PROGRESSIVES SEEK VOTE ON TAX MEASURE

WASHINGTON, June 21 — Senate progressive of both parties may determine to force President Roosevelt's tax redistribution to an early vote despite the lukewarm attitude of administration leaders toward action.
Senators Burton K. Wheeler, dem., Mont., and Robert LaFollette, were among the leaders of a bloc fighting to pass the program this summer. They claimed support of both republican and democratic parties.
LaFollette intends to offer the Roosevelt program of higher taxes on large private fortunes and corporation incomes as an amendment to the Patman resolution extending usance taxes.
Regular democratic leaders opposed this move and expressed belief that they could defeat it. They want to defer action until next session.

Public Planning For Texas

Moore Lynn is a former state auditor of Texas. In a recent contribution to the state press he explained how citizen planning groups can cooperate with the state planning board in "promoting sound development of the state and its people." In a foreword he gave this advice: "The American experiment, the government of the people, by the people and for the people, has not failed. It is only that we have failed to have lived up to our true American tradition. Our present troubles are the result, not of a bad foundation but of unplanned on a good foundation. Our difficulties arise, not from the lack of political power but from the lack of interest in the powers we possess." Now how did all this happen? Moore Lynn gave the answer. We long have been ruled by organized minorities. The time has come for the people — the great unorganized inarticulate majority to take of their own affairs and control the future by public planning. He reminded the reader that Congressman Hutton W. Summers, a Texas statesman, recently sounded a sharp note of warning when he said: "Nothing short of an awakened, self reliant people possessing a governmental capacity will be able to win through. It is a serious matter, of course, for a government of the people to become bankrupt, but the bankruptcy of a developed capacity to govern is the tragedy that marks the end of free government. We have already passed the margin of safety." Speaking of the state planning board Writer Lynn declared it should have the support of every citizen. "Public planning is generally thought of as an official function," he said, "but the people of Texas need to have a part in planning for their own future: that to leave a citizen out of the plans of planning would be to neglect our one greatest natural resource—the moral and intellectual fiber of our people. We want improvements in our standards of living but these will not be accepted as readily as Manna from above. They must take root in the soil and grow from the grass roots up."

Texas has its planning boards. They were given endorsement by the governor and the lawmakers. They are the creations of the new deal administration and placed in power by the people of many of the grass root sections. All these boards should function. They should be doing their planning on the projects that have been outlined in recent months by the leaders. A year ago the most destructive drought in history should have taught the people the need of planning for the future.

This year costly floods have covered many of the agricultural states of the nation inflicting losses which will run into hundreds of millions of dollars. Then came the prediction of Hutton Summers that the bankruptcy of the capacity to govern may become the tragedy "which marks the end of free government." It is for Texans to make the answer. "We haven't passed the margin of safety" and when the people come out of their trance the majority for real planning preservation and perpetuation of the heritage of the pioneers who made Texas will be guarded and perpetuated by the people then on earth.

The Pace That Kills

Is the world moving too fast for man?
It seems so.

Sir William Arbuthnot Lane tells us why cancer and other vicious diseases are scourging man. "We must bear in mind that the body has been evolved slowly, through millions of years, to deal successfully with simple foods. Gradually during the last century or two civilization has thrust upon us a wide variety of prepared foods, highly cooked or highly refined or highly milled; and the body has not been designed for them. It does the best it can, but is not equipped to rid itself of their refuse."

The number of diseases and ailments is multiplying. Civilization, instead of becoming more simple as it advances, is becoming more complex.

John Burroughs, naturalist, hit close to the heart of things when he said:

"Man can and does alter his environment to a limited extent, but not so radically as his environment alters him. He cannot change the air he breathes or the water he drinks, or the nature of the food he eats, nor change his vital relations or the physical world.

"His mechanical relations, to a certain extent, wait upon his will, but his vital relations are forever fixed."

Even the most simple minded person must agree that, if he wishes to remain alive and in a state of health he cannot change the air he breathes. He must not change it. Yet he is changing it. It is being poisoned by gasoline. Every pair of lung is feeling the effect of the millions of motor cars fuming through the city streets and on the country roads.

Man is careful to know the water he drinks has not been changed, but he never thinks about the changes which have been made and which are constantly being made in the "nature of the food he eats."

Study history, and see that civilization after civilization has arisen and disappeared, for the simple obvious reason that in every civilization as it developed and progressed man changed the nature of the food he ate, going from the natural state to the denatured or unnatural state step by step in pace with the development of the period in which the civilization existed.

Many violated the "fixed vital relations to the physical world" and paid the penalty in disease, deterioration and death.

The modern pace and the modern diet are ruining our teeth, our health, our dispositions.

UNDER THE DOME AT AUSTIN

By RICHARD M. MOREHEAD
United Press Staff Correspondent
AUSTIN, June 21 — A good Samaritan to 600,000 Texas workmen is Mrs. Espa Stanford, woman member of the state Industrial Accident Board and only member of her sex to hold such a position in the state.

Hurt and maimed workers, their widows and children, pass in review before her seeking compensation for their losses.

"It's a fascinating job," admitted Mrs. Stanford, member since 1924.

"I think there should be a woman member on every industrial accident board in the country."

Seven states now have women accident board members. Massachusetts, one of America's leading industrial centers, requires by law that one member of its seven-member board be a woman.

Another lady, Mrs. Jewell Swoford of Kansas City, is chairman of the United States workmen's compensation commission.

The board meets each Tuesday for hearings. Members are Mrs. Stanford, appointed from the employees class; Earle Adams, of Crockett, an attorney; and A. M. Graves of Clarksville, appointee of the employers' class. Makeup of the board was provided in the workmen's compensation law.

About 50 cases are presented to the board at each hearing. They are studied individually by board members.

While the board is quasi-judicial in character, its job is to administer the law. As such, Mrs. Stanford said, "The board must seem to lean a little toward the worker, usually unable adequately to represent himself, while the employers and insurance companies are well represented."

The cheery woman has won a place for herself in the hearts of many Texas workmen and their families.

"We must," she added, "protect the workers from themselves sometimes."

Cash settlements rather than continued monthly benefits are usually favored by the injured laborers.

Insurance companies are willing to settle with cash payments because they save money. They pay the workman a substantial lump sum in a year or so the sum is spent, and no more money comes in. Often it would be the relief rolls, had not "the board" protected the injured one.

"Claim handling is even worse now," Mrs. Stanford said, "because there usually is a job waiting when the man gets off compensation."

During the biennium ending August 31, 1934, industrial accidents totaled 149,975. Deaths numbered 722, for which claims averaging nearly $2,500 were paid.

Accident compensation totaled $9,947,792 for the two years, of which $2,877,461 went to doctors, hospitals, and other medical aid. Mrs. Stanford considers the latter a most important item.

"The average working man employs one of the lowest-priced doctors in town," she observed. "We think it a most important function to see that he gets proper treatment."

T. C. Andrews, member of the Texas pardon board, recently suggested four methods which might be used to reduce the state prison population one-half and save the state about $1,000,000 annual expense.

Lee Simmons, prison manager, recently notified governor Allred that the prison total would have to be reduced or the gates closed to newcomers.

Andrews suggested to relieve the future burden.

Kite Carries Wire To Repair Phones

SAN ANTONIO, June 21 — Residents of Llano, which is divided by the Llano river which flows through the town, used a kite to reconnect a telephone line when flood waters washed out a bridge and all the telephone wires.

One end of the telephone wire was connected to a large kite which was flown across the river where the connection was again made.

CARD OF THANKS
We wish to thank the people who so kindly helped in the sickness and death of our father and grandfather, George W. Ricks. J. F. Reynolds and Children.

The new Centennial control commission's historical advisory board is considering how to spend the $500,000 state local celebration fund.

The fund was appropriated for use in marking graves of Texas heroes and historical spots. Some board members favor limiting the cost of markers to $500 each. Under such terms at least 5,000 historical sites could be marked.

L. W. Kemp, board chairman, said however that recommendations for as many as $25,000 for permanent monuments might be made.

A whole lot of cities are full of dreamers who dream of a world without work. They might as well wake up.

The Standard, Buenos Aires, Argentina, tells us in their "Random Topics" column that History has taught us that the chivalrous actions of men pale into insignificance when compared with accomplishments and sacrifices made by women.

It lies in the power of the merchants of any city to determine to what extent the people of their city will buy merchandise in some other city. Every retailer wields a large influence on the citizens of his community by the newspaper advertising price, quality and service he gives.

When a city is sick, the people look to the Chamber of Commerce to care for it. When it is doing well, they look to the Chamber of Commerce to make it still better. When things go wrong, the Chamber of Commerce is blamed for it. When it is prosperous, they give no praise. Such is life.

Nothing helps a city as much as a good appearance. To be known as a clean city, a busy city, a good city in which to live is something to be proud of.

The driver who does not respect the equal rights of others to use highways is not fit to have a license to operate a motor vehicle.

Men build cities, not locations.

Man's Truck And Car Both Stolen

DALLAS, June 21 — W. W. George, Dallas oil operator, was put out when he was informed that his truck had been stolen.

George went to his garage to get his automobile to drive after the stolen truck. When he got to his garage he found it had been stolen too.

SOVIET FINDS NEW WEALTH IN OIL FIELDS

By JOSEPH H. BAIRD
United Press Staff Correspondent
MOSCOW, June 21. — Recent geological surveys have resulted in a sharp revision upward in estimates of the Soviet Union's resources of oil, essential both for peacetime industry and mechanized warfare.

Although the total estimate of the nation's oil stores has been kept secret, an official announcement said the new figure was "far greater" than that presented at the London Conference of 1925 — some 3,000,000,000 tons. Discovery of new fields as well as larger estimates of the potential yields of old ones is responsible for the new, increased inventory.

Motor Output Large
This report makes cheerful reading for Soviet officials. With new automobiles and tractors rolling off the plants at Gorki, Moscow, Stalingrad and Leningrad; with more than 3,500 military airplanes consuming fuel; with a highly mechanized army of tanks and trucks; and with oil exports constituting one of its greatest sources of foreign exchange, the Soviet Union's need for petroleum is tremendous.

So much so, indeed, that the sale of gasoline in it is strictly controlled. One of Russia's greatest oil deposits is in Azerbaijan. In 1932 this territory was estimated to contain 1,200,000,000 tons. Since that time new pools in the region have been found at Kala, Lok-Batan, Kara-Chukkar and Argez.

Deposits of the Embra region in Kazakhstan, once estimated at 250,000,000 tons, are now believed to contain some 600,000,000 tons.

New and rich oil-bearing areas have been discovered in the Urals in the Ishimbay region and in the Kama river region.

Urals Yield Rich Field
In the Far East also new oil fields have been discovered on the eastern slopes of the Urals, in the Lena river basin to the north and along the course of the Tolba and Aldon rivers. Prospecting is continuing around Lake Balkal.

Although the fields of Sakhalin have been producing for many years, recent investigations there indicated they still contain rich deposits.

As a result of geological explorations last year, new oil deposits have been found in Turkmenia, at Kundag, Uzunak and Georgia. A well brought in at Nefedag, Turkmenia, in December, 1934, is now producing 380 tons daily. Fourteen gas oil-bearing regions also have been discovered in the Chikishlar region of Turkmenia.

To Spend Night Here
Many employees are making arrangements to spend the night in Cisco in order to attend the annual employee picnic in Eastland Saturday. The picnic this year will celebrate the silver anniversary of the Lone Star Gas System.

The Silver Anniversary picnic will celebrate the 25th year of the Lone Star Gas company which was organized by Denning. The company pioneered natural gas service in Texas with a 100 mile pipe line from Petrolia to Fort Worth and Dallas in 1910, serving only 15,000 families, and has grown into a 4,000 mile system serving more than 250,000 families. A leader in development of oil and gas resources in the Eastland county area, the company has contributed to the economic progress of this section since it began operating here by the expenditure of more than $18,000,000 for salaries, gas and supply purchases, taxes, drilling contracts, and other items, according to officials of West Texas divisions.

Nation Being Urged To Save Elm Trees

WASHINGTON, June 21. — Destruction of 300,000 trees infested with Dutch elm disease in northern New Jersey, southern New York and southwestern Connecticut would provide immediate employment for 2,500 men, according to Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the American Tree Association.

Pack said that "if the spending organizations of this administration are looking for worthwhile projects for relief employment, then I say save the elms of the nation and save them now."

He said an allotment of $3,000,000 would be required immediately for the work. Although the cost would be approximately $10 a tree, Pack said "this may sound big to some people, but this is not a job for wood choppers. There must be intelligent direction when you start to take down a tree of any size. Money is needed for surveys of large areas."

He said the money would provide

LOST FAT Because She Heeded DOCTOR'S ADVICE

And Didn't Listen To Gossiping Neighbors!

Mrs. H. H. Long of Clarinda, Iowa writes: "Kruschen was recommended to me by my doctor. Weight when starting was 226. Weight now after 3 jars is 208. Doctor says I'm doing fine."

When Kruschen Salts is prescribed by reputable physicians to safely take off fat and greatly improve health—why listen to gossipers who don't want you to be slender? Envious!

Have a mind of your own—get a jar of Kruschen to-day (lasts 4 weeks and costs but a trifle). Take a half teaspoonful in a cup of hot water every morning—tastes fine with juice of half lemon added. If you don't lose 12 lbs. and feel years younger—money back. For sale by Moore Drug Co., or any drug store. Adv.

Seaweed Is Found Ideal Insulator

LEIPZIG, June 21 — Unexpected virtues have been discovered in the lowly seaweed. When tightly packed it forms an ideal insulating material, keeping out cold, noise, water, or even fire.

Scientific tests prove that a mat of seaweed half an inch thick is more effective than a brick wall twelve inches thick. The seaweed has besides only one-fourth the weight of ordinary insulating material.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah — What to do when a model house violates a city law? That's what L. J. Clements wondered after he bought a model house built as a home modernization project, and was informed that it did not meet citying and fire requirements. He and the city dads are still arguing.

NO INTERRUPT of YOUR GAS SERVICE

As Texas Streams Burst Banks

With torrential flood waters swirling at many points, you and the gas wells, Lone Star Gas System are the threat of the elements. Bridging the gap between gas wells and your gas appliances, this dependable has conquered the hazard and kept your service uninterrupted.

The greatest and most widespread floods in this company have threatened the gas pipe lines. As the waters rushed on over the country, stood by these lines day and night ready for any bridges went down and roads were washed out, was halted, the gas lines held intact.

This dependable service is not an accident. A quarter of a century of planning and huge expenditure of money. Seven pipe line bridges across swollen steel pipe laid deep in the ground, a well trained crew are among the facilities which have made this able to meet the unprecedented flood conditions.

The ability of your gas company to serve emergencies is, after all, the supreme test of its ability. Significant fact is that the facilities and organization to keep your service constantly dependable in any emergency must stand by throughout every day of your instant call.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
KATHARINE STRYKHURST, 20 and beautiful, allows her emotions to rule when she marries MICHAEL HEATHEROE, young riding instructor who comes into a title and fortune. Katharine's father is rich and her stepmother is wealthy.

The night following his marriage Michael is injured in a traffic accident and when he regains consciousness his memory is impaired. He forgets the marriage. Katharine, unaware of this, believes he has deserted her. She plans to leave for New Mexico and her friend, VIOLET MERSEY, agrees to engage a lawyer in her absence to arrange an annulment of the marriage.

DE. JOHN KAYE, an old friend, sees Katharine off on her trip. He tells her he has always loved her.

SALLY MOON, who has soared Michael into a sort of engagement, plans for their wedding, unaware of Michael's marriage to Katharine. Suddenly during a rehearsal of the ceremony Michael recovers his memory.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER XXXVIII
MICHAEL dashed out into the quiet street. Dusk had fallen half an hour before. There was the scent of bonfires in the darkness. A moon hung, poised uncertainly over the church steeple. There were clouds.

Hatless, he found himself running down the road. If someone came out of the church yard and watched him go he was unaware of it. He swerved around a corner, was lost to sight.

His heart was pounding in his breast like a mad thing. The words Annabel had said so carelessly and jauntily were echoing in his brain. "I . . . take thee . . . for better, for worse . . ."

A veil had been torn from his eyes. He was seeing clearly now for the first time in weeks. In this new dream there was a slim, fair-haired girl with eyes that burned deeply, darkly blue. In the dream she put her hand in his. She said the words Annabel had said, but with a difference.

"I, Katharine . . ."

How could he, for one single instant, have forgotten her? He must have been half-mad.

A roadster, careening on two wheels, shot down the road and went around a corner. Michael, in the shadow of the hedge, watched it go. Sally's car. But tomorrow—why, good God, tomorrow he was supposed to marry Sally in that very church from which he had just fled! And who was Sally but a pouting stranger? What a frightful mess!

Lucky for him this revelation had come on his wedding eve instead of his wedding night. Sally would have to know. He could imagine her rage and, manlike, blushed at the thought. It would have to be got through somehow. He could face it, with the thought of Katharine to sustain him.

His heart lifted at the bare notion. Katharine—his wife! But where had she been all these weeks? What had she been thinking of him?

If he went home now Sally would be certain to find him. Later tonight he would face it, but just now the important thing was to learn about Katharine.

HE strode along toward the Merger house. That dark-haired woman who had looked at him so oddly the other day; she was Katharine's friend. She would tell him what he wished to know.

The house was in darkness except for a glimmer of light in the servant's wing. Michael knocked, and a stout, colored woman in a striped dress came to the door. Mrs. Mersey was in the city, she said. She would not be back until late.

Michael went back to the village and called the Strykhurst house from a pay station. A warm Irish voice informed him that Miss Katharine was in the west. Did the gentleman care to speak to Mrs. Strykhurst?

Bertine's lofty accents. "This is Mrs. Strykhurst. Who is it calling?"

"It's Michael Heatheroe."

You could sense the steely coldness with which Katharine's stepmother armed herself. "Is it business?"

His voice was harsh with tension and anxiety.

"I'm afraid I cannot give out my daughter's address so casually," Bertine told him. Before he realized what was happening she had hung up on him.

Well, it was not to be wondered at, he muttered to himself, curbing his rage. Doubtless Bertine had heard he was to be married to Sally Moon tomorrow morning.

He went back to the Moon's, loathing his errand, but bound to see the thing through. Sally's father, a long black cigar clamped between his teeth, glared at him.

"Well, well, young man. What's up? The girl's upstairs having hysterics. Thought you'd run out on her. A fine way to behave," fumed the older man.

"Terribly sorry, sir." He plunged into his story. Married weeks ago. The day of the accident. "The whole thing washed from my brain by that blow on the head . . ."

"You mean to tell me—you mean to stand there and tell me calmly—" raged Mr. Moon. His face was scarlet. For a moment Michael thought the man was going to have a stroke.

"But you were engaged to my daughter at the time. You certainly were—"

"I was," Michael told him wearily. "I have no excuse. Only the fact that I was—in love with Katharine. Sally and I—well, it was a mistake, sir. From the very start."

JOSEPH MOON stared. Sally had involved him before this in many a situation. This, he told himself, was positively the worst yet. He groped for a chair and dropped into it heavily.

"It's an outrage," he stormed. "Matter for the law—I'll have to see my attorney—"

Michael had to listen to a good deal of this, and he did so patiently. He was sorry for the old man. It was all his own fault. He felt a cad and a villain.

"May I see Sally, sir?"

"See her? Of course you'll see her! Wouldn't tell her yourself 'er

Annabel peeped through the French doors and made a round "o" of her mouth at sight of Michael. He could hear Sally's step on the stairs, her high heels clattering. She flung herself in the room, rage stamping her features.

"What's wrong with you? What do you mean running off like that? Making me a laughing stock—"

Michael took her hands. She beat at him in her fury as though she would hurt him grievously. It was her pride that was hurt, not her love, he reminded himself. He must remember that.

Somehow he made her understand. She screamed at him and Annabel, tiptoeing in the hall, flinched at some of the words Sally used. Michael gripped her wrists.

"Listen, I'm sorry. Sorry as I can be. But it's too late now."

"You fool, you fool!" raged the girl. "How dared you? I'll sue you—sue you both. I'll drag your names through every court in the land—"

MICHAEL'S knuckles whitened. He could stand it. It wouldn't matter to him. But Katharine—he couldn't let her do this to Katharine.

Sally's fishwife voice screamed out.

"You remember I told you from the start it was a mistake," Michael said quietly.

"That's right—that's right. Say I proposed to you!" the girl taunted him.

He released her, shrugging his shoulders. His imperturbability roused her to a fresh torrent of abuse. Her father appeared in the doorway.

"Listen, kiddo," he began pacifically, "you don't want them saying in the town you were jilted. Do you?"

"Let them—if they dare!" Sally cried. Her bosom heaved. Her dark hair was in a fine disarray. Her dark eyes flashed lightning.

"But that's what they'll say if you go after Michael," the old man put in shrewdly. He had been thinking deeply as he sat in his study, within sound of her vehemence. This—this would never do! His business, his reputation in Innicoek would be ruined if Sally stormed through the courts with her untamed rage unleashed.

"They'll say it anyway," the girl flung at him, not to be put off so easily.

"No, they won't," the old man told her. "No, they won't. We'll give it out that Michael had a relapse. That he hadn't recovered from the illness—that the marriage is indefinitely postponed. Then you can go off to Paris; you've been wanting to do that for a long time. You know you have—"

"You mean that? You're not just trying to calm me down?"

"I mean it. You can sail as soon as you like. Stay all winter. Frocks and hats galore—"

Under her tempestuous airs Sally shrewdly estimated the situation. But she would not satisfy them.

"I'll think about it," she said, regarding the two men between narrowed lids.

"Someone's got to pay for this," she told them. "It's not going to be little Sally."
