About Our Friends

By STEPHEN A. LONG

George Conley and A. G. Tuttle have their heads together about parking on main street. They employ who drive their cars down either park in front of their own places of business or parking room there, park in front their neighbor's place of business the exclusion of customers who do no convenient place to park while doing their shopping.

Parking space has become a big problem in all cities. The larger town, the greater the dearth of space. For this reason, many business stores whose name and business commands enough respect to fill their trade with them, find it convenient to secure locations further from the traffic and provide parking space surrounding their new locations. It pays an oftentimes person intends to make a purchase a certain store but finds no parking room and decides as a matter of convenience to buy elsewhere.

Cisco has long been known as a town of many cars. Many business people live away from the business district and so find it necessary to drive their machines to the park as near their business as possible and leave no space for the customer. A remedy is needed and likely something will be one about it soon.

We notice that a number of merchants are getting their Christmas decorations up and soon Cisco will be taking on a Santa Claus spirit with his Christmas clothes. John H. Garners has a very pretty window with blue background and silver stars. The same trimming scheme is being carried out on the interior. J. C. Penney has been showing Christmas decorations for several days. The Leach Store is busy getting up a trimmings which are going to be the most beautiful that this town has ever seen.

100,000 Germs in Average Sneeze

One hundred thousand germs may be poured into the air in an average sneeze, estimates the American Institute of Sanitation. A heavy sneeze by a person suffering from a deep cold or other ill may carry many more germs.

The spread of colds and other respiratory ills is now generally recognized as often resulting from coughs and sneezes. The nose and throat of every person contains a large number of bacteria. Influenza germs are often harbored by well people. When a person has a cold or gripe, influenza and other bacteria present increase in number. As many as 50,000,000 bacteria in the mouth of well persons is not uncommon. In disease the germ population of the mouth may run into the hundreds of millions.

The best way to keep free of colds this winter is to keep away from sneezers. Infection is caused by two things: (1) exposure to germs and (2) lowered resistance. Proper diet, exercise and rest will aid in sustaining resistance. But at the same time germs should be dodged as much as possible. Personal hygiene requires one to avoid close contact with persons with colds. The use of an antiseptic mouth wash is often effective as a preventive. Tests have shown that persons who gargled regularly during cold epidemics, thus reducing the number of bacteria in the mouth, had fewer colds than those who did not take such precautions.

From a general health viewpoint the use of antiseptics in cleaning floors in schools, offices and homes should be a regular practice. With countless germs floating about and landing on the floor, it is best to kill them there and not permit them to be scuffed into the air again. Another important preventive measure is the proper cleaning of dishes. Tests have shown that a "clean glass" may have 50,000 germs on it. All dishes, both in homes and in public eating establishments, should be sterilized either with water, almost boiling, or with antiseptic chemicals.

Rubber Bands Shoot Small Fish Harpoon

MIAMI, Nov. 18 (AP)—A handy harpoon-rifle to shoot small fish is the invention of W. M. Edwards, Miami. He says the gun makes fishing even more interesting.

Edwards' gun operates with two stout rubber bands on a slide which stretches from the muzzle to the trigger on each side of the gun. A steel arrow six inches long is tied to the line of a fishing reel under the barrel of the weapon.

When the trigger is discharged, the bands are released and the arrow shoots from the gun as the line unwinds. When the fish is speared, the fisherman simply reels in his catch.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

MARCIA CANFIELD, daughter of wealthy PHILIP CANFIELD, knows that there is a neighborhood in hazy with gossip over the sudden disappearance of FRANK KENDRICK, whose engagement to Marcia has been announced. Since his disappearance, a shortness in Kendrick's funds has been discovered.

Refusing to let others know how deeply she has loved Frank, Marcia goes to the dramatic club by-ones and is given the leading part in a new play. Afterward, with others, she stops at a restaurant. There is a holdup and Marcia loses a ring that was her mother's.

From her friend, HELEN WADDLE, in Chicago, Marcia decides to go there to persuade him to return and face his financial obligations. She takes the first plane.

In Chicago, Marcia telephones Helen's cousin, JOHN WADDLE, and arranges to meet him next morning. In the hotel restaurant a stranger offers a chair service. Later she hears him addressed as "B. R. C. E. McDougall." He gives Marcia a pencil sketch of herself.

Frank Kendrick, aware of the search for him, JOHN WADDLE, Marcia learns her trip has been in vain.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER VIII

TONY STELLICCI was not the sort of young man to suffer inaction when a job needed doing, but, following the holdup of the Dog Wagon, an entire day passed without his even forming a plan for tackling the task that faced him.

Tony's working hours were from 10 at night to 6 in the morning; he then slept until 1 or 2, and divided the afternoons and evenings between his invalid father and his own simple pleasures.

But he passed the day alone in vain. He made only one positive step, and that was fruitless: he telephoned the service station and garage which Carlo, his brother, conducted on the road between Bobbs Neck and Stony Point. But Carlo was not in.

Carlo was the one entirely unsatisfactory element in Tony's life. Having abandoned the ways of industry and filial devotion which characterized his younger brother's existence, Carlo had long since left home and married, and somehow earned a living in various ways, his latest and most ambitious venture being the garage, where, Tony suspected, the gasoline was watered and other service and repairs were of a comparable nature.

Home again, he managed to read a while to his father and to pretend cheerfulness.

In her Chicago hotel room, Marcia Canfield attempted to close a door in her mind on further tormenting thought of Frank Kendrick's latest flight. For flight it must have been, she knew. The shock of meeting John Waddell had been sufficient, her reason insisted, to send Frank forward on his uncertain and secret way.

A title grimly, Marcia inquired by telephone concerning the schedule of planes to New York. One was leaving within the hour. She did not bother to telegraph the servants at home.

Packing her bag, she went down to the desk. There she received her bill and went to the cashier's window, where several persons waited to pay while a woman at the head of the line caustically challenged the validity of items charged to her. Although the others in the line were impatient, she calmly put the time to use; she had opened a leather notebook and was industriously sketching a startlingly if somewhat exaggerated likeness of the angry woman.

Marcia, fascinated by the quick strokes with which he reproduced the woman and her temper, watched unashamed over his shoulder. She did not know that he could have guessed her behavior until, without turning, he inquired courteously:

"Do you like it?"

MARCIA laughed.

"It isn't flattering, but it is accurate," she admitted.

Bruce McDougall sketched his signature, the scarp of plaid.

"At last she's through," he said as the woman subsided and pushed some money over the counter. "Now we can all get going."

Marcia thought of the sketch of herself which he had presented to her a few hours before.

"Aren't you going to give it to the lady?" she asked, indicating the notebook.

McDougall grinned.

"Only when they're beautiful," he said, and immediately blushed.

It was his turn at the cashier's window. Finished he bowed to Marcia and walked uncertainly away. When she turned from the window he had disappeared.

She could not know that he had paused, outside the hotel doors, and asked himself a question, and, having answered with a reluctant negative, had climbed into a taxicab and become an atom in the traffic.

The last passenger aboard the plane, Marcia took her seat and glanced about her. She could hardly restrain a burst of laughter; three seats ahead, unconscious of her presence, Bruce McDougall was busy with his notebook, glancing frequently at his latest model, a man across the aisle who, scornful of the experience of flight, had settled himself for a nap and was falling asleep, a bit grotesquely.

BRAZIL COTTON MAY EDGE OUT U. S. IN JAPAN

By HENRY WOOD
United Press Staff Correspondent
SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 19 (AP)—Brazil soon will be able to supply Japan with all the cotton needed if the present rate of production continues, according to a survey just completed by the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The report declares that certain American observers view with misgivings the possibility of Brazilian cotton becoming a substitute for the American crop in other markets, especially in Japan.

The survey finds that Japan has increased importations of cotton from Brazil to help balance mounting exports to Brazil, for the Latin American countries have laid great stress on trade balances, especially since the imports from Japan have been so greatly in excess of their exports to that country.

From the standpoint of Brazil, the survey finds there are many reasons for Brazil's increasing attention to the production of cotton other than the familiar one that the United States has begun a restriction of output.

Coffee Market Slumps

Perhaps the most important of these reasons, it is said, is the condition of the Brazilian coffee market with its lower prices and excessive stocks. To date coffee has been the great product of Brazil but it has become necessary now to make a change if Brazil is to keep an even keel.

Another reason for Japan's interest in Brazil's cotton, according to the survey, is the fact that Japanese farmers in Brazil are credited with raising nearly one-third of the country's cotton. And Japan hopes it is admitted of still further liberalization of Brazil's immigration laws to permit more of Japan's surplus population to settle in Latin America and especially Brazil. This is all the more the case, the survey finds, because there is a shortage of labor in Brazil for raising cotton.

The survey says that it is not only the quality of Brazilian cotton but also the potential quantity that it may produce that accounts for the growing significance of the Brazilian product. In the southern part of Brazil, where production increase has been marked in recent years, the cotton compares favorably with the cotton compares favorably with the United States.

Japan's Imports Shrink

It is pointed out that Brazil already is producing half the cotton needed by Japan. In the year ending July 31, 1936, Japan consumed 3,283,000 bales of cotton. In this same year Brazil's entire crop amounted to 1,743,000 bales. The United States furnished Japan with 1,614,000 bales—this being a decrease of 3 1/2 per cent over the previous year—while Brazil furnished only 250,000 bales although this was a noticeable increase over the 1935 figure. Nevertheless, the institute foresees that with the restrictions on cotton growing in the United States and the potentialities for production in Brazil, the latter quickly could reach the point where it could supply the entire Japanese market.

It is pointed out that the growth of cotton production in Brazil has been almost phenomenal. Although cotton has been grown there for a century, the Institute finds that annual production even in the period of the World War amounted to fewer than 400,000 bales annually. In the next season production jumped to 1,015,000 bales and in the 1935-36 season it totaled 1,743,000 bales.

As regards Japan alone it bought 250,000 bales which was a noticeable increase over the 159,000 bales purchased in 1935.

However, the Institute finds, that Brazil is also finding plenty of other markets for all of the cotton it can produce. The new trade agreement concluded with Germany in June, 1936, which extends most favored nation treatment, is likely to stimulate Brazilian cotton production. It is estimated by the institute that as a result Germany might purchase at least 300,000 bales of Brazilian cotton this year which might put it ahead of Great Britain who was the largest buyer of Brazilian cotton for the first six months of 1936.

At present, the Institute finds, Brazil's share in the world's cotton market is only about 6 per cent. On the other hand, during the past year the United States' share dropped from 59 to 45 per cent.

NYA Projects Use 700 Texas Youth

AUSTIN, Nov. 16.—Soil conservation projects financed by National Youth Administration workers are in operation in 26 counties of Texas, and have been approved for 23 additional counties, Lyndon B. Johnson, state director, announced this week. By mid-November the NYA plans to have projects approved in 64 counties.

These projects are developed in cooperation with the Agricultural Extension Service of Texas A. & M. College. Through county agents, the extension service has provided technical supervision for surveying soil conservation terraces, diversion channels, gully reterads, check dams, and other appurtenances of soil conservation work.

The youths employed by the NYA on soil erosion projects work only one-fourth time and are paid wage ratios for their community. Each field party is composed of the surveyor-supervisor and five or six youths employed by the NYA. A different group of youths works each week so that a full-time soil conservation project may employ 20 to 25 youths.

The projects now operating in 26 counties employ 104 youths. The additional projects, involving more intensive work in 23 other counties, will employ 414 more youths.

Youths employed by the National Youth Administration are working on two other types of soil conservation projects. The Texas Highway Department is sponsor for soil erosion prevention work on rights of way in 50 counties, and the United States Conservation Service is sponsor for another project for construction of terraces. Those two types of projects have employed approximately 700 youths on soil conservation work.

BETTER TIMES INDICATED BY MORTGAGE FILE

Better business conditions for persons in various occupations are interpreted in the increase of chattel mortgages filed in the county clerk's office the first 10 months this year over a similar period in 1935.

Miss Genevieve Truly, deputy clerk, checked the books and the results showed an increase of approximately 25 per cent over last year. A total of 5,966 chattel mortgages were filed the first 10 months of this year, compared to 4,863 for a similar period in 1935.

The figures are interpreted as showing people are in better shape this year and credit conditions easier. The increase also shows a big pickup in installment buying of things which the average person can do without when times are hard.

Chattel liens against furniture, refrigerators and washing machines reveal a pickup in demand for home goods, officials say. Automobile liens are numerous in the recordings, too, registration of new cars in the county indicate.
