in effect Monday for a stretch of Gulf coast in southern Texas and northern Mexico as Tropical Storm Alex gained strength and appeared on track to become a Category 3 hurricane before it makes landfall later this week.

Forecasters said the storm's path could push oil from the massive Gulf oil spill farther inland.

Alex was swirling through the Gulf of Mexico with winds of 60 mph (95 kph) on a path that would take it very near the Mexico-U.S. border sometime Thursday, said the National Hurricane Center in Miami, Florida. The storm is expected to become a hurricane Tuesday, and could build winds as high as 120 mph (193 kilometers) by Wednesday.

Tropical storm-force winds extended up to 70 miles (110 kilometers) from the storm's center Monday, and Alex was moving slowly to the northwest.

The hurricane watches extended about 225 miles (360 kilometers) south of the U.S. border over an area of sparsely populated Mexican coast, and about 100 miles (160 kilometers) north along the Texas coast from the Rio Grande to just south of Baffin Bay: The tropical storm's center wasn't expected to approach the area of the oil spill off Louisiana's coast, said Stacy Stewart, senior hurricane specialist at the National Hurricane Center. But Alex's outer wind field could push oil from the spill farther inland and hinder operations in the area, Stewart said early Monday.

Alex caused flooding and mudslides that left at least four people dead in Central America over the weekend, though Belize and Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula appeared largely unscathed.

It made landfall in Belize on Saturday night as a tropical forecasters said precipitation from Alex will keep falling on southern Mexico and Guatemala until Tuesday, raising the possibility of life-threatening floods and mudslides.

"It is a fact we are going to get very heavy rains," said Gov. Fidel Herrera of the Gulf coast state of Veracruz.

On Sunday, heavy rains prompted a landslide in northwestern Guatemala that dislodged a large rock outcropping, killing two men who had taken shelter from the storm underneath, according to the national disaster-response agency.

In El Salvador, Civil Protection chief Jorge Melendez said two people were swept away by rivers that jumped their banks. About 500 people were evacuated from their homes.

There were no immediate reports of damage to Mexico's resort-studded Caribbean coast.

FIFA should invest in goal line judges, video technology

By CHRIS LEAL

"All credibility, all good cononly from the senses." - Friedrich Nietzsche.

These are wise words from an even wiser man. In this day and age, though, our senses can be leveraged and extended with the help of technology. Today, in the context of sporting events, these technologies are utilized by almost all professional leagues

Tennis, American football, basuse the either readily available video where you are in the world." recording and motion sensor technologies in order to better aid the referees and judges in their pursuit of And with most of these leagues befew thousand dollars they might wrong, calls we've seen already in calls is relatively miniscule.

UT, A&M merchandise don't belong on campus

By THOMAS LOTT

In the few trips to Wal-Mart that I take during the year, there is something that always seems to bug me. There is more merchandise for the University of Texas than for Texas Tech here in Lubbock. There might even be more for Texas A&M, too. Or at least it seems that way.

a deal if no one ever bought those shirts and jerseys, but it always seems like these jerseys make their way onto campus.

This is not such of a big deal right now considering it is the summer. If someone is here for summer school, there is a possibility that they might not go to Tech and then it is understandable. But for those fans that make their way to campus decked out in burnt orange during the school year, I have this to say to you: You go to Texas Tech University, show pride in your school.

I have seen so many of these tshirt fans it is disgusting. The shirts always seem to get worn on campus, and quite often no one says anything about it. Well I am saying this now: get those shirts off of our campus.

When people wear these shirts, that true fans do not want any part of. I have heard so many times from my friends from UT and A&M that the reason we hate those schools so much, and they are right about us hating them, is that we couldn't get into either of them and are bitter about it.

Well I for one did not even apply This would not be that big of to UT or A&M, and I hate that stupid stereotype. There are many other people I know at Tech that would say the same thing and these people that sport the UT and A&M colors need to put those shirts away.

> Not to mention the fact that wearing UT shirts makes that person a fair-weather-fan as well. This does not apply to those of you wearing A&M shirts, A&M would have to win before someone could be a fairweather-fan for them. These types of fans are the lowest of the low. I see it every year and not just for UT.

> When Alabama started off their season so well a couple of years ago, hats started popping up everywhere with the Alabama "A" on the front. Then when Tampa Bay started playing well in baseball, their merchandise started to show up.

For those of us that are true sports

it reinforces a stereotype about Tech fans, nothing upsets us more than the person that comes up to us and starts talking about how good the team they are currently rooting for is. This is even worse when your team is losing - like Astros fans like me that cannot even make it through three innings without fighting the urge to punch a hole through my television.

This is not just a problem on Tech's campus, though. The entire city seems to be bathing in burnt orange the second that UT plays any type of game whatsoever. What happened to this being a Texas Tech college town?

They say there is a little bit of truth to every joke, and in this situation, I cannot help but think of this one: I wear a Texas Tech shirt because I went there; they wear UT shirts because they went to Wal-Mart.

We need to show some pride for the school we are attending, not one that happens to be winning ball games. And in case people didn't notice, we have some pretty good teams here ourselves, not to mention a good education to go along with it. Let's wear our colors, not the ones that have a convenient band-wagon to jump on.

American pride is not just for Americans

It's near the end of June and my friend

a surprising conclusion). Specifically, religion social ethics of the United States.

The phrase "In God we trust," printed on U.S. currency, suggests the cornerstone of American belief. Numerous churches around the country have been playing an indispensable role in shaping American national character - honesty, a sense of justice, kindness Americans? I'm under the clear impression from different media that the United States is a crazy streetcar of desires and the Almighty dollar governs everything. However, the other day, I saw a woman park her car in front of a store named "American Council of the Blind Thrift Store". She took a package of clothes from her car and donated them. Then I find there are a lot of organizations here that work not for money. Second, America is a great country because the founders of this country cherished a noble ideal - all men are created equal.

This thrilling sentence has been resonating in the sky of the United States since its foundation. Whenever I realize that Martin Luther King, Jr. was assassinated in 1968 and 32 years later, a black American was elected the President of the United States, I'm amazed and awed by the incredible progress! Equality and social justice are what Americans value and pursue. I strongly feel this when I get along with Americans from different walks of life. Another important factor which makes America a great country is that the founders of this country created a political system with delicate mechanisms of checks and balances. Owing to the best, though not perfect, game rules, democracy survives and thrives, directing the great ship of the United States on the right course.

So, on the occasion of July 4, I want to say: I love America! I love American people! God
