Confessed killer of young girl executed

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Convicted child killer Melvin Wayne White, apologetic and prayerful, was executed Thursday evening for the 1997 abduction, sexual assault and beating death of a 9-year-old girl who lived in his West Texas neighborhood.

In final comments on the death chamber gurney, White told witnesses to tell "Beth and them I am sorry, truly sorry for the pain that I caused your family." He was referring to the mother of his victim. "I truly mean that, too. She was a friend of mine and I betrayed her trust."

White told the witnesses that he loved them and asked that they tell his mother that he loved her. Then, he began reciting the 23rd Psalm, which begins "The Lord is my shepherd" and recited the Lord's Prayer.

"All right, warden," he said at the conclusion. "Let's give them what they want."

As the drugs began taking effect, he remarked, "I can taste it." He then sputtered and gasped. Nine minutes later at 6:21 p.m., he was pronounced dead.

S.C. prison escapees captured at motel

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Two violent felons who escaped from a maximum-security prison by hiding on a trash truck were captured early Thursday afternoon, a State Law Enforcement Division official said.

Jimmy Causey, 35, a convicted kidnapper, and Johnny Brewer, 39, a convicted murderer, had been on the loose since Tuesday, when they escaped from the Broad River Correctional Institution in Columbia.

They were apprehended at a motel along busy Interstate 95 in Ridgeland, about 110 miles south of Columbia, SLED Chief Robert Stewart said.

Pat Smith, a maid at the Palms Motel, said Causey told the clerk when he checked in that his identification was in his car, and that the car had been towed.

"He was real friendly," she said. "When they got (Brewer) in the cuffs, (Causey) said, 'Can I get my money back? He said, 'Can I get a refund?'" Smith hadn't seen Brewer before his arrest, she said.

Korean nuclear talks will resume next week

BEIJING (AP) — China on Thursday called for progress in international efforts to get North Korea to scrap nuclear weapons development in exchange for aid as it announced that the slow-moving talks will resume next week in Beijing.

China has organized four rounds of negotiations since 2003 on the North Korea nuclear issue, leading to an agreement in September for the North to give up its atomic ambitions in exchange for energy aid and a security guarantee.

Yet, much still needs to be done in the six-nation talks, which also include the United States, South Korea, Japan and Russia. Negotiators will seek to work out the steps for North Korea to disarm and how they will be verified. Washington and others want a timetable for international inspections.

The negotiations resume Wednesday. Two long years of talks have proceeded fitfully and amid deep distrust.

Tech freshman commits suicide in hometown

By JAY LANGLEY
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Joshua Biggerstaff, a freshman from Sulphur Springs majoring in pre-dental, died Saturday from an apparent suicide, which happened in his hometown.

Biggerstaff's longtime friend Robert Cooper, a freshman pre-med major from Edgewood, confirmed that his friend took his own life.

"Nobody saw it coming," Cooper said. "Josh was always a very happy person."

Biggerstaff and Cooper played against each other in football in high school, and Cooper said they became close when they both came to Texas Tech.

"We worked out about three or four times a week together," Cooper said. "We used to joke about how weak we were in the weight room because we were both weak quarterbacks."

Cooper said he and Biggerstaff had a lot in common, from a love of football to growing up in a small town.

"He was one of the easiest people to talk to," he said. "He was always smiling and made every one else smile."

Cooper said he will miss his friend. "He was just a good kid with good morals," he said.

Cody Whittington, a freshman advertising major from Austin, said being around Biggerstaff always was a positive experience.

"Josh was a welcoming guy," he said. "He was liked by every one who knew him. Josh was a positive force for everybody."

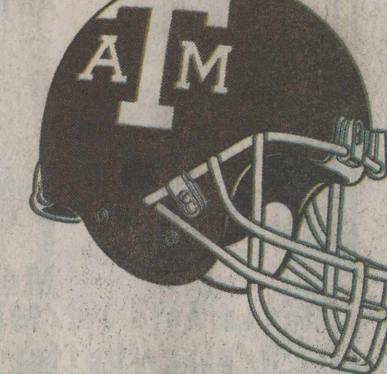

Biggerstaff was born Nov. 17, 1986. The flags at Memorial Circle will be lowered in his honor Monday.

The Sulphur Springs Police Department was contacted for comment, but was unable to give a statement regarding the death.

Aggie-Red Raider rivalry fueled by bent tempers, goalposts

With the Texas A&M football team coming to Lubbock Saturday, Texas Tech officials say a repeat performance of 2001 is not likely.

Following the 12-0 victory in 2001, Tech fans at Jones SBC Stadium tore down a goalpost and tried to put it in the A&M fan section, leading to numerous fights.

The incident led the 2002 A&M football media guide to

Coldwell Banker study says Hub City is nation's most affordable college town

By DANIELLE NOVY
STAFF WRITER

Texas Tech students and Lubbock residents have something new to cheer about with the fall release of Coldwell Banker College Market Home Price Comparison Index.

The results of the study placed Lubbock as the nation's most affordable college town to reside in.

The survey considered price listings for the same 2,200-square foot subject home from more than 300 residential markets, and Lubbock came out as the most affordable college town.

The index listed the average price for a Lubbock home at about $164,000, almost $5,000 less than the average house price from its nearest competitor, Starkville, Miss., home of Mississippi State University.

The average price for a house in the 319 markets the survey studied was about $400,000, more than twice the Lubbock listing. Palo Alto, Calif., the location of Stanford University, ranked as the most expensive, with the average home costing more than $1.5 million.

Deron Tucker, executive vice president at Coldwell Banker Rick Canup, said the recent ranking of Lubbock as the most affordable college town in the U.S. was a big deal for the Hub City.

"This is great for the city of Lubbock," Tucker said. "People, especially retirees, seek out college towns as great places to live because of the lively communities, sports and entertainment."

Tucker said Lubbock is composed of a

Kalf Fry celebrates 25th year tonight

As the Texas Tech football team gets fired up for the big game against in-state rival Texas A&M, students will be doing the same as they party down at the 25th annual Kalf Fry today.

Kalf Fry is a fundraising event put on by Kappa Alpha and Phi Delta Theta. The Randy Rogers band will open the concert, followed by Gary Allen.

Steven Baird, captain of Kappa Alpha, said the fraternities are expecting a big turnout since it is the silver anniversary. "We are expecting a lot Tech students, as well as alumni, since it has been 25 years," he said.

Baird said the money received will all go to a good cause. "Your money is going somewhere good, all proceeds will go to the Muscular Dystrophy Order," he said.

The music is a big part of the event, but one of the main parts is eating calf fries. Calf fries are deep-fried calf testicles.

Baird said the calf fries are a big attraction for the event. "College kids love the calf fries, and this year we are cooking around 600 pounds, at $5 a plate," he said.

Baird said KLLL-FM will be outside the stadium partying with everyone while taking call-ins.

Lindsay Davis, senior public relations major from Hale Center, said she can't wait until Friday.

"I love Kalf Fry. It is always a lot of fun and there is always a crowd," she said. "I am so excited about the bands. It never fails Kalf Fry always has exceptional bands."

The concert will be held at the Lubbock Coliseum at 8:30 p.m. General admission tickets are $23, and reserved are $28.50.

"Everyone should come out, if not for the music, come for the great cow balls," Davis said.

Regular, paid parking lots still crowded

With regular lots sold out, students flock to pay-by-the-hour parking for proximity, convenience instead

Students trying to beat the traffic while coming to school may find their greatest struggle in the visitors' parking lot.

People who park in the visitors' lots pay 50 cents per 30 minutes.

"We do have a greater utilization of students using the paid parking lot," said Lee Sonnenberg, unit associate director for Traffic and Parking.

He said the R-13 parking lot at the southeast corner of 15th Street and the Drive of Champions, is one of the parking lots more frequently used. He said higher student enrollment and the loss of parking spots from the construction across the street from the R-13 parking lot are reasons the parking lot has been more congested.

Sonnenberg said those parking spaces have not yet been replaced.

With more students using the visitors' lots, students do a good job paying for their parking space, Sonnenberg said.

"I have not seen an increase in citations," he said. "Students are pretty diligent about using the machines while they're at the slot."

The visitors' lots, he said, are open to any one who wants to park, and the lots are not restricted to visitors.

Because students and visitors come to find a parking place, the R-13 parking lot is one of the lots always filled to capacity, Sonnenberg said.

"They will park in the lots at 7:30 in the morning and will be there all day long," he said.

The R-3 lot near the Library, the R-6 lot near the Education building and the R-11 lot near the Music Building are a few other parking lots that charge visitors to park.

Sonnenberg said a few visitor parking lots have a high turnover rate in parking, while other parking lots always have an open space.

Ryan Worley, Student Government Association external vice president and a junior finance major from Belton, said proximity is another reason more students are using the visitors' lots.

"I think it's purely for convenience," he said, "I think there's an increase in paid parking because it's closer to the Student Union."

Worley attributed his knowledge about the congested traffic from his own personal experiences.

"A couple times, I tried parking out there, and it is like musical chairs," he said.

Though more students are using the parking lots, there has not been an increase in automobile accidents, said Maj. Gordon Hoffman, assistant chief of the Tech Police Department.

Worley said he does not expect the traffic in the visitors' lots to decrease anytime soon.

"I do think it is reaching capacity," Worley said. "I do think traffic is increasing, and students will continue to use it."

Study shows losing weight helps sex life

By BETH AARON
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

A recent study done by a psychologist at Duke University may give U.S. residents a new reason to live a healthier lifestyle.

According to an Oct. 17 Associated Press article, losing weight can improve a person's sex life.

The study involved 161 women and 26 men with an average age of 45 and with an average body mass index of 41 who lost 17.5 percent of their weight within a year.

Obesity is defined as a body mass index 30 or above, according to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention Web site.

Body mass index is a measure of body fat based on height and weight that applies to both adult men and women, according to

Space Station, shuttle replacement are priorities, NASA says

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA's top priorities are a replacement for the space shuttle and completing the international space station, and some other programs are being cut or deferred to concentrate the agency's resources, NASA Administrator Michael D. Griffin said Thursday.

"NASA cannot afford to do everything on its plate today," he told the House Science Committee. Funding priorities required the agency to cancel several programs that "we either did not need or did not need right now," Griffin said.

For example, it seemed like putting the cart before the horse to continue life science studies about how people respond to being in space before the agency was sure it could put people back in space, he said.

In addition to life sciences, another affected program is nuclear systems technology, Griffin said.

That program is designed to provide power to an outpost planned for the surface of the moon. But that won't be needed until after 2018, so the work is currently being deferred, he said.

The agency has adopted a "go-as-you-can-pay" approach, Griffin said.

the Department of Health and Human Services Web site.

Melanie Fowler, family nurse practitioner in the Department of Family and Community Medicine at the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center, said reaching a healthy weight can improve intimacy both physiologically and psychologically.

"The obvious effect would be that they feel so much better about themselves," she said.

Other, less obvious reasons include lowered blood pressure, which results in a more free blood flow to the body's organs, Fowler said.

Both female and male sex organs experience a blood rush when aroused, Fowler said, meaning that it may be possible not only to sustain the rigorous activity involved in sexual intercourse for a longer period, but also to reach a more satisfying or more frequent orgasm.

"It all goes hand in hand," she said.

High blood pressure associated with obesity can cause a lowered libido in men and women, Fowler said, and in some cases, can cause bouts with impotence.

Fat stores estrogen, Fowler said, so obesity can cause hormone imbalances, which may cause sexual problems.

The relation between fat and estrogen also is a possible explanation for the correlation between obesity and breast cancer, Fowler said.

Aside from improving performance or confidence in the bedroom, Fowler said reaching a healthy weight decreases stress on major joints including ankles, hips and knees, and lowers the chance of diabetes and heart disease.

"The health benefits are tremendous," she said.

Those who make an effort to better themselves by watching what they eat and exercising regularly often make other steps beneficial to their health, Fowler said.

Often, quitting smoking also follows the choice to achieve a goal of a healthy weight.

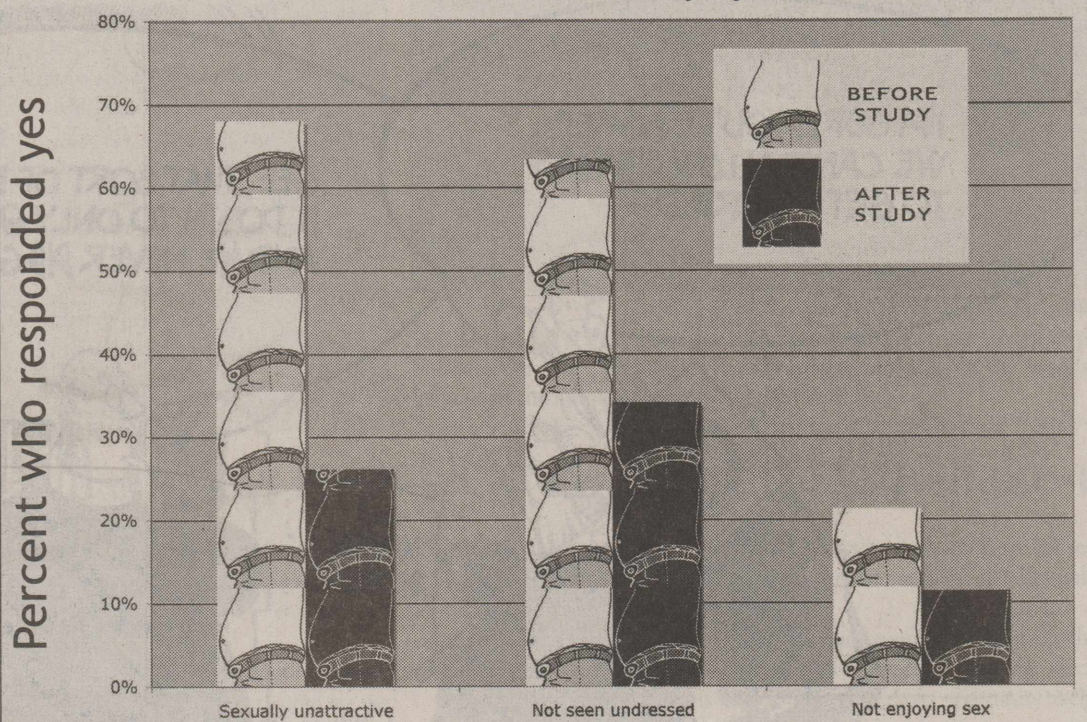

Karissa Adams, counseling psychologist at the Tech Student Counseling Center, said weight loss for the right reasons, not just five or ten vanity pounds, can lead to a feeling of confidence and a feeling of being comfortable in one's skin.

By the same token, Adams said those who feel more confident and comfortable with themselves may naturally be more interested in connecting with someone in a sexual way.

However, Adams said she wonders if the renewed feeling of formerly obese people going out into the world rather than hiding from social situations is a short or long term effect.

Keep pubic hair out of your food

Waitress offers advice on restaurant etiquette and keeping servers happy

After four years of waiting tables, I think I've heard just about every complaint that there is. You have called me out, cussed me out, grossed me out, asked me out and even tried to get me fired.

Well, Lubbock, they gave me a microphone called The Daily Toreador, and I'm using it to complain about you. To preface my tirade, I'd like to give a little information about the average server in Lubbock. We are college students, just like you.

You have called me out, cussed me out, grossed me out, asked me out and even tried to get me fired.

That implies two fundamental truths. We are tired. After work, we go home late and study for tests and get up for way-too-early classes. In addition, servers don't receive lunch breaks or even 15-minute breaks.

We are on our feet, lifting heavy dishes, trays and buckets of ice, while walking anywhere from two to 50 miles a day (I have a pedometer) without cessation. Therefore, if you don't find us pleasant and chipper, try to understand.

The second fundamental truth is the most important. We are not stupid. I've heard a toothless man calling a chemical engineering major with a 4.0 GPA a "damned idiot" and a table of Tech freshmen criticizing their waitress who was accepted to Stanford Law.

If we forget to put a lemon in your water, it's not that we can't wrap our brains around the concept (I know I'm supposed to put this lemon somewhere...in the soup?). We just forgot.

I'm going to take you through the whole dining out process in order to clear a few things up.

First, when a server greets your table, please try to pause your conversation, or at least, offer some recognition of our presence. There's nothing more dehumanizing than being treated like you don't exist.

After you have ordered, it would be a good idea to look around the restaurant. If the restaurant is obviously full, it is going to take some time to get your food, and that's not my fault. In addition, your server is very busy.

Besides your table, we have several others, and you all are competing for our attention. We also have responsibilities that take up time such as refilling, restocking, cleaning, sweeping, etc.

Contrary to popular belief, when we disappear into the back, we're not having cocktails. We're actually doing things back there. When we return with your fifth side of ranch dressing or whatever it is you can't live without, we've done it as quickly as possible. In addition, we are cognizant of the time that has elapsed since you ordered your food. When it's ready, we'll bring it out.

If there is a problem with your food when it arrives, don't eat the whole thing and then expect us to take it off your ticket. Also, don't pout. If you are unhappy with your order, we can fix it in no time. There's nothing we can do, however, if you cross your arms and lament, "Just forget it! I don't want it anymore!" like my five-year-old cousin would do.

After you have finished your meal, by all means, relax a little while. Just remember, the way we earn money is turning tables. The more tables we have, the more money we make.

Therefore, if you monopolize one of our tables for three hours studying or having a heart-to-heart with your friend, you are stealing our only means of making money. We could have had four or five more tables during that time, which means we lost about $20 on your camped-out asses. Please, take it to a coffee shop folks.

Finally, tipping. If a server gives stellar service, or even good service, the standard tip is 18 percent. You might ask yourself, why so much? If anyone would like to follow a server around for one shift, you will see why we deserve 18 percent and more. If you are a particularly needy table, it would be nice to get some reward for our extra work.

For instance, if you come in after a night of drinking and down about 24 glasses of water, that's 24 trips we have made to your table.

If you are going to tip us 10 percent or less, by all means let us know what we have done to deserve this terrible, terrible tip. If you are just cheap, like I suspect some of you are, walk out with your head hung low and pray that we don't use your information from checks and credit cards to find your house and slash your tires.

Also, it's not a joke that servers will put a pubic hair in your food. I've seen it happen. It's not pretty. The next time you walk into your favorite restaurant, please keep in mind that our $2.13 an hour salary is only augmented by your generosity.

We really do want you to enjoy your food and your visit to our restaurant. However, we don't want to have to deal with rude, impatient, inconsiderate, selfish, cheap, snobby people. Therefore, I propose everyone play by the rules I have given, and eating out would be a much more enjoyable endeavor for all players involved.

■ Kopf is a senior sociology major from Lubbock, and you should definitely leave a good tip the next time she waits on you. E-mail her at Abbie.Kopf@ttu.edu.

Democrats should quit complaining, confirm Alito

Merely days after President Bush nominated 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Samuel Alito to the Supreme Court, the attacks on the president's choice from the left are in full force, with some even going so far as to threaten a judicial filibuster. The response from the Democrats is pathetic, but far from unexpected.

They did all they could to try and come up with a reason to oppose Supreme Court Chief Justice John Roberts during his confirmation process, although he proved far too intelligent and sophisticated to lower himself to their underhanded attempts to derail his confirmation. In the end, many of the big-name Democrats just voted no because they could, citing Roberts' lack of sufficient answers to their questions in the confirmation hearings and the lack of a record for them to whine about.

In other words, they voted no just because he would not give a yes or no about overturning Roe v. Wade. But this time around, things are different. Alito has impeccable credentials and a long consistent record of good judicial philosophy. Alito has more prior judicial experience than any Supreme Court nominee in 70 years.

He has an Ivy League education, graduating from Princeton and then Yale Law School. He has 15 years of experience as a Judge on the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals, having been nominated by President George H.W. Bush and unanimously confirmed in a voice vote by the U.S. Senate.

Alito's background shows his dedication to an originalist interpretation of the U.S. Constitution. He was the lone dissenting voice on the 3rd Circuit in Planned Parenthood v. Casey (1991), the case concerning a Pennsylvania state requirement that husbands be notified before wives received abortions. Alito criticized the majority opinion's conclusion that spousal notification created an "undue burden" on pregnant women seeking an abortion.

But Alito is not a judicial activist. Alito joined the majority in 2000 that found a New Jersey law banning late-term abortions unconstitutional. Alito said in his concurring opinion that the Supreme Court required such a ban to include an exception if the mother's health was endangered.

So what do the Democrats who supported Bill Clinton's Supreme Court pick, ACLU chief counsel Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who was a left-wing ideologue who favored coed prisons and thought that 12-year-old girls should be allowed to have sex, have to say about Alito? They have resorted to racist attacks.

They have circulated a talking-points memorandum throughout the party and to friendly media outlets attacking Alito's Italian heritage. The memo claims that as a federal prosecutor Alito failed to convict members of the Lucchese crime family in a 1988 case.

The memo failed to note that Alito won a major prosecution against the Genovese crime family, Kenneth Ciomoli, chairman of the National Italian American Foundation, demanded an apology on Monday for the media's frequent references to the judge's Italian heritage and the use of the term "Scalito" to describe him as a clone of Justice Antonin Scalia.

In a statement, the foundation said it "is distressed by the attempts of some senators and the media (CNN, CBS) to marginalize Judge Samuel Alito's outstanding record, by frequent reference to his Italian heritage and by the use of the nickname, 'Scalito.'" They went on to say that "no one mentioned that Justice (Stephen) Breyer was Jewish or suggested that he was lock-step ideologically with the other Jewish Supreme Court Justice, Ruth Bader Ginsburg. It would have been outrageous to do so."

Just to be clear about this, not all Democrats support this line of thinking. Two sensible Democrats, senators Ben Nelson of Nebraska and Mark Pryor of Arkansas, said they now see no basis for a filibuster of Alito.

But, unfortunately, it is those on the far right that control the party, not those with common sense. Sen. Hillary Clinton said Monday the judicial record of Alito "raises serious questions about whether he will be steadfast in protecting our most fundamental rights." I wonder if she is looking at the same record that I am.

The bottom line is that the Democrats are scared, and once again, they are willing to do anything keep their last hold on power, the Supreme Court. What they are really scared about is the issue of abortion.

No one really knows how Alito would vote on any future abortion case. He is not likely to tip his hand at the confirmation hearings, either. He will do as Chief Justice John Roberts did at his hearing, in line with the precedent set forth by Clinton-appointed Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, and say he cannot comment on any issues that may come before the court.

But what the Democrats ignore about abortion is that Roe v. Wade was a badly-reasoned opinion. Scott Powe, a professor at the University of Texas School of Law who calls himself "100 percent pro-choice," said "Roe was terribly reasoned I think there's some requirement under the Constitution that if you cannot explain a decision and its relationship with legal materials, it's not a valid decision."

The simple fact is, contrary to what many people wrongly believe, a reversal of Roe v. Wade would not outlaw abortion. It would merely make it up to the people in their own states to decide. Is that not what the Democrats champion themselves to be, "the party of the people?" The issue of abortion should be decided by the people not by an elite group of non-elected judges. The fact is we need judges on the Supreme Court who will not legislate from the bench. We need judges like Samuel Alito.

Keep the death counter off of the front page; report more positive aspects of war in Iraq

The men and women who are members of our armed services and fighting in Iraq knew what they were getting themselves into.

Yes, out of all them fighting over there, 2,037 does not seem like that big of a number.

But look at it like this, 2,037 families have lost a loved one in the line of duty. I know many people who are fighting in Iraq, ranging from close friends to, most importantly, my boyfriend.

For someone who has a loved one over there 2,037 deaths is a lot.

For us that live day-by-day hoping our loved one will come home safely, we don't need the constant reminder of how many have given their lives so others can enjoy freedom.

But most of Americans take freedom for granted. If it weren't for democracy and the fighting of previous wars, we would not have the freedoms we enjoy so much.

Obviously democracy has been working.

If you don't like it, there are plenty of other countries you can move to, let's see how they compare to America. Have we forgotten why this started? Need I mention 9/11?

I am not saying we need to hide or deny what is going on over there, it is a part of life, and it is real, very real.

Here are a few questions: Why does the counter have to be on the front page? Put it elsewhere — still being published, but not flaunted.

Why is everything focused on the negative? There is positive being achieved, like all the reconstruction our troops are doing.

Why not print something about the units that have made it home safely?

Maybe we all need to open our eyes a little bigger and realize there is good and bad going on over there. Let's actually get both sides.

Vasquez: Rosa Parks letter satire, not racism

I have decided that most of the school needs to go back to elementary school because a key word was not learned — exaggeration.

I thought that in comparing Rosa Parks to such extreme cases as pedophiles and Charles Manson, the students would pick up on this, apparently not. No one seems to remember the letter my own was in response to, claiming that by not lowering the flag last week, it proved that our school was racist.

Now, I'm sure you all are educated enough to know that's an outlandish claim and not warranted. But then why would you take my tone literally — it was proving a point. I've received threats over this and that just further proves the point.

No one claimed anything horrible about this girl who wrote the original article, even though she made such an outrageous claim, but everyone jumped on the chance for me to get "lit up" at the African-American Organization's meeting last night.

Yes, that is a direct quote. I was invited to attend the meeting last night to explain myself, and members of the organization actually said I was going to get "lit up."

So then why do we condone this sort of violence even though it's something that Rosa Parks herself did not believe in? People are dying everyday to make a difference for our country, whether you agree with the war or not, and they are not honored.

Rosa Parks should be remembered, and should've been honored during her lifetime, instead of using her death to call others racist. It's amazing that everyone so quickly drops that word if someone voices an opinion.

Even being a minority, I'm considered a huge racist, instead of people reading between the lines and making an educated decision on what I'm saying.

Apparently graduate and law schools don't teach people how to read outside of these lines, to understand what someone is saying rather than taking it out of context. My claims were outrageous and for a point, though a much larger point has been proven from the reaction. I'm sorry, I thought this was America.

Apparently our schools are not teaching us how to think, only how to read. Good night and good luck.

Board of Regents discusses retention, Bush library

By MICHELLE CASADY
STAFF WRITER

The board of regents met Thursday to discuss the possibility of the George W. Bush Presidential Library finding a home in West Texas, among other topics.

David Miller, chairman of the West Texas Coalition for the George W. Bush Presidential Library, spoke at the meeting.

"I've had lots of people ask me lately what our chances are of actually getting the library to come to West Texas," Miller said. "All I can say is, 'don't bet against us.'"

He said Texas Tech has a good chance of obtaining the library because it is the only public university still vying for it, and because of the large percentage of faith-based colleges in the West Texas Coalition.

Miller showed a short promotional film during his presentation, which will be sent to President Bush and his selection committee.

"We specifically targeted George and Laura (Bush) in the film by featuring familiar people and voices throughout," he said.

Tech Regent Rick Francis spoke on behalf of the board of regents of the board.

"We are in full-support of this campaign," he said. "We have also prepared a statement regarding the Bush Presidential Library to be presented to the selection committee in Washington, D.C."

He said the statement reiterates the wishes of the Tech community and the West Texas Coalition to become the home of the presidential library.

The West Texas Coalition has raised more than $100 million to fund the building of the library, Miller said.

Provost William Marcy proposed an honorary Doctorate of Medicine degree be given, posthumously, to Shannon Sabbar. A motion was passed and carried to do so.

Tech President Jon Whitmore proposed a plaque for former Tech president Donald Haragan be developed and installed on the outside of the administration building.

"This is something that has been done for all past presidents and I believe it is time to consider doing so for Dr. Haragan," Whitmore said.

Marcy did a presentation concerning enrollment management and faculty hires, and said more focus needs to be placed on recruiting and retaining new students. He also talked about tuition.

"The average credit hours taken by an incoming freshman has raised significantly since 1999," Marcy said. "If we were to go to a flat rate tuition and students were taking more than 15 credit hours, they would be getting a discounted rate."

"I've had lots of people asking me lately what our chances are of actually getting the library ... All I can say is, 'don't bet against us.'"

Junction to offer winter session

For Texas Tech students at Junction, Santa Clause will have credit hours under their Christmas tree.

The Tech Center at Junction will have a winter session, where students can earn hours toward their degree during the holiday season break. The credit hours from winter session will go into the Spring 2006 semester.

Grant Hall, academic director for the Junction campus, said the winter session is a 15-day semester similar to the 15-day intersessions offered in May of every year.

Ceramics, General Ornithology, Prescribed Burns, Principles of Ecology and Texas Prehistory and Archaeology are the courses offered during the winter break.

Hall said the rural environment presents a great learning atmosphere for students.

In addition to having adequate surroundings for learning, Hall said the atmosphere brings professors and students closer together.

"The really good thing about Junction, it allows for a close association between professors and students," he said. "It makes for a much better learning experience with students."

He said classes will begin at 7 p.m. Dec. 26 and will end Jan. 9.

Hall said classes will start late Dec. 26, allowing students to have more time to celebrate Christmas with their friends and family.

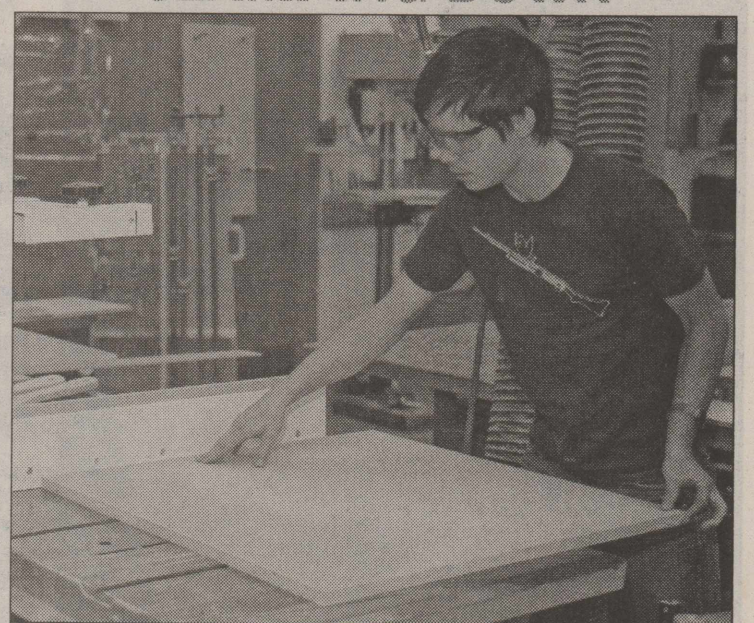

He said professors will determine plans for New Year's Eve and New Year's Day. The students might have time to celebrate New Year's Eve and recover on New Year's Day, he said.

Housing and dining will be provided at Junction.

The deadline for winter session applications is Dec. 1.

Bush rankings still sinking, some GOP allies want staff shake-up

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Bush's job approval has fallen to the lowest level of his presidency amid worries over the Iraq war, a fumbled Supreme Court nomination, the indictment of one White House aide and uncertainty about another.

Concerned that the president has lost his footing, some influential Republicans are urging Bush to shake up his staff and bring in new blood.

A new AP-Ipsos poll found Bush's approval rating was at 37 percent, compared with 39 percent a month ago. About 59 percent of those surveyed said they disapprove.

The intensity of disapproval is the strongest to date, with 42 percent now saying they "strongly disapprove" of how Bush is handling his job — twice as many as the 20 percent who said they "strongly approve."

A year after his re-election, Bush's second term has been marred by rising U.S. casualties in Iraq, a failed attempt to restructure Social Security, Hurricane Katrina missteps, rising fuel costs and his forced withdrawal of the Supreme Court nomination of Harriet Miers.

In a case involving the exposure of a CIA agent married to an Iraq war critic, Vice President Dick Cheney's former aide, I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby, pleaded not guilty on Thursday in federal court to charges of obstruction of justice, perjury and lying to investigators. The case casts a continuing cloud over Cheney and keeps Bush's closest adviser, Karl Rove, in legal jeopardy. Republicans are worrying about losing their majorities in Congress in the 2006 elections and hope Bush can reverse his slide.

Several senior Republicans who are close to the White House and Rove say there has been a lot of talk inside and outside the White House about the need for him to leave, but they're picking up no indication from him or his associates that it's going to happen — at least anytime soon.

Neither Bush nor Rove has seemed to get the message, the Republicans say.

Democrats have kept up the attack. "The 2006 midterm elections will be our next opportunity to change the environment of corruption and incompetence in Washington," Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., said Thursday in a fundraising letter to Democrats. Reid has called for Rove's resignation and a "thorough house cleaning" at the White House.

serious significance," he said. Last year, Tech and A&M started working together to plan safe game day activities.

"We went down to College Station and worked with everyone from the Campus Life to the Athletics Department," Elkins said. "There is a lot of planning that goes into events as big as football games."

Elkins said the schools plan every detail from pre-game activities to where the football players will board the buses after the game.

"We take every aspect very seriously," he said.

Maj. Gordon Hoffman, Tech assistant police chief, said the A&M game is no different than any other Big 12 game.

"We will staff the game like any game against Texas or Oklahoma," he said. "There will be a lot of people attending the game. But traditionally the A&M game does not equal more violence or injury."

Hoffman said the trend at football games is minor injuries.

"Nothing more than a few people tripping on steps and scraping their knees," he said. "Nothing too serious."

Hoffman said the main reason he is concerned because the game starts at 6 p.m.

"There seems to be a trend of more public intoxications at the games that start later in the day," he said.

Fans coming onto the field also is a concern, Hoffman said.

"We have the personnel to help prevent it, but I don't think we could stop it all together," he said.

Hoffman said because Tech is supposed to win, he does not think fans will storm the field.

Matt Fowler, Student Government Association chief of staff, is in charge of coordinating RaiderGate. He said he anticipates a safe environment at Saturday's pre-game festivities.

"We have enough security to monitor the situation," he said. "The fans have been relatively calm this year."

Fowler said though A&M is in town and country band Reckless Kelly will play at RaiderGate, he doesn't anticipate any problems.

"Last year during the Texas game, we had Roger Creager," he said. "He is one of the most popular acts around, and Texas is one of our biggest rivals. But the students, for the most part, stayed out of trouble."

Fowler said he does not think an incident like the 2001 bonfire accident at A&M would ever happen at Tech.

In 2001, the night before a football game, a bonfire collapsed killing 12 A&M students and injuring 27 others. Chris Harrell, a spokesman for the A&M Athletic Department, said the bonfire has not been burned since the accident.

Fowler said Tech uses the A&M incident as a reminder of what can happen.

"We have a bonfire every year before Homecoming," he said. "But we monitor it extremely closely because we don't want a tragedy like the one in College Station to happen here in Lubbock. Obviously, you cannot eliminate all of the risks, but I don't think anything that serious would happen here."

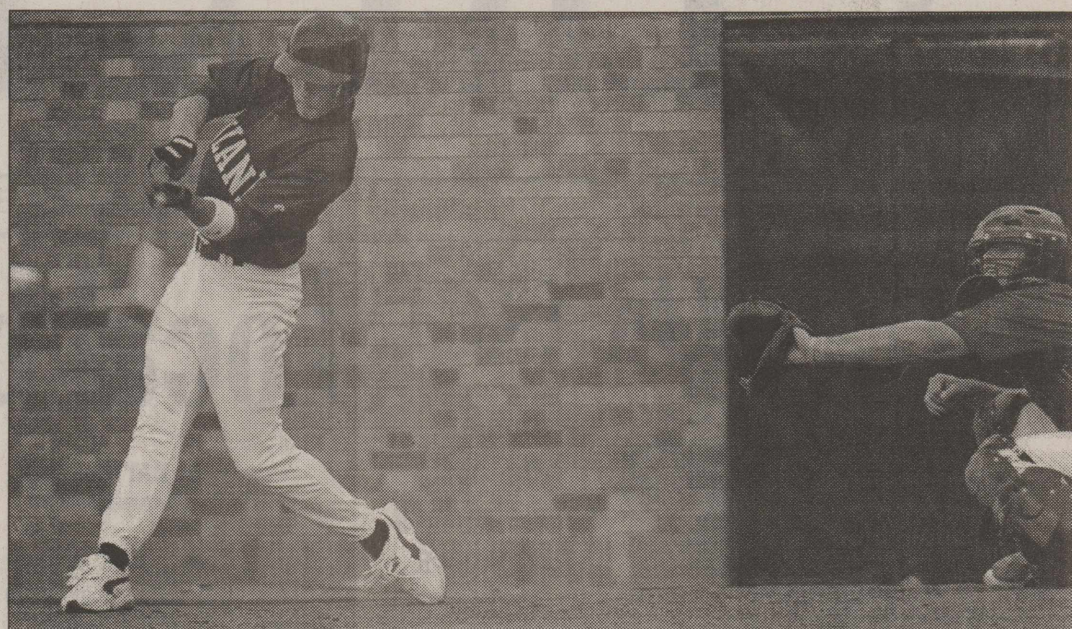

A&M Police Chief Bert Kretzschmar said all big games see an increase in alcohol use.

"Tech itself is not any different than any other big games," he said. "We see an increase in public intoxications and other alcohol-related problems at rivalry games."

Fowler said anyone attending the game or game-related activities should be safe and have fun.

"Whether you are a student or someone coming out of town to watch the game, it is all about having a good time and celebrating what it means to be a Red Raider," he said.

Europeans, Red Cross, rights groups to investigate reports of secret CIA prisons

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The European Union and the continent's top human rights group said Thursday they will investigate allegations the CIA set up secret jails in eastern Europe and elsewhere to interrogate terror suspects, and the Red Cross demanded access to any prisoners.

Human Rights Watch said it has evidence, based on flight logs, that indicate the CIA transported suspects captured in Afghanistan to Poland and Romania. But the two countries — and others in the former Soviet bloc — denied the allegations. U.S. officials have refused to confirm or deny the claims.

Such prisons, European officials say, would violate the continent's human rights principles. At work may be a complex web of global politics, in which eastern European countries face choices between the views of the European Union and their interest in close ties with the United States.

The International Committee of the Red Cross expressed strong interest in the claims, first reported Wednesday in the Washington Post, that the CIA has been hiding and interrogating some of its most important al-Qaida captives at Soviet-era compounds.

Red Cross chief spokeswoman Antonella Notari said the agency asked Washington about the allegations and requested access to the prisons if they exist. The Red Cross, which has exclusive rights to visit terror suspects detained at a U.S. military base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, long has been concerned about reports U.S. officials were hiding detainees from ICRC delegates.

Europe's top human rights organization, the Council of Europe, said it, too, would investigate.

Notari said the Red Cross, which also monitors conditions at U.S. detention centers in Afghanistan and Iraq, has been unable to find some people who reportedly were detained. She said the Red Cross was "concerned about the fate of an unknown number of persons detained as part of what is called the 'global war on terror' and held in undisclosed places of detention."

In implicating Poland and Romania, Human Rights Watch examined flight logs of CIA aircraft from 2001 to 2004, said Mark Garlasco, a senior military analyst with the New York-based organization. He said the group matched the flight patterns with testimony from some of the hundreds of detainees in the war on terrorism who have been released by the United States.

fairly even mix of retirees, college students and families.

He said the release of the index was especially positive for Lubbock considering 319 markets were studied and compared. It is another positive factor potential residents probably will consider when looking for a new city to call home, Tucker said.

The index was released just as the first wave of students begins to make preparations for living arrangements for the next school year.

Lequice Kohout, associate director of Housing and Residence Life at Tech, said more than 1,000 Tech students already have signed agreements to renew their on-campus housing contracts. Yet, for students planning to live off campus, the Hub City's ranking by Coldwell Bankers is something to consider.

Tyson Ritter, a sophomore electrical and computer engineering major from Midland, said he moved off campus and into a house that his friend owns after his freshmen year.

Ritter said the Lubbock residential market has decent prices compared with other college towns.

"The price was not really a deciding factor in my decision to come to Tech, but it's definitely a plus," he said. "I like it a lot because it's cheap."

Ritter said in his particular situation, living in a house opposed to an apartment or residence hall is the cheapest option.

Gaby Guerin, a sophomore architecture major from Austin, said the Lubbock house that she resides in is more economical than it would be in another city.

"It's an investment for my parents," Guerin said. "The value goes up on Tech houses like crazy."

She said in the past five years, the value on her house has increased by roughly $40,000.

Sophomore Eric Trevino said though he lives in an apartment, moving into a house is an appealing option. The sports science major from Kerrville said his friend has been looking into the price listings of Lubbock homes.

"Right now, an apartment is a little cheaper," he said. "So, I guess it just depends."

annual
'PIG-OUT' raises money
for cancer
today

Aerocare, the emergency transportation services at the Covenant Health System, actually is encouraging overeating.

At the second annual Aeromedical Pig-Out 6 p.m. today at the pavilion at the County Line Restaurant on FM 2641, guests can eat and observe the activity for $15.

Greg Gust, director of Aerocare, said the event raises money for the charity the winning team chooses.

"Whoever can eat the most food in a certain amount of time wins," he said.

Each participant is given two pounds of brisket, two pounds of link sausage, a rack of beef ribs, potatoes, green beans and a loaf of bread.

Guests can eat the same food items given to the participants along with chicken.

Gust said he believes the most entertaining part of the Pig-Out is the teams. Each team member dress up in humorous costumes before they begin attempting to eat the large amount of food.

"They have all sorts of costumes," he said. "It's pretty funny."

Callie Parker, an intern at Covenant and a senior public relations and Spanish major from Canyon, said the event is worth attending because the participants are excited to be a part of the contest.

"They dressed up as ladies last year, and some wore pig noses," she said. "It's guaranteed to be entertaining," she said.

Four representatives from different ambulance services across West Texas participate in the eating contest. Lifestar of Amarillo and Shannon AirMed1 of San Angelo will be participating along with Aerocare.

Gust said the Pig-Out contests always are successful.

"We had great participation," he said.

The organization donated $1,300 to the Chris Moyer Cancer Fund. Moyer is a communications specialist whose daughter has cancer.

Local band finds its 'groove'

By KATY MERLET
FEATURES WRITER

Funky, electric, folk, blues and Americana are a few of the genres making up the sound of Doctor Skoob and the Acoustic Groove.

Doug Haines, singer and songwriter for Doctor Skoob and the Acoustic Groove, never expected to end up in the Hub City.

"I was moving out west and my transmission blew out in my car, so I ended up staying for good with a friend here in Lubbock," he said. "I traveled for a little while out west but always ended up back here. I ended up here by accident."

Haines, a.k.a. Doctor Skoob, journey began soon after the first touch of the guitar. His first gig was at the Recovery Room where he played solo. Not long after his first gig, he met a bass guitar player and quickly formed Doctor Skoob and the Snacktones.

"Doctor Skoob originated from that band, because I would always wear an old Scooby Doo t-shirt and my friend would always call me that name, it just kind of stuck," he said.

After the band did not work out, Haines went on to play with The Los SOB's as the lead guitarist. Haines took a year off to travel, and soon after he returned, the Acoustic Groove was born.

"It is taken me awhile to get here, but I feel lucky to play with my band," he said. "They have an amazing talent."

The band members include Nic Schute on trumpet; Jobe Seeberger on bass guitar; Zak Sloam on guitar; Dave Hernandez on drums and Fletcher Murchison on mandolin.

The band member's variety of influences is what makes this band sound flow smoothly together.

Schute said he grew up playing jazz, where as Seeberger played in a SKA, punk and a Christian alternative band. Sloam said in his household, it was the blues, and Murchison said bluegrass influenced him to change from the guitar to the mandolin.

Hernandez said he remembers getting his first drum set and jamming out to classic rock, and Haines said his mom would listen to Dean Martin and Irish and Scottish music.

The band identifies their music as being Cosmic Americana, which is a name Haines came up with.

"The cosmic comes from the Willie Nelson and Kris Kristofferson sound, cosmic cowboy, and the Americana is the folk sound we have," Haines said. "Everyone asks that question and we have a little of everything."

The band has close to 150 original songs, 70 of which always are in rotation. Haines said songwriting comes natural to him.

"I don't over think when I am writing," he said. "I just write down the first thing that comes to my head, not all of will make sense but that's when you revising comes in."

Haines said his songs revolve around what is going on at the time, and lately, he has been writing poems that he turns into songs.

Poda Guthrie, a student at South Plains from Longview, said Doctor Skoob and the Acoustic Groove is an awesome band.

"They have a lot of energy on stage, and they make you want to move," he said.

"They are awesome guys and all about music."

Doctor Skoob and the Acoustic Groove perform every Wednesday night at Rocky LaRue's. They currently have a live CD named "Live Lubbock Nights."

They have alot of energy on stage, and they make you want to move.

Navajo exhibit opens Sunday

After the Aggies ride into West Texas Saturday, the Navajo Saddle Blankets Exhibition at the Museum of Texas Tech opens Sunday with "Navajo Saddle Blankets: Textiles to Ride in the American West."

According to the museum's Web site, the exhibit will demonstrate all facets of the trade of saddle blanket creation, including the different tools and materials used as well as the importance of saddle blankets, both economically and socially.

The exhibit will be up until Jan. 29, and admission to the museum is free. The museum is located at the corner of Indiana Avenue and Fourth Street, at 3301 Fourth St. For more information, call the museum at (806) 742-2442.

Run off the Aggies early Saturday

While they actually may not be cheering within the confines of Jones SBC Stadium, several students, faculty, staff and guests will show their support for Texas Tech in the Ambush the Aggies Campus Run at 9 a.m. Saturday.

Two courses are offered for the run. Both the two- and four-mile routes will begin at the Robert H. Ewalt Student Recreation Center and go through campus.

While there is no charge for the run, T-shirts are available for $7. Registration is recommended, as a limited number of T-shirts are available.

For more information, call the Rec Sports Office at (806) 742-3351 or go by Room 202 of the Student Recreation Center.

PLAYERS TO WATCH

TEXAS TECH

CODY HODGES

FIFTH-YEAR SENIOR QUARTERBACK

After a sub-par performance last week against Baylor, look for Hodges to come out with something to prove against the Aggies. Hodges leads the conference in passing yards per game and total offense, and should exploit a weak A&M secondary.

TEXAS A&M

JAXSON APPEL

SENIOR DEFENSIVE BACK

Appel is a candidate for both the Bedark and Thorpe awards, recognizing the nation's top defensive backs. He is one of two Aggies with three interceptions and must lead the secondary in an improved performance if A&M hopes to keep pace.

THE MATCHUP

QUARTERBACKS

Hodges should pick apart the 115th ranked Aggie pass defense, but Reggie McNeal is always a dual threat.

RUNNING BACKS

McNeal is only eight yards behind Taurean Henderson in rushing yards. But he's not a running back.

RECEIVERS

Jason Carter is a threat for the Aggies — but he's all they've got.

OFFENSIVE LINE

A&M is second in the conference in rush offense, and has allowed only seven sacks all year.

DEFENSIVE FRONT

Both units virtually are even in rush yards allowed and sacks, and have standouts on the line and at the backer position.

SECONDARY

The Aggies rank 115th in pass defense, while the Raider secondary has been a strength all year.

Touchdowns to go

Quick scores common in the Tech offense

By BRYAN WENDELL
MANAGING EDITOR

It used to be said of the Texas Tech basketball team that if you shut down Andre Emmett, you silenced the Red Raiders.

With this year's Tech football team, however, if you put away running back Taurean Henderson or top yardage receiver Joel Filani, you've only just begun to shut down the Raider offense.

"We got too many threats out there," said wide receiver Robert Johnson, who has become a menace for opposing defenses with 88.6 yards per game.

Johnson embodies the main reason why the Tech offense is so hard to stop: the big play.

It's the reason Mike Leach doesn't break a sweat on third-and-30 or become agitated when his offense has been denied on several consecutive drives.

Take the contest against Baylor as an example. Tech couldn't get anything started for the first three quarters but then poured it on in the fourth.

As has been happening all season, the offensive sluggishness was halted by a big play.

Against the Bears, it was a 50-yard touchdown pass to Johnson on third down.

Three minutes later, Henderson found running room for a 60-yard run that set up another touchdown. Tech quarterback Cody Hodges remembered the play that was created by his own ingenuity at the line.

"We had the play set, and then we dummed a pass play," Hodges said. "As soon as I dummed a pass play, they all yelled pass."

The trick worked, and the Bears found themselves choking on Henderson's dust.

The 60-yard run was the longest run for Tech this season, but big plays have become Tech's trademark.

In the air, Hodges has completions of 22 yards or longer in each game. He has hit receivers 45 or more yards away in four games this season.

On the ground, Henderson has broken runs for 20 or more yards in all but two games this year.

The key to these large gains, Leach said, is not to get too anxious.

"You gotta be patient," he said, "and keep pounding until stuff starts going your way."

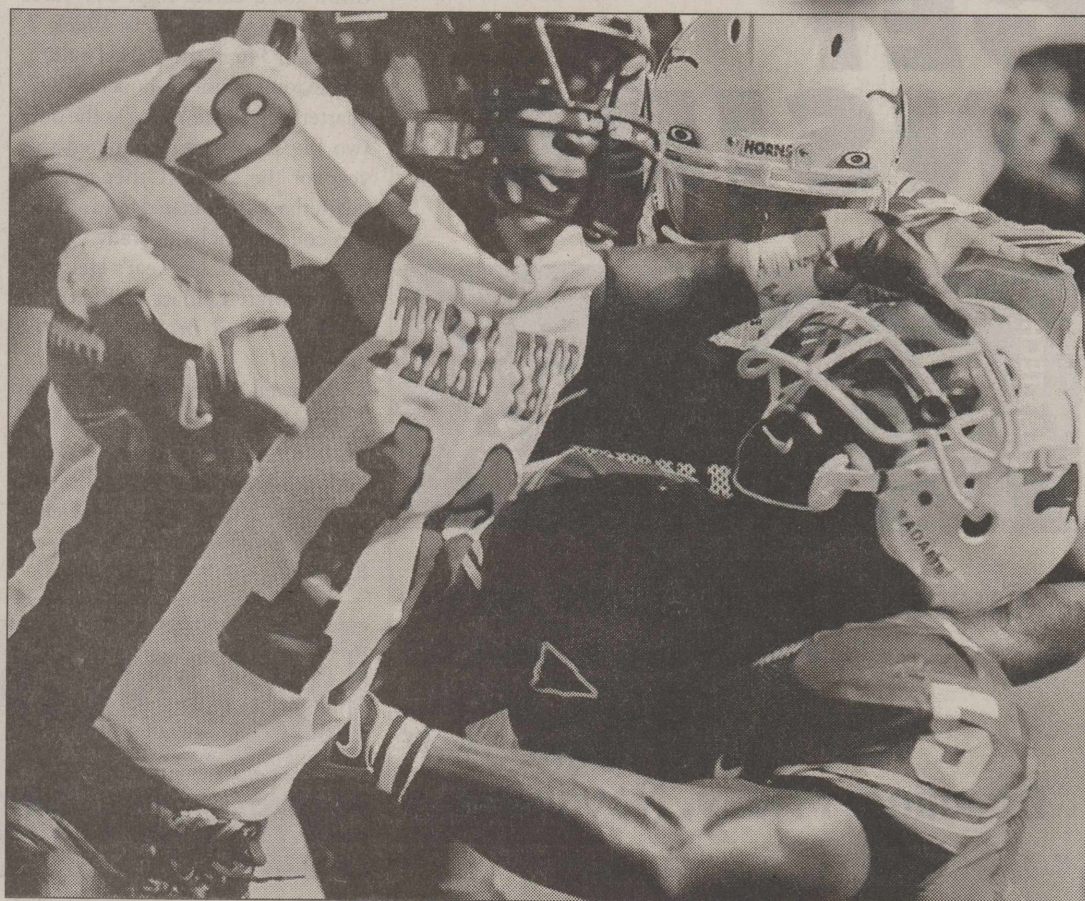

Though other teams might panic and stop throwing the ball downfield if on each drive the passes aren't finding their intended target, Johnson said the Raiders remain calm.

"We can't get frustrated," he said. "We just keep doing what we have to do."

If Tech can employ that strategy at 6 p.m. Saturday at Jones SBC Stadium against A&M, it could be a long night for the Aggie secondary.

That secondary is responsible for the Big 12's worst pass defense, giving up 307.2 yards per game in the air. That ranks the Aggies a dismal 115th in Division I football and highlights an unfair matchup between the NCAA's top-rated passing offense against one of its worst passing defenses.

Hodges, however will need to be aware of Texas A&M's defensive backs Jaxson Appel and Marquis Carpenter who

CAITY COLVARD/The Daily Toreador

TEXAS TECH RUNNING back senior Taurean Henderson, No. 19, throws a stiff arm in the Raiders loss to Texas Oct. 22 in Austin.

each have three interceptions this season.

Henderson will be facing the Big 12's 8th-best rushing defense. The Aggies allow a stout 119 yards per game on the ground.

Speaking of stout, this year's Texas A&M team can be classified as the beefiest in Aggie history. Twenty Texas A&M football players weight in at more than 300 pounds. That outweighs any Aggie squad in the history of the program with 19 percent of its players passing the 300-pound plateau.

Perhaps because of their largeness or maybe in spite of it, Hodges said he will be expecting the blitz just like any other week.

"I assume A&M will blitz," he said. "Every team we have faced has. They are athletic guys all around."

The Aggies, who haven't won in Lubbock since 1993, will be looking to their senior quarterback Reggie McNeal to make big plays.

He drove A&M to an overtime win last season with 55 yards rushing and 254 yards passing.

This season, he is averaging 80 yards rushing and 209 yards passing, a close comparison to his performance against the Raiders a year ago.

"He's really athletic," Hodges said. "He has a strong arm, and he's even better with his feet. I have a lot of respect for him as a quarterback."

One may be inclined to draw comparisons between the two quarterbacks, since both can move the ball with their feet as well as their arms, but Leach isn't buying it.

"I think they are kind of different actually," he said. "Reggie is specifically incorporated in their running game. They utilize him as another running back. He throws the ball well and effectively. In Cody's case, he is going to throw before he is going to run. But then also, at times, he will go up to the line of scrimmage and select a play."

When Hodges does that, as happened last week against Baylor, that small change can turn into a big gain.

Aggies can't be blamed for jealousy; look at what they do for fun

Texas A&M's jealousy of Texas Tech is getting ridiculous. I heard from a friend that last weekend in College Station, there were a couple girls that chose to dress as "Texas Tech skanks" for Halloween.

You have to feel bad for those girls. They spend all day romping around in some pasture trying to keep their Rockies from riding up and keeping their boots free of cow crap. Then in their free time they're seeing who can ride a sheep the longest, or betting on whose pig can eat the most slop.

So when they see shots of girls in the crowd at the Jones, of course they're going to feel something like the dirt they were analyzing for in their 2 p.m. lab.

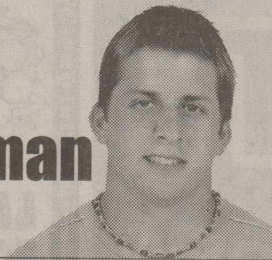

Maybe it's because A&M hasn't won in Lubbock since 1993; maybe it's because making a bowl is looking less and less likely for the Ags, or maybe they're finally realizing that maroon is hideous.

Any way you look at it, the Aggies might as well add some green to their school colors to match the envy.

So when you see an A&M supporter around the LBK this weekend, try to refrain from pointing out the reasons people at Tech are just better. But when we need an expert on sticking an arm up a cow's orifice — we'll know who to call.

Maybe it's because A&M hasn't won in Lubbock since 1993; maybe it's because making a bowl is looking less and less likely for the Ags.

Miami (6-1)

So the Hokie's think they're better than Texas — now's their chance to prove it. A win over Miami gives Va. Tech the inside track to surpassing the 'Horns in the BCS rankings. But it won't exactly be a stroll through the park that is Blacksburg, Va.

They're facing a Hurricane team that has won six in a row since a Week 1 loss to Florida State, and boasts the nations No.

1 defense. Marcus Vick has shown he can dissect a defense, but hasn't faced a defensive unit near the caliber of Miami.

In front of a hostile Hokie crowd the 'Canes will keep it close for four quarters but I can't see them pulling off an upset. Reason being — Miami sophomore quarterback Kyle Wright has eight interceptions to 10 touchdown passes, and will face the nation's No. 2 defense. Too bad Mack Brown can't plead to computers....

Virginia Tech 17, Miami 13

No. 10 Penn State (8-1) vs. No. 14 Wisconsin (8-1)

I've said it before and I'll say it again — Penn State is for real. If not for giving up a last-second touchdown strike to Michigan Oct. 15, the Nittany Lions could be talking Rose Bowl. Critics say Penn State is too young, but 79-year-old coach Joe Paterno has enough age for the entire squad.

The winner of this game isn't handed the Big 10 title altogether — but they get a lot closer. The Badgers have done little to impress me this year. Yes, they beat an undefeated Michigan team Sept. 24, but the early hype surrounding the Wolverines was premature. Wisconsin won't sniff their average of 39.7 points per game. JoePa and his Nittany Lions will continue to look impressive...

Penn State 34, Wisconsin 21

No. 25 Colorado (6-2) vs. Missouri (5-3)

The winner of this Big 12 north showdown gets sweet little prize — another humiliation at the hands of Texas in the Big 12 championship. But Saturday's matchup should at least provide some entertainment before the arrival of the inevitable.

Colorado has looked strong all year considering their two losses came at the hands of No. 2 (Texas) and then-No. 12 (Miami). However, last week's three-point escape over Kansas State didn't exactly gain them respect. Missouri comes into the contest with the nations ninth-best rushing attack and could cause problems for the Buffalo defense.

If Tigers' quarterback Brad Smith can somehow find a way to perform to his potential, Missouri has a chance to steal one on the road. But for those that haven't already learned — don't bet on Brad Smith...

Colorado 30, Missouri 20

Bus carrying football team overturns

ROYSE CITY (AP) — A school bus carrying junior varsity football players to a game overturned Thursday afternoon. A dozen people were taken to hospitals.

Television footage showed at least eight Royse City players, dressed in their uniforms, lying on the ground near the bus and being treated shortly after the accident. Ambulances and medical helicopters carried the injured to hospitals in Rowlett and Dallas.

Royse City Superintendent Mike Harris said everyone got off the bus safely.

"Everyone was walking when they came off the bus," he said.

April Foran, director of corporate communications for Parkland Hospital, one of the injured was brought there. The family asked that no details be given out. Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas was expecting three students, including one being transported by helicopter, said hospital spokeswoman Maria Carpenter. Others were taken by Lakepointe Medical Center in Rowlett.

Harris said he thought the helicopter transfers were precautionary.

The 77-passenger bus was carrying players to a game with Nevada Community, said Tammi Loveless, transportation secretary for the Royse City School District.

Tech QB named to Maxwell Award list

By TRAVIS CRAM
SENIOR SPORTS WRITER

Texas Tech quarterback Cody Hodges was announced Tuesday as one of 12 semifinalists for the Maxwell Award — given to the nation's top collegiate football player each year.

Hodges leads the nation in passing yards with 3,095, and average yards per game with 386.8. He is fourth nationally with a 68.1 completion percentage after leading the nation the previous two weeks.

The 6-foot-2 fifth-year senior threw for a career-high 643 yards against Kansas State in Week 7, including 346 in the second half.

He joins Heisman-hopeful Texas quarterback Vince Young as the only two Big 12 players nominated this year for the award. Other notable quarterbacks nominated from around the country include Brady Quinn of Notre Dame, last year's Heisman winner Matt Leinart of Southern California and Brodie Croyle of Alabama.

Maxwell voting will begin Nov. 7 and will close Nov. 25. The three finalists will make the trip to New York on Dec. 8 when the winner will be announced at the Home Depot College Football Awards Show on ESPN.

Lady Raiders show no love

Tech defeats Love & Basketball in first exhibition outing

By TRAVIS CRAM
SENIOR SPORTS WRITER

The Texas Tech Lady Raiders had to compete in their first exhibition game without the help of senior Chesley Dabbs, after she suffered a knee injury, but may have found a new player to help out.

Freshman guard LaVonda "Tiny" Henderson scored 10 points as Tech went on to defeat Love and Basketball, 68-59, Thursday, at the United Spirit Arena.

Henderson racked up 10 points in her first game as a Lady Raider along with senior guard Erin Grant's 14 and junior Alesha Robertson's 14 points.

The traveling basketball squad of Love and Basketball began the game determined not to go down without a fight after beating California State-Fullerton, 63-51, on Sunday.

They put the game at a 17-17 tie with the Lady Raiders midway through the first half after two three-point baskets by Natalie Nakase and Rosa Bernasconi, topped off by a layup from Mary Apiafi to put Love and Basketball on an 8-0 run.

Robertson answered the call for Tech by hitting the first team three-pointer of the night for the Lady Raiders. Davis and Myrick added pressure on defense but would need more than that to hold off L&B.

After Nakase hit her second three-pointer to pull within four of the Lady Raiders, Henderson put Tech back out in front with two field goals to take a 30-26 lead at the half.

Tech ended any hopes of Love and Basketball winning the contest, as the Lady Raiders went on a 15-2 run in the second half. Grant led the way with the first six points to open the half for Tech and would take an early seat to allow some more time for Baughman and Henderson.

Denise Woods had 15 points in the effort for Love and Basketball along with Danielle Rainey's 11.

LaToya Davis had a solid performance in the game, grabbing 13 rebounds and 13 points to help in the Lady Raider victory.

Tech will play against Everyone's Internet Tuesday before opening the season against LSU in the State Farm Tip-Off Classic Nov. 13.

Internet provides easy access to steroids

WASHINGTON (AP) — Any teenager with a computer and an e-mail address can get anabolic steroids, and distributors face little chance of being caught, congressional investigators said Thursday.

The Internet makes it easy for distributors, mainly from overseas, to avoid detection, and penalties are much lighter than for those caught with many other illegal drugs, according to a report by the Government Accountability Office.

The report was released as a group that brings together professional, college and high school athletic representatives, advocacy groups and parents of steroid victims held its second meeting to address the growing problem of steroid use by young people.

CBS to buy college sports network CSTV

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS, which is about to split away from the Viacom Inc. media conglomerate, has already made its first acquisition deal, agreeing to pay $325 million for a two-year-old college sports network called CSTV Networks Inc.

CBS plans to pay for the company, which was founded by sports programming entrepreneur Brian Bedol, with stock in CBS Corp., one of the two companies to be created by the end of the year when Viacom splits itself up.

Bedol was also a co-founder of The Classic Sports Network, a cable channel that became popular with non-game sports programming such as documentaries and nostalgia shows. That channel was sold in 1997 to Walt Disney Co.'s ESPN and is now known as ESPN Classic.

Under the deal announced Wednesday, Bedol will continue to operate CSTV and report to Leslie Moonves, who will run CBS following its breakup from Viacom.

CSTV was founded in 2003 and currently has 15 million subscribers, offering a variety of sports such as tennis to lacrosse that might not otherwise get big programming deals. Bedol, in an interview, likened college sports to "a year-round Olympics."

The deal also includes a network of more than 250 official college sports Web sites that are operated for their respective schools by CSTV, as well as CSTV's own Web site, <http://www.CSTV.com>.

Unlike the Classic Sports Network, which was folded into ESPN's existing group of sports channels, CSTV retain its unique blend of college sports programming even after it becomes part of the giant CBS organization, Bedol said.

Alito hearings to begin second week of January, Bush wants faster nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-controlled Senate will begin hearings Jan. 9 on Judge Samuel Alito's appointment to the Supreme Court, spurning President Bush's call for a final confirmation vote before year's end.

"It simply wasn't possible to accommodate the schedule that the White House wanted," Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said late Thursday. He outlined a schedule that envisions five days of hearings, followed by a vote in committee on Jan. 17 and the full Senate on Jan. 20.

Bush nominated Alito on Monday to fill the seat of Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, who has often held the swing vote on cases involving controversial issues such as abortion and affirmative action.

Conservatives eager to replace O'Connor and push the court to the right have swung behind Alito's nomination, and in making the appointment the president urged the Senate to vote this year.

Democrats, citing a need to review the voluminous record that Alito has compiled in 15 years as a judge on the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, favor waiting until the new year for the beginning of hearings. The 55-year-old judge has written an estimated 300 rulings and participated in roughly 1,500 cases.

Democratic Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, who joined Specter at a news conference, took several slaps at the White House pressure. "We are grownups, and we know how to get this done," said Leahy, the top Democrat on the Judiciary Committee. While not meeting Bush's timetable, he added, "We will be going at a very fast pace."

Separately, the National Archives issued a statement during the day saying its staff would need several weeks to complete a search of Department of Justice records for any material pertaining to Alito. The agency also is seeking documents at the Ronald Reagan and George Bush presidential libraries that might shed light on Alito's actions or views, the statement said.

Alito worked in both administrations and was a federal prosecutor in his home state of New Jersey before his confirmation as an appeals court judge.

Since Monday, Alito has met with more than a dozen senators in courtesy calls, a time-honored process that involves having the nominee walk from one office to another.

This was a day with a difference, though. With lawmakers involved in a daylong series of votes that kept them in the Capitol, Alito was ushered into a room a few paces off the Senate floor so senators — Cornyn, Trent Lott, R-Miss., and Robert Bennett, R-Utah — could be brought to him.

Libby pleads 'not guilty'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President Dick Cheney's former chief of staff pleaded not guilty to a five-count felony indictment Thursday in the CIA leak case, signaling a protracted court battle that is sure to prolong debate about the White House's prewar use of intelligence on Iraq.

I. Lewis Libby appeared at his arraignment with trial lawyers Ted Wells and William Jeffress, known for their ability to win jury acquittals for high-profile clients in white-collar criminal cases.

"With respect, your honor, I plead not guilty," Libby told U.S. District Judge Reggie Walton, a former prosecutor who has spent two decades as a judge in the nation's capital.

Cheney and other top White House officials could be called to testify if Libby goes to trial. He is charged with obstruction of justice, two counts of lying to the FBI and two counts of committing perjury before a federal grand jury.

Recovering from a foot injury, Libby leaned his crutches against a lectern from which lawyers normally question witnesses or address the court.

"He has declared to the world that he is innocent," Wells said outside the courthouse after the 10-minute session. "He wants to clear his good name, and he wants a jury trial."

Libby's indictment has enabled Democrats to raise anew questions about the Bush administration's primary justification for invading Iraq, the incorrect assertion that Saddam Hussein had weapons of mass destruction.

In Rome on Thursday, an Italian lawmaker said that nation's military intelligence agency had warned the United States months before the Iraq invasion that a dossier about a purported Iraqi deal to buy uranium yellowcake in Africa was fake.

At about the same time as President Bush's State of the Union address in January 2003, Italy's secret services said the dossier "doesn't correspond to the truth," Italian Sen. Massimo Brutti told journalists.

Bush told the nation on Jan. 28, 2003, that "the British government has learned that Saddam Hussein recently sought significant quantities of uranium from Africa."

Libby was charged with lying to investigators and the grand jury about leaking the CIA status of covert CIA officer Valerie Plame to reporters. Plame was revealed after her husband, former U.S. Ambassador Joseph Wilson, accused the administration of twisting intelligence in the run-up to the war to exaggerate the Iraqi threat from weapons of mass destruction.

Wilson made his accusation after a CIA-sponsored trip to Africa in which he said he found no evidence to support the allegation that Iraq had an agreement to acquire uranium from Niger.
