FEET OFTEN SIGNAL CHRONIC DISEASE

Chronic disease is the nation's number one health problem. According to recent estimates, more than 70 million Americans are afflicted by one or more of these conditions which place some limitations on their daily lives and on their ability to remain active members of the community.

Ranking especially high among these chronic ailments are diabetes and arthritis. Diabetes is now the seventh leading cause of death in the United States and the third leading cause of blindness. Arthritis affects one out of every 12 of our citizens. The effect of these diseases when measured in terms of personal suffering and the cost to society of supporting disabled victims is appalling.

However, the vast majority of those affected by diabetes and arthritis can be helped to live virtually normal lives if their conditions are diagnosed and treated at an early stage. And medical experts agree that the podiatrist's office and community podiatry screening programs are the places where much of this important early detection can take place. For many of the symptoms of diabetes and arthritis appear first in the foot.

During a symposium sponsored by the New Jersey Podiatry Society at the Rutgers University Institute of Microbiology, it was pointed out that in the diabetic, there occurs "a wide variety of changes of the skin and bones of the feet, ranging from color changes to ulcerations, infections and involvement of bone." These changes are found even when the individual does not experience the excessive thirst, frequent urination and weight loss which are classically associated with diabetes. When a podiatrist sees patients with an infected foot ulcer, evidence of muscle degeneration, or poor circulation in the foot, he immediately suspects diabetes and consults with the family medical doctor. It has been said that the podiatrist sees the earliest signs of joint changes, frequent indicators of arthritis. Other signs, evident to the podiatrist as he conducts his comprehensive examination, also tell of possible arthritis.

When such conditions as bunions, hammer toes, heel pain and nodules in the achilles tendon are presented to a podiatrist for treatment, he initiates a screening procedure for arthritis.

Similarly, early detection of circulatory problems by the podiatrist may enable the patient to avoid a cardiac condition later on. Regular foot examinations, important in maintaining day to day foot health, are indispensable to the control of such chronic ailments as diabetes, arthritis and poor circulation, especially among the elderly, whom they threaten with permanent disability or even death.

According to a prominent state health officer: "The public health approach to chronic disease emphasizes the mobilization of all the community's existing personnel and resources, as well as the development of new resources as they are needed. The podiatrist can and must play an important role in conjunction with the other members of this health team."

SOIL TESTING
The farmer who still figures he can walk across a field or pasture and determine its fertilizer needs can't expect top yields. There are too many factors in determining soil fertility that can't be detected by the eye, and therefore a surer method must be used. That's where the soil testing laboratory comes into the picture. Soil scientists have a knowledge of the amount of nutrients removed from the soil by a given yield on a crop. By making certain soil tests they can determine how much of the crop's need can be supplied from the soil and how much must be added through fertilizer application.

Alert farmers test their soil before planting to determine its ability to supply the necessary nutrients for top yields. If the soil test shows the soil is short on a certain nutrient, fertilizer of the recommended kind can be supplied before deficiencies show up on the growing crop and yield is reduced.

Low production means a higher per unit cost and less potential profit while high yields have the opposite effects upon crop production.

Soil testing is a necessary part of today's agriculture. Maximum yields produced at the lowest per unit cost are a must and the basis for both is a fertile soil.
