit. It is a spirit of do or die—a competitive spirit that will go with you through your lives."

He then emphasized the need of quick-thinking players. The basic elements of the winner are desired. Nobody wants to see a loser.

"Out of you fellows assembled here I shall pick the best eleven men that work as a unit. No one will tell me whom to play. If my judgment is wrong, then it is just too bad; it will be my fault."

"Please come to me with your problems; if it is in the middle of the night, I'll work just as diligently to solve them. Remember I'm one of you now. Let's cooperate. We've got work to do."

Such a man is Jack Chevigny the man whom Knute Rockne thought enough of to make him his first assistant, the producer of Carideo Brill, Savoldi, and Mullins. He places idealism and character above carnality. When you have been with him for five minutes, you feel like you have known him always. It is just his nature.

FOOTPRINT OF TIME

BARTON Vt., Jan. 19.—P. W. Damon was clearing the ledges at the Crystal Lake granite quarries, when he discovered beneath two feet of earth that had not been removed for centuries, a granite boulder with a human foot print an inch deep in the surface.

Black-Draught For Gas After Meals

"About five years ago, I suffered at my stomach quite a good deal," writes Mr. M. H. Venable, of Persia, Tenn. "I would smother, have a lot of gas, and bloat. A friend asked me why I didn't take Black-Draught. I took little doses after meals and my stomach trouble was over and has not come back. Now I only take a dose every once in a while."

MERCHANTS..

make TONIGHT'S WINDOW SHOPPERS
TOMORROW'S CUSTOMERS

Is your show window and store lighting adequate? Our Lighting Engineer will be glad to measure your lighting and tell you how it can be made to compare with scientific standards for stores of your class—all without any obligation on your part. A telephone call will bring him at your convenience. Make your appointment right now.

Tonight hundreds of strollers will pass your door. If you have well-lighted windows, many of them will stop and look at the merchandise on display. Some of them will see articles that they want, and will come to your store on the morrow to buy.

Why miss the opportunity to sell these people when good lighting does so much for so little?

Do you know that your increased use of Electric Service is billed on a surprisingly low rate schedule... and adds only a small amount to your total bill?
