Military strikes on Iraq likely

Iraq's refusal to submit to weapons inspectors could have serious consequences for Arabs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Buoyed by Arab criticism of Iraq, the Clinton administration said Thursday that Saddam Hussein had isolated himself and must reverse course.

"We're not playing games," said Defense Secretary William Cohen as U.S. military preparations proceeded.

Eight Arab foreign ministers issued a statement in Qatar saying that Iraq's continuing refusal to submit to U.N. weapons inspectors could have serious consequences for the Arab world.

Citing the statement as evidence of "near unanimity" in the Arab world, State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said, "The U.S. feels this is a pretty good indicator of where the key Gulf countries stand on the latest crisis."

Rubin dismissed a demand by Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., that President Clinton seek Congress' approval before ordering any attack on Iraq.

The president has "inherent authority" to use force and also was authorized by Congress' approval in the past of U.N. Security Council resolutions bearing on Iraq's concealment of weapons, Rubin said.

Specter had written Clinton that "use of force by your administration without prior congressional authorization would be another major step in undermining the sole authority of Congress to declare war."

Sen. Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind., said military strikes were likely. He encouraged the administration to consider an all-out follow-up campaign to remove Saddam from power — a plan, he acknowledged, that probably would require U.S. ground troops.

And if Saddam cannot be removed without targeting and killing him? "I suspect, then, he will have to be killed," Lugar replied.

In response, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said the Clinton administration looked forward to working with a post-Saddam government and was increasing its support to Iraqi opposition groups.

"But the purpose of force, if we use it, would be to degrade his ability" to develop and use weapons of mass destruction,

Albright said on PBS' "NewsHour With Jim Lehrer."

In another development, Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott hinted that if Clinton decided to use force there could be a series of attacks on Iraq.

"We have thought well beyond hour one, day one and week one," he said during an appearance at the Brookings Institution, a Washington research group. "There are lots of ways we can make sure he loses on day one and thereafter."

Talbott said Clinton had not made a final decision. "This crisis can end peacefully," he said.

Speaking in Norfolk, Va., aboard the Bataan, a Marine Corps helicopter assault ship, Cohen said the U.S. message is for Iraq to comply with the U.N. inspections commission. "A failure to comply could result in a military operation and we're hoping that doesn't take place," he said.

Cohen added in reference to Saddam: "He wants to get inspectors out so they can't delve into what they're doing behind closed doors."

And yet, the Pentagon chief said, "We're not seeking to go to war. We're seeking to avoid it. All he has to do is comply. The choice is his."

After returning from Norfolk, Cohen planned a meeting with the Kuwaiti defense minister.

The Arab statement, by Egypt, Syria, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman and Qatar, declared, "The Iraqi government is held responsible for any consequences that might arise from its refusal to back down from its decision to expel the U.N.

Tech society aids Red Cross in disaster effort

Spanish fraternity comes to the rescue of Mitch victims

By Apu Naik
Staff Writer

Members of Texas Tech's Spanish Honorary Fraternity, Sigma Delta Pi, are teaming together with the American Red Cross to help raise funds for the disaster-stricken victims of Hurricane Mitch.

Julian Perez, chapter adviser of Sigma Delta Pi and professor of Spanish, said the organization wanted not only to help those in need, but also set an example for others that students are willing to give aid during times of grief.

The organization, which was recently named one of the nation's top 10 by a vote of the Executive Committee of Sigma Delta Pi, have booths in both the University Center and in the foreign language building set up to accept donations from the public.

Perez said although the organization understands college students usually don't have money to donate, it's important that the community bands together to give whatever possible to those in need.

"We understand that students have a limited means of resources, so we know that what they are going to donate will not be much," Perez said. "But, I think that it's very important for students to try and help because they show what kind of people we are, how much we care for our fellow human beings."

Perez also stressed the importance of setting an example to the rest of the community by “Giving is something that is contagious.”

Julian Perez
adviser, Sigma Delta Pi

showing that there are people in need, and for those people, there are organizations who come to their beckoning.

"Once we have all of the cans and money donations, we are going to invite the community to our headquarters in a couple of weeks, and we will gather a lump sum of all the money collected between these weeks, and although it may not be much, I think it will have a strong impact on the community of Lubbock," Perez said. "Giving is something that is contagious. If some people do give and care, others will immediately follow it, setting that example. These students who are helping will be the leaders in the community who have helped others to understand the importance of giving to this cause."

Brian Chilton, a graduate student of Spanish literature and treasurer of Sigma Delta Pi, said the response the organization has received so far has been terrific, and they look forward to what will come within the next couple of weeks.

"It really has been surprising, the way every one has responded by rallying and getting together for this cause," Chilton said. "Some of the individual professors and teacher's assistants have gone to their classes and made announcements, and students have been very eager to donate."

Tech Provost John Burns wrote a letter of support to the organization Monday, encouraging the students to maintain their spirit of humanitarianism.

"This accomplishment heightens awareness in our community about the strength of student involvement and commitment to good works at Texas Tech," Burns wrote in the letter. "They are to be commended for the commitment to service that they have shown, and I can think of no better way to promote the organization and this university than to give to one's time and service to the community. I hope that this group will serve as a role model for other student groups."

The students will be accepting donations until the end of this month everyday from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m. at the foreign language building and between the times of 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Monday, Thursday, and Friday.

UT to reopen tower's observation deck

HOUSTON (AP) — With little discussion and broad smiles, University of Texas regents took a break from multimillion-dollar budget reports Thursday to unanimously approve tiny item No. 3 — a student request that the school's landmark clocktower be reopened after 23 years.

A series of suicidal leaps from the 231-foot tower's outdoor observation deck forced officials to close the tower in 1975.

It was also from that same deck that sniper Charles Whitman, 28 stories above the campus, opened fire at around noon Aug. 1, 1966. He killed 16 people and wounded 31 that day before being shot and killed by police.

"I don't believe this washes away history," school President Larry R. Faulkner said.

"But as long as it remains closed, it's not possible for subsequent generations to have a positive experience with the tower."

He credited Annie Holand, the student government president, with making the tower action a priority.

"I think it's really a symbol of moving on," said Holand, who was congratulated by the regents for her work.

"We're finally getting to the point where we realized that some terrible things happened there, but it's time to move on."

The plan approved by the board calls for $450,000 to $500,000 to renovate the tower and about $86,000 to open it for tours.

Work includes installing a safety barrier, elevator modifications, refurbishing public areas and providing wheelchair access, Faulkner said.

No metal detector will be in place. Because only small groups will be allowed at any one time and a new railing and grill will be placed on the deck, Faulkner said university police have decided a metal detector won't be necessary.

The plan calls for weekend tours with about 20 minutes of viewing time and 10 minutes to get from the ground to the deck and back.

Faulkner would like to have the renovation completed in time for May 1999 commencement.

To offset costs, a $5 to $6 fee for the public is being considered, with lower or possibly no cost for students at the Austin school.

Access to the 28th-floor deck gives visitors panoramic vistas of the school, the Texas Capitol, Austin and nearby Hill Country.

Students rev up minds to compete in FutureCar

By Melody Ragland
Staff Writer

Texas Tech is one of 13 universities from across the country to be a part of FutureCar Research. Tech has been a part of the research for two years.

Timothy Maxwell, an associate professor in mechanical engineering, said FutureCar is a student competition funded by the Department of Energy.

He said universities receive cars from the major car corporations: Ford, General Motors and Chrysler. The companies sponsor the cars through the Partnership for a New Generation of Vehicles.

Tech received a Chevrolet Lumina through the program.

Students write proposals to the Department of Energy and they choose which schools will be a part of the program.

Maxwell said students do not have rules to change the car, but there are certain guidelines. The students are to turn the car into a vehicle that obtains 80 miles per gallon, still can go 55 miles per hour and carries five people. The car also must go 324 miles without refueling.

Recently, Tech was chosen to receive a fuel cell made by Energy Partners, Inc. of West Palm Beach, Fla.

Tech and Virginia Tech were the only two schools of the 13 to receive the cell. Tech had to write a second proposal to be chosen for the fuel cell.

"The fuel cell is a chemical battery filled with hydrogen, which generates electricity," Maxwell said.

Tech will receive the fuel cell around the first of December. There are 20 to 30 students working on the car. Half from mechanical engineering and the other half from electrical engineering.

Maxwell said the fuel cell can only make enough power to go 55 miles per hour and they are expensive.

The fuel cell may be expensive, but it is clean.

"The idea is to provide an environment friendly and practical vehicle," Maxwell said.

The students involved are learning how to work as a team and learning to communicate, Maxwell said.

Erle Rawlins an advanced vehicle engineering graduate student from Amarillo said everyone is excited and proud to be receiving the fuel cell.

"All the work we're doing leads to the implementation of the fuel cell," Rawlins said.

He said the fuel cell takes hydrogen and oxygen to make the vehicle run.

Law students' triumph bring political backlash

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — After law students from a Tulane University legal clinic won several courtroom rounds in their fight to stop a plastics plant from being built in a black community, environmental groups crowded about David beating Goliath. But Goliath's friends have struck back with a mighty blow. Louisiana's powerful business lobby persuaded the state Supreme Court to slap student legal clinics with the nation's toughest restrictions on what they can and cannot do. The rules essentially limit the clinics to serving the poorest of the poor — individuals who make less than $10,056 a year, or $20,563 for a family of four. Clinics can represent groups only if more than half of the members fall below that income level and if they have no affiliation with any national group.

Clinic directors from Harvard to Stanford said the rules harm both legal clinics and the people who need them. "All law school clinics are concerned because there is a risk that if we are successful in teaching our students, and they are good advocates for a cause, that the other side will change the rules of the game," said Frank Wu, a clinic professor at Howard University.

"The Tulane example is just one example of big business trying to alter the rules to favor them in lawsuits." The Tulane Environmental Law Clinic got on the bad side of the business community and Republican Gov. Mike Foster by representing people in Convent, population 250, who didn't want Shintech Corp. building a $700 million polyvinyl chloride plant in their neighborhood. The Tulane students argued that the project amounted to "environmental acism" — the placing of factories and other sources of pollution in poor, black communities. After several years of legal battles, Shintech finally pulled out, deciding to build a smaller plant in a mostly white area. The governor, however, called the Tulane students and their professors vigilantes and threatened the university's tax breaks.

And the Louisiana Association of Business and Industry charged that the clinic overstepped its role of representing people who cannot afford lawyers. It complained to the Louisiana Supreme Court, where the chief justice faced a stiff re-election challenge from a conservative, pro-business candidate, and where several justices considered pro-business had recently been elected.

Researchers find latent HIV traces in men

DENVER (AP) — Researchers say they have found genetic material from the AIDS virus still lurking in the semen cells of men whose use of the AIDS drug cocktail had reduced the virus in their blood to undetectable levels. In a study to be released Friday, virologists at Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia said that patients with the HIV provirus — the genetic component of the AIDS virus — might still be able to transmit the virus to others if they fail to practice safe sex. In test-tube experiments, the scientists were able to grow the AIDS virus when they combined tiny provirus samples from the men with blood from individuals who had never been infected. The researchers described these provirus reservoirs as the "Trojan horse" of AIDS, and said they may lurk in the brain and retina cells, too. Determining how to eradicate these last traces is the "endgame" in the two-decade battle against AIDS, they said. The study will be presented Friday at the annual infectious-diseases meeting being held in Denver. "In many patients, we've gone 90 yards and we're at the point where we just have to push the ball over the goal line," said Dr. Roger Pomerantz, director of the Center of Human Virology at Thomas Jefferson. "But those last 10 yards can be very hard." In a separate study, Brown University researchers will report that combination drug therapy effectively lowers viral levels in the genital tracts of HIV-infected women. This may reduce the risk of transmitting the virus to adults during sex and to babies during childbirth, said obstetrics researcher Dr. Susan Cu-Uvin. However, Cu-Uvin said, up to 3 percent of the women in the Brown study did not have detectable levels of HIV in their blood but still had HIV traces in their genital fluids, indicating the presence of provirus. Other AIDS researchers agreed that these reservoirs of dormant HIV probably represent the final barrier to curing AIDS. The first step, researchers said, is determining precisely where the genetic traces of HIV are hiding. A likely location, they said, is the CD4 T cells. The cells function as the immune system's memory and are found throughout the body. Up to 1 million of these cells appear to hang onto the blueprint of HIV for as long as 10 years so the body will recognize the infection and mount a defense if it appears again. In the Philadelphia study, Pomerantz sampled cells in the semen of seven men who had no detectable HIV freely circulating in their blood or semen. Pomerantz found provirus reservoirs locked in cells of four of the men. The three other men could have provirus reservoirs in cells located in other difficult-to-study crannies of the body, such as the brain or the retina of the eye, he said. "These are the patients who are doing the best," Pomerantz said. "If it happens in them, it is likely to be more common in the general HIV-infected community." He recommended that these men continue taking AIDS drugs and practice safe sex. AIDS researchers are debating how to best treat — and perhaps cure — these carriers. Dr. Anthony Fauci, head of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases in Bethesda, Md., has attempted to purge the infected memory cells by triggering them to spring to life with hormones.

Reports indicate alcohol major factor in rape cases

By Gretchen Verry
Staff Writer

Rape. One word that speaks volumes. It evokes emotions, pictures, pain and fear. College students are both victims and offenders due to circumstances and actions that can be out of control, or within our controls.

According to the American Council for Drug Education, female college freshmen are at the highest risk for sexual assault between the first day of school and Thanksgiving break.

"We don't keep track of how many Tech students are victims, but 27 percent of rapes reported in Lubbock last year happened to college-aged victims," said Becky Cannon, director of Lubbock's Rape Crisis Centers.

According to statistics reported by the American Council for Drug Education, one in 12 college males admit to having committed acts that meet the legal definition of rape.

The Texas Tech University Police Department reported one forcible rape for both 1997 and 1996.

"If you just look at the number of rapes reported versus the number of students on this campus, those statistics are very low, but that one rape is huge to that victim," said Sgt. Dan Hale of the UPD.

"We are only made aware, however, of rapes that are reported to us. Many factors contribute to both acquaintance and date rape, and alcohol is a major one," Hale said.

The American Council for Drug Education reports that 90 percent of all campus rapes occur when alcohol has been used by either the assailant or the victim.

Cannon said in 1997, 56 percent of victims in Lubbock's reported rape cases did not report alcohol as a factor. However, it was a factor for 96 percent of offenders.

"There is a huge unknown category, and that could skew these numbers," Cannon said.

Victims cross lines of age, race and social class. However, some categories have historically been more at risk.

"Self-control is very important in preventing rapes, that is especially hard for freshmen because they just got into a situation where they have control over their lives," Hale said.

Hale said the first thing students should do to prevent rape is to always be up front and honest about expectations.

"An up front and honest discussion of your intentions usually gives people an indicator as to what is going to happen," Hale said.

TSU students protest late loan checks

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Southern University student leaders urged classmates Wednesday to stage a one-day walkout to protest late loan checks that have left half the student body without financial aid more than two months into the semester.

TSU President James Douglas estimated a total of $25 million may be owed to the 3,000 students awaiting checks. Loans vary, but undergraduates can borrow up to $10,000 a year and law students $18,500 a year. Fall enrollment is 6,316.

"This is the No. 1 issue on my plate," Douglas said Tuesday. "There are some serious problems and I'm extremely concerned. We can't live another year like this."

The problem arose when the U.S. Department of Education determined earlier this year that the school couldn't be trusted to get proof from students that they qualified for financial aid.

Now, TSU is among 200 schools nationally that must write checks for lands, work-study money and grants upfront, then get reimbursed by the government. Before, the money came straight from the source.

More than 80 percent of TSU students get financial aid. Students should have their money by Thanksgiving, Douglas said.

"We are still trying to solve the same problem," Douglas said.

Some participated in the walkout Wednesday, which included a small demonstration on campus.

The university has waived tuition deadlines until the government money arrives. Douglas also said TSU is negotiating with students' landlords to accept late payments and asking banks to issue short-term loans.

Douglas said that TSU cannot tap into $10.4 million in state bailout money for financial aid because legislation specifies that money be used only for TSU debts.

Former death row inmates confession sheds light on last minutes of his victim's death

HOUSTON (AP) — The first day of a new trial for a former death row inmate had jurors closing their eyes.

A prosecutor on Wednesday read the confession of Danny Dean Thomas, who was sentenced to death in 1982 for the murder of Sylvia Elaine Harrison.

Thomas said Harrison repeated 'God help me' over and over until he shot her in the head.

Thomas won a new trial because the Texas attorney general's office missed a deadline to appeal a federal judge's decision to overturn the conviction, the Houston Chronicle reported Thursday.

Before giving his confession to Harris County detectives, Thomas, clad in bloody clothing, told police he had hit a dog and that he and a friend had put the bloody animal in his car before dumping it in the San Jacinto River.

According to testimony, he told people he had shot the dog because it would not stop whimpering.

Stupidity common in life, love

I went to see "Fool For Love" over the weekend. In a nutshell, it's a play about this guy that treats this girl terribly and she still loves him.

So for an hour, I watched her repeatedly decide she hated him and told him to leave and then decided she loved him and begged him to stay. And I wanted to stand up and yell "What is wrong with you? Just get rid of the jackass, and let's get on with our lives."

This "couple" also happened to be half brother and sister, which is a point I kind of got hung up on.

So I left the show thinking "Ugh, they're brother and sister, and they do the nasty."

Then a friend of mine, who was obviously able to get past the incest thing, said, "Isn't it pitiful that we do that to ourselves, and we've all done it."

Well, this comment rattled my thoughts and the "Ugh, they're brother and sister" thought changed to "My God, we do all do it."

And I'm not referring to sleeping with our siblings (though I will try to not pass judgement if you do). I mean that we all, at one time or another, get involved in an unhealthy relationship.

If you don't believe me, turn on daytime TV and watch the trash of America beat the crap out of one another because of some loser who has five different relationships with five different sexes going on at the same time.

But it's not just Sally guests that have bad relationships. They're just the only ones without the pride that would prevent them from broadcasting their stupidity on national television.

I watch these people and I have to laugh because I think they're so ridiculous, and they are. But, when I think about it, they're no more ridiculous than the rest of us.

When I was in high school, I dated this guy who — during our heavenly courtship — shoe polished "bitch" across the back windshield of my car. I mean this guy was a real winner.

Now, of course, I wonder what the hell I was thinking, but back then I put up with it and I can't tell you for the life of me why I did.

How many people do you know that are in a really healthy relationship? I know very few.

Out of the last four weddings I've been to, I knew from the beginning that two of them would end in divorce, and they did.

How sad is that? Attending a wedding where the guests are taking bets on how long the marriage will last is more than pathetic. It's really pathetic.

I know people who are so picky about what is acceptable in their friends' relationships, yet they don't apply the same rules to their own relationships.

And it's not just romantic involvements that are screwed up. I know a lot of people in mutually abusive friendships. They get along by insulting one another, yet they remain friends, it's pretty sick.

I've got these two friends who are absolutely cruel to one another.

They insult each other and cuss at one another until they're both in tears and somebody leaves slamming the door. And then I tune in the next week at the same fight time, same fight channel to watch a new episode of "The Friend I Love to Hate."

And when I ask them why they stay in the relationship, the excuses are endless.

Why do we do this to ourselves?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Fans should support UT's running back

To the Editor: I am writing in response to Heath Robinson's column Nov. 6. Usually, I enjoy reading his columns. However, this week I am a little disappointed. I actually want to comment on the section about "Little Earl" (Texas' Ricky Williams). I am very excited at the fact that I may get to witness the greatest running back in the history of college football break Tony Dorsett's record as All-Time Leading Rusher. However, I am kind of disappointed that it may happen at Texas Tech. From my past experiences, Tech fans do not seem to recognize or acknowledge the accomplishments of others because they do not wear the "beloved" red and black. I hope Tech fans will finally show a little class if Ricky Williams breaks the record.

I think this accomplishment deserves more than time for him to run to the sidelines. It deserves, at the least, a standing ovation from every true fan of college football. (Now, because you clap for his accomplishment, does not mean you are yelling for the Texas Longhorns). Remember, Texas is a part of the Big 12 conference, the same as Tech. The breaking of the record brings the much deserved national respect to our conference.

Don't embarrass the university by showing poor sportsmanship, (once again, i.e. beating up Texas mascot 1995, or throwing opponent's ball out of stadium 1998, tortillas all over the endzone during bowl games).

Be proud to be experiencing one of the biggest accomplishments in the history of college sports.

Both sides to blame for fight

To the editor: I am writing in response to Cas Dodgen's letter from Nov. 5. The Sigma Chi Fraternity is sorry for the unfortunate incident that occurred, but we feel the entire situation should be looked at.

We agree that we did lose a hard fought, double overtime game, and that some members did go onto the field after the game. I do find it interesting that he neglected to talk about how the altercation transpired.

After losing the game, our team captain walked over to one of the "Jabofu" players to congratulate him on a game well played, when he was, without reason, thrown to the ground and told, "You suck, and your fans suck." Unfortunately, this resulted in our fans, as well as the opposing team's fans running out the field.

How Mr. Dodgen witnessed 150 Sigma Chi's charge the field is confusing to me, since his greatly exaggerated number should be around one-third of that, and a significant number of the fans participating in the melee were his team's supporters.

Mr. Dodgen also questions our beliefs about brotherhood.

One definition of "brother" would be someone who is willing to help out his friend in a time of need, and the reason our members went out on to the field is because our "brother" was being accosted.

He has very good ideas about brotherhood, but he cannot know anything about ours from watching a one-hour football game. I'm sorry his impressions revolve around T-shirts and money, since ours are built upon trust, friendship and loyalty.

Again, we are sorry the whole incident ever occurred. We have accepted our part of the blame and just wish that the members of "Jabofu" would acknowledge their equal part.

GOP still alive and kickin' in Congress

Cameron Graham
columnist

Politics, politics, politics. That funny creature that seems to be the No. 1 thing on the list of things that people hate. Well, I suppose it is something that can't really be helped. I have always been of the opinion that a person needs to take a moral and ethical stand on issues that affect them. But I can see how it can frustrate someone and give them a moment to consider the possibility of total anarchy.

Now, some people have asked me if I feel this way after the elections held just a few days ago. Well, I have to say the answer is no. I am by no means disillusioned, and if any of you out there who are reading this whose political feelings lean a little more to the right of center are disillusioned, then don't be. I have held my peace on the election for more than a week now.

Now I feel that I must share with you, my fellow students, a fresh perspective. I think you will find that things are not as bad as they may seem.

Oh, and by the way, any Democrats that may be reading this, I strongly urge you to reconsider. I am about to use clear and simple facts. And I don't want to be accused of causing any of you out there to go into vapor-lock. So be warned.

OK, here are the nuts and bolts of the deal. The Republicans are still in control. I could end this column right now with this statement. But let me clarify. In the Senate, nothing changed. In the House, the Republicans still hold the majority and lost but five seats to the Liberals. As far as the governors' races, well the Grand Old Party is still in control there, which is very important since congressional districts will be re-drawn in a couple of years.

Now my more left-wing, bleeding-heart, tree-hugging, let's-scare-the-voters critics have been gloating about their big victory. Big victory?

Five seats in the House? Well, OK, maybe to them that is a big victory. I think the real thing is they think this means no more impeachment hearings.

Oh yes, don't forget the Democrats are still saddled with the "Dope with Hope" with his peculiar cigar fetish. I am sorry my Democrat friends, but the impeachment hearings will continue. Too bad, so sad.

Now, I must say something about Newt Gingrich. So the man is stepping down. I, to tell you the honest truth, admire him for it. Think about it folks. Gingrich knows he will not be re-elected speaker of the House.

He knows he no longer commands the loyalty of his party. So, rather than hurt his party and what it stands for, he chooses to bite the political bullet for the good of all concerned.

Now why can't a certain Arkansan bring himself to do the same thing?

I wonder who the Democrats will find to lay the blame on next time one of their people screw up. Newt won't be around to serve in that capacity anymore.

Oh well, they will find someone. But I sit around and watch the news, read the papers and listen to the radio just like everyone else.

I am amazed by all the people who think this election was some great revolutionary sweep like the Republican sweep in the '94 elections. That is funny. Five seats doesn't even come close to a minority party taking over the entire Congress.

The Republicans are still in control. I could end this column right now with this statement.

But now let me be honest here. The Republicans could have done better. We could have campaigned more vigorously and countered more of the lies that Democrats call campaign commercials. We could have and we should have. We didn't and such is life. That still doesn't negate the fact that the party of Lincoln still calls the shots on Capital Hill.

Now, if the Democrats and Republicans don't want to wind up the way of the Dodo, then I must say two words to you left and right wingers — Jesse Ventura.

Like some horse running dead last in a race, Ventura comes from out of nowhere to take first place. Ventura is neither a Republican nor Democrat. His platform is something short of a smorgasbord of political ideas, each of which contradict each other.

In this day and age where people like to go around saying they vote for the man and not the party, people like Jesse "The Body" or "The Mind" Ventura are going to flourish.

Then both Republicans and Democrats can kiss their power bye-bye. God help us if that ever happens.

Native Texas musician Pat Green-not green anymore

By Sebastian Kitchen
Staff Writer

Pat Green never played guitar until he was a student at Texas Tech. When Green was learning to play, others did not want to hear him, so he would go in the basement of his residence hall and play in the laundry room.

He has come a long way since then.

Now, people pay for Green's CDs and a chance to hear him play live. People from 48 states and several nations are on Green's mailing list, and he will be playing overseas soon for the first time.

Impressive for a young man who has not been playing guitar for long and has only been performing in front of people for five years.

Green will return to Lubbock tonight to perform at the Depot's 19th Street Warehouse, 1824 Ave. G.

The doors open at 8 p.m. Another Tech musician, Luke Olson, will open the show at 10 p.m. Green will take the stage at 11:30 p.m.

Tickets cost $10 in advance and

Green and his band would play every Tuesday in the Depot district and had the occasional opening spot for big name country acts.

"Eventually, they started to put us in front of all their country acts," he said. "I got to know them and started asking them questions."

Many people turned Green towards Lubbock producer/musician Lloyd Maines. Maines produced Green's first album.

"It took off after that," Green said. "I have been sitting back watching since then."

Green released his third and most popular album Here We Go Sept. 5.

Maines has produced all three of Green's releases and even got his daughter Natalie Maines, now of Dixie Chicks fame, to sing on his first two albums.

"The third album was a live album, so she could not sing on it, but now she is a superstar," Green said laughing.

Green feels privileged to even be mentioned with some of these other country music greats.

"It is overwhelming anytime you even get the chance to even be considered in the same sentence," he said.

Nelson and Green will share a stage again soon.

"It is a real thrill," Green said. "Those guys are timeless."

Years before he graduated from Tech in 1997 with an arts and sciences degree, Green realized he could make a run at being a professional entertainer when crowds started to come to watch him play in other parts of the state.

"It's about the people," Green said. "To see their smiles and people holding beers over their heads. It is people who make me the most happy."

'Vampires' out at night provide bad entertainment

By John Davis
Staff Writer

From the legends of Vlad the Impaler, to "Dracula," to "The Hunger" and "Blackula," people love to read about or watch films about vampires.

We get a sick satisfaction from fearing an undead creature of the night that sucks blood and can only be killed in certain ways.

Today, more than ever, there has been a resurgence of interest in the subject. It seems there are at least two movies a year on the subject. John Carpenter's "Vampires" is just one more to add to the pile. Unfortunately, this picture will be somewhere around the bottom.

Yes, this film went from interesting to bad to total trash. By the end of the movie, the film is so lame that it is looking for a bush to crawl under and die.

Borrowing heavily from the storyline of "From Dusk 'Till Dawn," it is about a church-sanctioned group of vampire slayers out on assignment in the arid hill country of

REVIEW

New Mexico.

This group is staking out an old run-down farm house, which they believe to be a nest. As they enter with all their high-tech vampire killing material, the blood bath starts. They shoot the vampires through the torso with an arrow affixed with a wire rope on a winch.

While the vampire struggles to escape, Anthony, Jack's cussing and crass sidekick played by Daniel Baldwin, throws the switch and pitches them out the front door into the sun where the vampire bursts into flames.

When the last vampire is destroyed, Jack, played by James Woods, wonders why they didn't find a "master vampire," or the father of all the other vampires they killed.

Jack pretty much throws up his hands and says, "Well I guess he's not here, let's go home," which turns out to be a fatal mistake.

As the group drives off into the distance, a pair of beclawed hands rise from the dirt.

There is a big party at the "Sun God Motel" where members of the group relax and unwind with loud rock 'n roll, cold beer and cheap prostitutes. But evil lurks outside the door of the "Sun God." The Master Vampire is not too happy his brood has been destroyed, and decides to take out the entire party.

All but Jack, Anthony, and Jack's prostitute, who has been bitten, escape with their lives.

As the plot congeals, Jack finds out the Master Vampire is trying to steal an ancient cross to perform a ritual enabling him and all other vampires to come into the daylight.

Jack and Anthony must find the Master Vampire before he performs the ritual and the undead walk the earth.

This movie is undoubtedly headed straight for "USA Up All Night."

I do have to say, however, that the cinematography is so well done, it is hard not to watch the action.

Scenes panning the vast expanses of New Mexico are breathtaking. It almost makes up for the bad acting.

Tech professor makes mark in world of poetry

By Laura Hensley
Staff Writer

The yellowing walls of Walt McDonald's office are plastered with faces of his heroes. Old black and white photocopied photographs of modern poets he admires hang and stare, watching his small office.

"I'm a worshiper of heroes," McDonald said waving his hand in the air acknowledging the pictures. "I couldn't do what I'm doing today without these people."

McDonald, a Paul Whitfield Horn professor of English, is doing what he loves — writing poems.

By winning the 1998 Ohio State University Press Award in poetry with his latest book, "Blessings the Body Gave," McDonald said he is blessed. "Every publication is a blessing because there are so many poets out there," he said. "If something of mine gets published, I feel lucky."

McDonald said he averages about 100 poems being published each year. He has written 16 poem collections and a collection of short stories. He also is published in several journals each year.

"Eventually I have the impulse to bring my poems together," McDonald said.

"I sort of drive them together into a coral, to put them into book form."

The poems in "Blessings the Body Gave" deal with the death of McDonald's father in World War II, as well as his own experiences in Vietnam as a pilot. Other poems in the book tell stories of life in West Texas.

McDonald grew up in Lubbock. He graduated from Texas Tech in 1956 and received his master's degree in 1957. He then joined the Air Force and began pilot training and went to Vietnam.

McDonald has taught at Tech for 27 years and is the director of creative writing program.

"I don't write to be healed. I don't write to vent. I write for the fun activity of discovery."

Walt McDonald
Tech professor

"Eventually I switched them and rearranged them," he said. "It's sort of like having two pieces of flint in your hand. You and the poems together, if they spark and you like the way they feel together, then that is the arrangement you present to the book publisher."

McDonald said although he writes about many sad times in his life, he does not write to try and heal those wounds.

"I don't write to be healed. I don't write to vent. I write for the fun activity of discovery," he said.

McDonald's first attempt of writing poems was a result of Vietnam and the friends he lost there.

"I wanted to say something about those guys or to them," he said. "I could talk with friends, but I couldn't talk with them when nothing else worked, I began to write poems. My first stumbling attempts at poems where letters to the dead."

When McDonald returned from Vietnam, he began writing more.

"I wrote a few more and a few more. And I never set out to write about flying, Vietnam or my family, or West Texas, or Colorado. But those are the five regions that I keep prowling for images," he said. "I just start with an image that appeals to me. You discover the poem as you go along."

McDonald said he finds joy in teaching. He never begins writing during a semester, saying it would take away time from his students.

"As a writer who teaches writing, I can teach the ... language and the tricks of the trade. But I can't teach the desire to want to give up time to wrestle with your own stories," he said. "Our real poems are already inside of us. All we can do is dig."

Important keys to Tech-Texas battle

You know, earlier this season, I would have told you we'd have a better chance of seeing Jesse "The Body" Ventura elected governor than seeing Texas come into town on a six-game winning streak and sporting a No. 18 ranking.

Heath Robinson
Columnist

I'm still not sure how the hell the first one happened, but I've got a pretty good idea of how Texas has turned it around.

Mack Brown. Haha. Fooled you, didn't I. You thought I would say

Ricky Williams. Nope. Sure, the eventual Heisman Trophy winner is the best player in the country. He forces defenses to clog the middle of the line up, leaving lanes bigger than those on I-35 for Major Applewhite to throw through. And Applewhite can do it, too. Wane McGarity and Kwame Cavil have proven almost impossible to cover one-on-one.

Or, you can play normal and watch Williams play paper shredder with your defense. Pick your poison.

But without question, the 'Horns new coach is the man behind the turnaround from a 4-7 season. It can be summed up with just a few words. Brown has not let his players quit like former coach John Mackovic did. Look up the facts. In Mackovic's last season, the Longhorns suffered early-season blowouts and never recovered. They showed a weak personality, and laid down quicker than a working girl in Las Vegas.

But take a look at this season. Texas falls behind early and big at UCLA, but recovers enough to play a good second half and salvage some confidence. The next week, Kansas State treated Texas like a rag doll, throwing them around Manhattan, Kan., on their way to a 48-7 demolishing.

But that's when Brown started to work his magic. He kept their psyche up, and wouldn't let their defense stop working. The result, Texas pulled off a couple of close games and shocked the world by knocking Nebraska out of the national title race.

Which sets up Saturday's game as a big one. While the 'Horns have swaggered into this matchup, Texas Tech comes in looking like a deer caught in the headlights.

Three consecutive losses have rained on an early-season parade, and only one game can salvage their season. There is no doubt both teams will enter this game ready to give their best effort of the season. If Texas wins, they enter a one-on-one game against Texas A&M for the Big 12 South title. If Tech wins, they can dispose of lowly Oklahoma and enter the bowl season a respectable 8-3.

So the stage is set. One Ricky

Tech ready to hook some 'Horns

By Jason Bernstein
Assistant Sports Editor

With no postseason invitations solidified, the Texas Tech Red Raider football team will be on a mission as they host interstate rival Texas at 6 p.m. Saturday at Jones Stadium.

The contest marks the fourth consecutive-ranked opponent for Tech, as the Red Raiders try to improve on a 6-3 overall mark, 3-3 in Big 12 play.

With a week off, many Tech players had a chance to recuperate after suffering injuries Oct. 31 against Missouri.

Quarterback Rob Peters, who missed most of the fourth quarter in the game due to a bruised chest, is ready for a battle against the Longhorns.

"I'm as healthy as I've been in a long time," Peters said. "I feel really good and it's really nice to be back and be able to practice and go out and not worry about what hurts or anything like that."

Peters, Tech's leading passer this season, will look to stifle a Texas defense ranked ninth in the Big 12 and 64th in the nation.

One of his favorite targets this season has been wideout Donnie Hart, who also is back at full strength after suffering knee and ankle injuries against Missouri.

"Everyone is healthy and that's definitely a plus for us," Peters said. "With two games to go, we're going to give it all we have."

The Red Raiders will try to stop a three game skid in which their hopes of a Big 12 Southern Division title dwindled away.

But title or not, Tech has plenty to play for when the No. 18-ranked Longhorns invade Jones Stadium.

"This is a big game and there's no doubt about it," said kicker Chris Birkholz. "I think we're anxious and ready to get out there and play. The week off was well needed and a week's rest does your legs and your body so much. I think we're all ready to get out there."

Gettin' Jiggy With It: Tech fullback Jonathan Hawkins gets taken down by two Missouri players in a game Oct. 31. Tech hosts Texas at 6 p.m. Saturday at Jones Stadium. Saturday is also Senior Day for the 17 seniors on the squad.

Texas (7-2 overall, 5-1 Big 12) has plenty to play for as well, as they will try to keep pace with Texas A&M in preparation for a Nov. 27 clash with the Aggies in Austin.

"Everybody takes it one game at a time," Birkholz said. "But when you play a ranked opponent, it's extremely big. You get up for those games, but I don't know if it's any different than any other game."

The Longhorns come to the table with a potent offense, led by Heisman Trophy candidate Ricky Williams. Williams, the nation's and Big 12's leading rusher, is averaging 191.56 rushing yards-per-game this season and is only 204 yards away from breaking Tony Dorsett's all-time NCAA rushing record.

"There's no different approach on our part," said defensive end Montae Reagar. "We're going to have to shut him down regardless of his awards or accomplishments."

Williams was held to 90 yards rushing in last Saturday's 37-34 win over Oklahoma State and the Red Raider defense has feasted on top ranked running backs this season, yielding 112.6 rushing yards-per-game this year.

"We're going to live and die by our defensive scheme," Reagar said. "We've played it for nine ballgames this week and we had a chance to win every one of them. We're still going to attack and apply pressure."

Tech knocked off the Longhorns 24-10 last year in Austin behind a strong defensive effort and a 131 yard rushing performance from Tech's Ricky Williams.

"We just need to go out and play," Peters said.

"What's done is done, as far as the losses go. We can't dwell on our mistakes. If we go out and play the way we are capable of, we have a great chance to come away with a win Saturday."

Offense vs. defense

Williams versus another. One high-octane offense against a high-octane defense. One low-octane offense against a struggling defense. So, who will win?

Donnie Hart must have a big game. The key for Tech will be picking up on the blitzing Texas defense. If that happens, Hart will be matched up with a suspect Longhorn secondary, and the senior wideout will have a field-day.

But the Red Raiders must put points on the board. Texas will, one way or another. Any replay of Tech's recent turnover problems will erase any hopes of winning the game, and a sorry losing streak will only extend another game. So, there are your keys. Stop Texas' blitzing, erase the turnovers, and play a full 60-minutes, and the Red Raiders will again be on their way to a successful campaign. Failure to do so on any of those fronts will result in a fourth-consecutive loss.

And as far as Ricky Williams vs. Ricky Williams goes, well I'll leave that one to Brooke Anne McCombs of local Tri-Delt fame: "Our Ricky Williams is better than theirs."

That's a bold statement, Brooke. But I like your style.

Lady Raiders enjoy Swede victory

By Brent Dirks
Sports Editor

The Texas Tech Lady Raiders continued total dominance of the exhibition season with a 127-47 pounding of Uppsala Sweden Thursday night at the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

"I would have been happy if it would have been a five-point game where we could have run some pressure situations, but I was equally happy that we could play as many people as we did," Lady Raider coach Marsha Sharp said.

Along with another strong offensive effort, Tech used a strangling defensive effort to bottle-up Uppsala in the first half.

The Lady Raiders rumbled out to an 11-0 lead to start the game, but Uppsala scored five unanswered points to pull within 11-5.

Tech forward Keitha Dickerson, who scored the Lady Raiders' first four points and led the team with seven rebounds, said she was glad to get out on the floor.

"I was just anxious to get out there," Dickerson said of the effort against Uppsala.

"It was my second start. We were real confident out there, and I was just ready to run, run, run."

But that's all of the scoring the Swedish team would do for most of the first half.

Tech went on a gigantic 42-3 run to end the half to put Uppsala away. In the first half, the Swedish team shot 3-of-18 for 16 percent from the field.

"I think we did a great job on the defensive end, especially early on," said Tech guard Julie Lake, who was one of six Lady Raiders who finished scoring in double figures.

"I think we were tough out there and playing the outside players. We got back, rebounded and ran it down the court."

In the second half, the Lady Raiders continued the offensive dominance but did allow a few more shots from Uppsala.

But the Swedish run nowhere near enough to make it a competitive game.

Uppsala guard Ulrica Henriksson went 2-for-4 from behind the three-point arc to finish with six points. No Swedish players finished with double digits scoring.

Sharp said she was glad to be able to have all of her players see extensive playing time on the floor during the game.

Lady Raider forward Aleah Johnson was the game's high scorer with 22 points.

After winning both exhibition games, the Lady Raiders will start the regular season with a game against Texas-Arlington at 2 p.m. Sunday at the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

Tech spikers prepare for weekend action

By Jeff Keller
Staff Writer

The Texas Tech volleyball team will take on the Buffaloes of Colorado at 7 p.m. today in Boulder, Colo.

The Red Raiders will travel to Nebraska to face the Cornhuskers at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in Lincoln.

Tech is 19-8 overall and 8-6 in the Big 12 and is ranked No. 23 in the nation.

They have lost to both the Buffaloes and the Cornhuskers at home this season.

The Buffaloes are ranked No. 15 in the nation with a 17-4 record and a 11-3 mark in Big 12 Conference action.

The Red Raiders beat Colorado on the road last year, and Tech will need a good performance to beat the Buffaloes this year, said senior outside hitter Kristen Holmes.

"I think we'll do fine as long as we get out there and play," Holmes said.

The Buffaloes are third in the Big 12 but have lost their last two conference matches.

Tech is riding the momentum of a three-game conference winning streak and are hopeful of an upset against the higher ranked Buffaloes, said freshman middle blocker Yolanda Cumbess.

"I think that recently, because of the many upsets that have been going on in the Big 12, that gives us more motivation to go out there and attack those big teams that we're not supposed to beat and really do good against them," Cumbess said. "We'll see what happens this weekend and maybe we can move up in the rankings."

Tech has lost two straight matches to the Buffaloes and head coach Jeff Nelson said this is a big match for his team.

"I think the Colorado match is a big one," Nelson said. "They're coming off two losses so we know they're going to be fired up. They have started the same starting lineup basically for two or three years now. We know what it is and we know what they do. It's just a matter of how we execute and how we come out and play.”

“ We'll see what happens this weekend and maybe we can move up in the rankings.”

The Cornhuskers are 23-0 overall and 14-0 in conference play on the season and are ranked No. 3 in the nation, receiving two No. 1 votes in the latest polls.

Tech has not beaten Nebraska since 1996, and this year's Cornhusker squad has only dropped five games en route to their perfect record.

"They're a bit of a mismatch for us just because they are so big at the net," Nelson said. "They are leading the nation in blocking and really just do a great job at the net. Our passing will have to be perfect, and we'll have to move the ball really fast."

The Red Raiders will not be under any pressure as they face the Buffaloes and Cornhuskers this weekend, Nelson said.

"To me it's a no-pressure weekend for us," Nelson said. "Both teams are ranked 13th and 3rd. I just think going into the final couple of weeks and potentially the NCAA tournament it's a great tune-up for us. When I say it's a no-pressure weekend I think if we go up and compete and play hard, we get better having faced two great teams."

The Texas Tech men's basketball team will conclude its exhibition schedule today, as they face Global Sports at 7 p.m. in the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

Tech is 1-0 in exhibition play, as they defeated the Arkansas Express 80-73 in their first exhibition contest Tuesday.

The Red Raiders are a more confident team heading into the game with Global Sports having won their first exhibition game, said junior forward Mario Layne.

"Me and all of the other guys are feeling a little more confident going into the second game after how we played the first game," Layne said. "It wasn't really reminiscent of how we wanted to play. But it still gives us some confidence that we can perform and can pull out the big win when we wanted, too. In practice we've been trying to brush up on some things and hopefully we will be prepared to go tomorrow."

Though the game against Global Sports is an exhibition, the Red Raiders are preparing for it just like any other game, senior guard Stan Bonewitz said.

"We're coming out and working hard trying to improve on some things that we didn't do well last game," Bonewitz said. "We're trying to get better. We'll go on with the preparation by getting a good nights work in the game. Hopefully we'll play well enough to get the win and then get ready for next Thursday."

The Red Raiders hope to perform better against Global Sports than they did against the Express, Bonewitz said.

"We played well at times the other night," Bonewitz said. "We didn't play as well as we wanted to. Hopefully we'll come out and do some things better offensively and defensively."
