U.S. declares air supremacy over Iraq

By Robert Burns/Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States declared air supremacy over all of Iraq on Tuesday, asserting its warplanes can fly anywhere with impunity, even though an Air Force attack plane was shot down near Baghdad.

Until now the Pentagon had said it owned the skies over all of Iraq except in the Baghdad area and over Tikrit, the hometown of President Saddam Hussein, where air defenses were the strongest.

"Coalition air forces have established air supremacy over the entire country, which means the enemy is incapable of effective interference with coalition air operations," Maj.

Gen. Stanley McChrystal, vice director of the Pentagon's Joint Staff, told a news conference.

He did not mention that an Air Force A-10 warplane was shot down near Baghdad on Tuesday. It is believed to be the first allied aircraft other than a helicopter to be downed by an Iraqi surface-to-air missile since the war began March 20. U.S. Central Command officials said the pilot ejected safely, was recovered by allied ground forces and was in good condition.

Iraq began the war with formidable air defenses in the Baghdad and Tikrit areas, which had not been damaged by years of American and British airstrikes in "no-fly" zones over northern and southern Iraq. Iraq's offensive air forces are weak, and not a single Iraqi aircraft has taken off to challenge allied planes.

The Pentagon announced, meanwhile, that the U.S. death toll from the war in Iraq rose to 96. Eight Americans are missing, and seven are being held as prisoners of war, according to U.S. figures.

McChrystal said allied aircraft are focusing on supporting American ground forces in and around Baghdad, attacking remnants of Iraq's Republican Guard and striking "time-sensitive" targets like the Baghdad building where U.S. intelligence believed a meeting was under way involving Hussein and at least one son.

McChrystal would not say Hussein was the target of that B-1B bomber strike Monday. He described the attack as "very, very effective" and said the enormous hole punched into the ground by four one-ton bombs was "where we wanted it to be." He would not describe the target.

The Air Force officer in charge of the bomb drop from the B-1B, Lt. Col. Fred Swan, said in a telephone interview with Pentagon reporters Tuesday, after he and his crew returned to their Persian Gulf air base, that they launched four 2,000-pound satellite-guided bombs — two of a type that penetrates into buried structures before detonating and two nonpenetrating types.

Swan said the crew was not told what the target was, but he was certain they had hit it.

Eliminating Saddam would be militarily significant, McChrystal said, even if it did not cause the collapse of Iraqi resistance.

"He still controls elements of the Special Republican Guard and death squads," he said. "And his role as military commander and dictator, moral leader of that regime, he and a group of others, probably militarily are key factors, to the extent they can exert influence."

"We'd like to reduce that," he said.

Asked about a U.S. Army tank attack on Baghdad's Hotel Palestine, in which three journalists were killed, McChrystal said it was an

Heintze, Wiggins transfer to OSU

By Heidi Toth/Staff Reporter

Just a few months after Texas Tech President David Schmidly accepted a position with Oklahoma State University, two vice presidents made similar decisions.

Vice President of Enrollment Management Michael Heintze and Vice President of Information Technology Gary Wiggins announced they will be moving to OSU, effective April 24, Vice Chancellor of News and Information Cindy Rugeley said.

"We have attracted two men of incredible talent," Schmidly said in the OSU news release.

He also listed enrollment management and information technology as two key areas that had been identified as needing to improve, and he is confident Heintze and Wiggins are the right candidates for the jobs.

Heintze said his decision was based on what is best for his career, and he believes this position was it.

"I think this represents, for me, the next logical step in my career," he said. "This is a good point to move to the next level."

Wiggins

Heintze

He will be the vice president of enrollment management and marketing, which is an additional responsibility and one he is looking forward to, he said.

That aspect was one important factor that set this position above other positions he was considering.

At OSU, he will be in administration over the entire system, not just the university.

"This one attracted me because of the nature of it," he said.

Although the fact that Schmidly is leading the OSU system was not the Mass communications accepts $25,000 stipend

By Angela Timmons/Staff Reporter

The School of Mass Communications was awarded a $25,000 stipend at Tuesday's Faculty Honors Convocation in its recognition as the Teaching Academy Departmental Excellence.

Outstanding professors also received monetary awards and recognition for outstanding achievement in different areas.

Chancellor Dr. David Smith, Interim President Donald Haragan, Provost William Marcy and Vice Provost Jim Brink were present to conduct the convocation.

Prior to the ceremony, Smith remarked on the state of faculty in the face of state budget troubles. "Things are uncertain in Austin right now," he said. "One thing that is not uncertain is the quality of our faculty. Thank you for what you do."

Haragan also remarked, saying although he does not recognize as many faces in the crowd as he did during his first term as university president, it is not necessarily a bad thing.

"The future of our university is represented by the young in our university raising the bar," he said. "They're making it a better place for the future."

Haragan said university recognition often works from the faculty level.

Making Dreams A REALITY

DR. BERNARD HARRIS, a 1982 graduate from Texas Tech's Health Sciences Center and a member of NASA's Safety Panel, speaks about his life's successes and his journeys into space Tuesday morning in the Student Union Allen Theatre.

Texas Tech graduate, former astronaut talks of life's dreams, successes

By Joey Kirk/Staff Reporter

Dr. Bernard Harris has achieved almost every child's dream of becoming a doctor, an astronaut or owning his or her own business. What is reality was once a dream of his.

"As a kid, I could only imagine what space would look like," he said. "But now I have been there, and I have to say that the view is what impressed me the most. I have also done other things in my life that I am proud of."

Harris is the first black American to walk in space.

He also is a 1982 graduate from the Texas Tech Health Sciences Center School of Medicine. As a minority, Harris said he had to overcome obstacles along the way.

"Stereotypes are a given when you are a minority, but you have to succeed in spite of those because they are in all aspects of life," he said.

Speaking to more than 100 students from local school districts, he recalled his adventures as a NASA astronaut and added humor to capture the attention of the students.

"I remember my rookie flight when we took off and I was thinking to myself, 'What a ride.' Then I told everybody I was fine," he said. "But the truth was that I was scared to death."

He is no longer an active-duty astronaut but is a member of the NASA Safety Panel, which is the organization currently investigating the Space Shuttle Columbia tragedy.

"The accident affected me and the NASA family, and my first mission was on Columbia," he said. "The critical issue is to determine where the accident happened over, either California or Texas, and that will help lead us to the primary cause of the crash."

The Columbia tragedy caused an upsurge in the attention NASA and the space program was receiving, Harris said.

"The reason for my speech Tuesday was to place a greater emphasis on what NASA is doing and to encourage students to get involved with the School of Medicine or whatever their dreams are," he said.

Janie Ramirez, adviser for the Bernard Harris Premedical Society and program coordinator for the Raiders Rojas National Alumni Chapter, said guests included the College of Education Dean's Future Scholars.

"The Dean's Future Scholars program was designed to help and expose select students from around the districts in the South Plains to different

A&M considers cutting journalism department

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M's journalism department may be eliminated as the university considers budget cuts, which may strip 40 percent of the department's funding at a time when its curriculum is outdated and faculty understaffed.

College of Liberal Arts Dean Charles Johnson told The Bryan-College Station Eagle in Tuesday's edition the journalism department is the only department within the college being considered for elimination. He said abolishing the department would be a last resort.

Most of the college's departments face cuts of 10 to 12 percent, he said. What specific cuts will be made should be clear by early summer.

State agencies have been ordered by the Legislature to cut spending by 12.5 percent during the next two years. Such a cut at A&M would reduce the university's budget by $52.4 million.

Johnson said he has not recommended eliminating the journalism department but has suggested it be overhauled.

Problems with the journalism department were revealed in 2001 after a consulting firm's review concluded enrollment was too high for the small faculty and the curriculum needed an update.

The consulting team suggested eliminating the department, merging it with another or investing to mend the problems.

Caps to decrease enrollment have since been implemented, but the department still does not have a permanent leader.

Tech graduate receives Walter Cronkite Award for reporting

By Heidi Toth/Staff Reporter

In boxing, "The Great One" is Muhammed Ali. In mass communications, the same title belongs to Walter Cronkite, who earned fame reporting the Vietnam War.

Tuesday night, one Texas Tech graduate shared the spotlight with the well-known reporter when he received the Walter Cronkite Award for Individual Achievement.

Jay Warren, chief political reporter and weekend anchor at WLSL-TV in Roanoke, Va., earned the award for two series he did about the 2002 congressional elections, according to a news release from the station.

One of the series, "The Road to 200," focused on a variety of issues and how they affected voters. "No Choice" looked at noncompetitive races and unbeatable incumbents. According to the release, judges for the award noted despite the mundane election, Warren took a new approach.

News Director Shane Moreland said Warren was selected from a pool of hundreds of television stations and reporters, which demonstrates his abilities as a reporter.

"Political reporting is such a tough thing to do because, for the most part, viewers have a hard time getting into it until the mud starts slinging," he said.

In the 2002 elections, which Moreland characterized as a slow and boring political season, Warren focused primarily on the issues instead of what the candidates were doing.

Warren

"He made people care about politics," Moreland said. "He made the everyday man care about his vote."

Warren has many qualities that set him apart as a reporter, Moreland said. His creativity and tenacity are two obvious ones, but there are many more as well.

"He's been very driven to make it better," he said. "He's not going to cover the same story the same way twice."

Warren's direct interviewing approach helps him get the information he needs, while his conversation style makes his stories easy to follow and compelling to listen to.

"He presents it like he's talking to his uncle or his mother," Moreland said. "He makes a way for it to impact people's lives."

Warren's award also indicates how dedicated the station is, he said. For some time, they have been trying to get their reporters to report as Warren does, and his winning a national award shows they are on the right path.

"It validates what we're doing as a news station," he said. "This isn't about ratings; this isn't about the commercialism. This is about providing accurate coverage."

Warren has covered many major events, including President Bill Clinton's impeachment proceedings and the war effort, but he also has done stories about local issues, Moreland said, and he has done them well.

"He gives a voice to the voiceless," he said.

Dan Coyle, marketing director for the news station, said this award signifies what the station has been working toward and Warren's dedication to their goal.

"Jay has helped our station to further differentiate our product from what other stations are doing in the market," he said. "This award truly reflects our efforts to cover political issues."

Political reporting is not easy, he said, and not everyone can do it well. Warren, however, has a knack for it.

"In order to cover political stories and issues, you have to have a deep understanding of government, politics and how they operate," Coyle said. "Jay obviously has a strong sense of that area of news, which qualifies him to pursue it."

Elizabeth Watts, associate professor of mass communications, was Warren's thesis adviser while he was at Tech. She was not surprised he went into political reporting, as he had an interest in it since she met him.

"When he came in to see me, we'd always be talking politics, and what's wrong with this politician, and what's wrong with that politician," she said.

For his thesis, Warren conducted a study of relationships between newspaper coverage of a governor's race and that race, she said, which set him up for political reporting.

Warren was focused while in school, and worked hard at what he was doing, Watts said.

He also did a few extra things, such as an internship with a local broadcast station and an independent study on the history of the first broadcast station in Lubbock.

"The fact that he did that internship here shows a lot of initiative on his part," she said.

Watts said his experience, both academic and practical, should lead him into whatever future goals he may choose.

"I think he has in mind at some point to become a college professor, and if he does that, it's really going to set him apart to have that great broadcast news experience," Watts said.

deciding factor, it was a reason for his final decision. Heintze said Schmidly's leadership style was a plus, but he would have been interested in the position had Schmidly not been president.

He did not have any problems working with Tech's Interim President Donald Haragan, Heintze said. He said he respects and appreciates Haragan.

"Having him here in this role made it hard for me to pursue this opportunity at OSU," he said.

Heintze will receive a salary increase at OSU, he said, which is because of increased responsibilities he will have.

Wiggins said there were several reasons for his decision, many similar to Heintze's. He said the OSU position is a good opportunity.

"That was, I guess, the overwhelming reason," he said. "It is a very, very good opportunity."

Wiggins will be working as vice president of information technology and chief information officer for the OSU system, similar to his current position, but with differences.

He said the increased range of work is one factor in his decision as well.

Haragan was unavailable for comment.

areas each year," she said. "This year, we are emphasizing medicine, and students get a chance to hear a former graduate, Dr. Harris, and take a tour of the Health Sciences Center."

The Bernard Harris Pre-medical Society was developed in 1998 to provide a support group for aspiring doctors and nurses in the medical school, Ramirez said.

Harris said he believes helping one person achieve a career in medicine is encouraging.

"I try to inspire students to go into a field dealing with medicine all the time," he said. "And if I can get through to one person, I have done my work for the day."

Harris told the audience to do what they want to in life.

"To fulfill your dreams, you must take advantage of the things around you, like education," he said. "With education comes power."

Stipend

"I've never known a university to be famous because of administration," he said. "Universities are recognized because of faculty achievement, student achievement and alumni achievement."

The stipend awarded to the School of Mass Communications began in 1999 to recognize a department or area dedicated to the teaching culture, Brink said.

A large number of criteria need to be met in order to qualify for the stipend, he said.

"The whole department has to apply and show they value teaching," Brink said. "They have to show success through student achievement and create an atmosphere of innovation and excellence."

Brink said the money may be used by the school for whatever it needs as long as it is used to enhance teaching.

The money will be used by the School of Mass Communications to facilitate teaching technology, lab technology and computer labs, Mass Communications Director Jerry Hudson said.

The School of Mass Communications has applied for the stipend for two years prior to receiving it, Hudson said.

"This year, we felt our faculty had exhibited a lot of dedication toward work and teaching excellence," Hudson said. "We have numerous active faculty involved in extracurricular activities, sponsorship, research productivity and excellence in classrooms."

Faculty honors included President's Excellence in Teaching, President's Academic Achievement, Texas Tech Alumni Association New Faculty, Outstanding Researcher, President's Book Awards, Texas Tech Association of Parents, and E. Rushing Jr. Faculty Distinguished Research and the Chancellor's Distinguished Research and Teaching honor.

"They had the inherent right of self-defense," McChrystal said. "When they are fired at, they have not only the right to respond, they have the obligation to respond to protect the soldiers with them and to accomplish the mission at large."

A Jordanian correspondent for Arab television network al-Jazeera was killed Tuesday when a U.S. bomb landed on the Baghdad office.

Victoria Clarke, spokeswoman for Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld, cautioned American and other news organizations before the outbreak of war that Baghdad would be dangerous.

"We've had conversations over the last couple of days, news organizations eager to get their people unilaterally into Baghdad," she said. "We are saying it is not a safe place."

PERSPECTIVES

Let us agree to disagree

Here is a sample of what the Terrorist Weekly Update might look like if such a news medium existed and actually told the truth and terrorists were not irrational beings:

"First order of business: American intransigence. Er, uh it may not be such a good idea to flock to fight in Iraq after all. It seems as if these American, British and Australian guys are kind of pissed.

"In fact, we're calling off the jihad. I repeat, we're calling off the jihad. Don't go to Iraq! You'll all die!

"Second item: Answering the call to jihad in Iraq. Recently, the Iraqi regime requested everybody in Iraq to migrate to Baghdad, AK-47s in tow. This might not be a good idea either. Thus far, most of the people who've done that have been shot.

"Third item: The Great Satan. We all hate America because, well, it's what we do and who we are, but, huh, I, huh, can't help but notice they're suddenly ready to kill us, too. Beware of this newfound dedication to fight."

This tidbit is one small example of how stupid these people are.

Anti-war activists may say the United States cannot make a moral judgment or claim moral superiority over any other society.

Like hell we can't! Screw moral relativism. There must come a time when one people is willing to say another people's way of life is wrong and needs to be stopped.

That point is usually reached when the latter makes it a point to systematically kill the former. Remember, they started it.

Screw world peace, too. I'm sick and tired of these bleeding hearts that want to avoid war at all costs. These people don't deserve to live (the terrorists, that is). The justifiable genocide of all terrorists — al-Qaida or not — is the noblest quest we could hope for in this first decade of the 21st century. There are remnants of a myriad of other terrorist organizations all across the globe that are ripe for destruction at the hands of the greatest military in the history of mankind.

Our troops are trained to do two things: kill people and break things. Why deprive them of the opportunity to do either? Get 'em, boys!

I, quite frankly, am quite happy that currently the nation that is morally superior also is the one that is dramatically militarily superior as well. Let's make good use of that while we can.

The United States is not at war with all Muslims the world over. Any intonations implying that is the objective are entirely fabricated and utter crap.

Who are the moderates here? France, Germany and Russia, or just about everybody else.

Apparently, several private Russian arms firms have been supplying various weapons and other pieces of equipment to the Iraqis. God in heaven knows the French have profited for quite some time thanks to assorted deals with the doomed Iraqi regime.

Saddam Hussein has executed hundreds of thousands of innocent people throughout the course of his tenure as dictator. Inevitably, left to his own devices, he would without hesitance use weapons of mass destruction against American targets wherever possible.

Well, not anymore. He's going to die, and his government will be replaced with one that gives the Iraqi people a chance at a better way of life. Whoopdy-freakin-doo if that's a bad business deal for anybody in Europe.

What's really great about this war, though, is the opposition to it. They may be wrong, but they have the right to express their views. Besides, I would have to replace a lot of entertainment in my life with whittling and pigeon chasing if it were not for the morons in Hollywood, on university campuses and elsewhere.

Free speech is a glorious and wonderful thing, especially when you're not emotionally sensitive ad nauseam.

My philosophy requires an addition to the famous Voltaire quote: "I may not agree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it," because I think it's funny.

Change best way to find oneself

Today a friend asked me, "What is it to be your own person? I've thought I was my 'own person' more than once in my life to discover later that I was miserably wrong. Is being your own person a myth, or just something you're not competent to judge until you truly are your 'own person' — whatever that might be?" This is my answer.

Michael Duff
www.michaelduff.net

Don't be ashamed of the capacity for change. At any point, a person can be 'wildly wrong about what he or she wants and still end up happy.

People don't have enough respect for the process of questioning. We've got this sense that we must have answers — perfect answers — all the time. And we're way too hard on ourselves for making mistakes.

Ninety-five percent of all mistakes are made from honest ignorance. Ignorance is not a sin or a crime. It is simply a natural consequence of being human.

Anyone who tells you that you must have all the answers, anyone who pretends to have everything figured out, is trying to steal something or sell you something.

Manipulators use the illusion of certainty to seduce and control people. Real human beings are not that certain. There are people who must appear certain in their daily lives. Think of them as "professionally certain." Politicians, preachers and salesmen, all of these people use the illusion of certainty to control people and gain value from others.

Certainty is an excellent tool for seducing people, but is seduction really an honest way to interact with your fellow human beings?

Bertrand Russell says the philosopher is the eternal questioner. To him, all certainty is temporary; summits on a mountain that never end. There are preferences that endure as the frontiers of our knowledge expand, but ultimately, an honest man is open to new knowledge and open to the changes that knowledge makes in his behavior.

No one should feel bad for acting on their present knowledge, and no one should hold themselves to a standard of omniscience. You have to act based on present knowledge. The alternative is stagnation and death.

Making mistakes is not a sin. The only sin is refusing knowledge. The ultimate crime is refusing to accept new information.

I'm not advocating physical skepticism, but in the realm of human behavior, your current knowledge is based on thousands of memories that make up your past — the legacy of things you have endured. Things you do leave their mark on you, and if those past experiences produce results that you don't like, sometimes you have to make radical changes in your environment just to break out of the rut.

If the crowd you've been hanging with leads you to places that you don't like, then you have to find a new crowd. You have to experiment with new places and new thoughts — new books, new teachers and new courses of study — so you can choose a path that fits you better.

Change is a virtue. Change is a goal, and it's damn hard to do it gracefully.

That's why most people stay stagnant and boring and dumb. Your brain is changing right now, so you have to change your world to match. Change the world to match what your brain wants, and change your world so you can change what your brain wants.

It goes both ways. Follow your desires, and the results will create new desires. It never ends, and it's certainly nothing to be ashamed of.

I meet so many people who think they're supposed to have it all figured out. What a complete load of crap. It's really scary to think you'll be a different person in 10 years, but think about that. That's 10 years of new experiences, 10 years of new information. Facts you don't know. People you haven't met. Books you haven't read.

How can you make predictions now based on things that you haven't even done yet? Are you a god? Is some smug authority figure telling you he's got it all figured out?

He doesn't. The only way to avoid change is to literally stop learning. Close yourself off to new experiences, or build a set of mental filters that reduce everything to worthless pulp.

That's the mindset of a religious zealot, and I presume you want to be a human being.

The hardest thing in the world is to embrace ambiguity. Embrace ignorance of the future and forgive ignorance of the past. Stagnation is a constant threat, but ultimately, change is the natural response to new information.

When I tell you to be your own person, I'm telling you to deliberately expose yourself to new things, things of your choosing, without regard for where those choices come from.

If you don't like the results you're getting with your current philosophy, try the opposite for a while and see how it feels. I've even sent people to church sometimes when I felt like they needed an antidote to their ultra-rational worldview.

Take charge of the experiment that is your life. Forgive your mistakes and don't be scared of change. Collect new information for a while, and you'll notice things in your personality that never change no matter what you may be experimenting with at the time.

The things that endure are the real you, and the quickest way to find that person is to try new things.

'Man Apart' quickly falls apart

It is so frustrating to watch a good actor waste his talent on bad movies. Vin Diesel has proved he can act ("Boiler Room") and he has the charisma to make old material work ("XXX").

Despite his efforts, he simply cannot save "A Man Apart," a film that seems to think it has done something original in the cop genre.

Diesel plays DEA Agent Sean Vetter, who is out to put a stop to the Colombian drug cartels operating in Mexico. At the beginning of the film, the DEA raids a club in order to apprehend a drug kingpin named Memo Lucero (Gino Silva). Lucero escapes in a car, which Diesel chases down on foot. He then apprehends Lucero, who promises he has made a big mistake.

Diesel can now go home to his pretty wife (Jacqueline Obradors) for a short vacation. When we see them laughing together, dancing on the beach and staring at each other stary-eyed, we know she is doomed. If you have seen the trailers, you already know members of the cartel break into their house and kill his wife. That's the only reason she even exists: to die.

FILM REVIEW

jeppler@hotmail.com

So Diesel swears revenge, and he and his partner Demetrius Hicks (Larenz Tate) decide to go after the cartel together, working from the bottom of the chain upward.

Now if this plot sounds a bit familiar, it may be because it's the same plot as nearly every other cop movie in the last, oh, 50 years. This is a magical world where cops don't need warrants for anything and dead bodies in the street just magically disappear like in a video game. There's never any paperwork.

What starts out being simply unoriginal in "A Man Apart" soon turns ridiculous. The movie is full of more holes than one of Diesel's shooting victims. He grows some facial hair and infiltrates the cartel under cover. Uh-huh. And none of the guys in the cartel recognize this cop who has been investigating them for the past seven years.

In one scene, Diesel is talking with a guy who starts bad-mouthing "this cop's stupid wife who we killed." He loses it, blows his cover and beats the guy to death, which then triggers a huge shootout in which three cops are killed.

Every cop-movie cliché is tossed into this movie. We've got the questioning by means of Russian Roulette, the dead wife, the revenge motive, the turning in of the badge and dismissal from the force, and of course, the renegade cop who goes after the bad guys alone.

And what would a cop-movie like this be without the main character getting a "you're out of control" speech from a friend?

The film only works in very small doses. Probably the strongest scene is between Hicks and a frightened suspect hiding in an attic with a gun.

This negotiating scene is genuinely tense with some good performances.

The last few minutes of the film are laughable, and there is the expected last scene of Diesel visiting his wife's grave one last time and muttering cheese-ball dialogue.

Diesel still shows signs of having a promising career, but if he keeps making mediocre garbage like this, he will find himself in a new land.

It's the "Land of Dumb Action Movies," also called "Straight-to-Video Land," which is already inhabited by the likes of Jean-Claude Van Damme, Steven Seagal and Sylvester Stallone.

Ninth Symphony to sell for millions

LONDON (AP) — Beethoven's final manuscript of the Ninth Symphony, marked with the composer's revisions and insults to the copyist who produced it, could fetch up to $4.6 million at a sale in London next month.

"This is one of the greatest works ever written by man, and it isn't likely there will be another complete Beethoven manuscript up for sale ever again; the rest are lost or in libraries," Stephen Roe, Sotheby's head of manuscripts, said Tuesday.

The owner, described only as a "private foundation," is planning to set up a charitable fund for musicians with the money, Roe said.

The estimate for the May 22 sale may be conservative. A single sheet of Beethoven's early draft of the opening of the Ninth Symphony sold last year for $2 million, eight times more than the estimated price.

That sheet was written in the composer's hand, but the Ninth Symphony manuscript was made by a copyist. However, almost every one of the 575 pages has notes and revisions scrawled by Beethoven, Roe said in a telephone interview.

Beethoven was most vitriolic in the final choral passage section of the symphony, extolling freedom and the brotherhood of man.

The record for a music manuscript is $4 million paid for a collection of Mozart symphonies sold at Sotheby's in 1987, Roe said.

GREEK Gourmet

Texas Tech fraternities, sororities host appetizer cook-off as part of week-long activities

By Matt Muench/Staff Reporter

Greek Circle was pasted with grills, plates and foods of many kinds late Tuesday afternoon. But the most plentiful thing present was Greek letters.

It was day two of Texas Tech's third annual Greek Week, which is an event that unites sororities and fraternities. Monday was a soapbox derby race.

Tuesday was a different kind of competition. Food was involved this time, as the organizations had an appetizer cook-off, which also featured live background music from the band "Synthetic Six."

Students nibbled on a list of appetizers that could fill four pages of a local restaurant menu. Some of the many foods present were Buffalo wings, rat-tails, chips and dip, kabobs, shrimp and even fried turkeys.

"Dinner was served tonight," said R.J. Hargrove, a freshman undecided major from Alpine, behind his thick glasses. "I'm not even a Greek, and I am not even sure if I am allowed to be here. But the food is good. And the girls are good to look at."

At least 400 students were present at the event that featured as many as 40 fraternities and sororities.

Interfraternity Council President Anthony Contreras, a senior finance major from Dallas, said this event is a great way to bring Greeks together and have fun while filling their stomachs. He added the entire week helps the Greek reputation.

"This is very important because a lot of times we get criticized for beer drinking," he said. "This is a good way to bring Greeks together and help the community and show that we do support good causes."

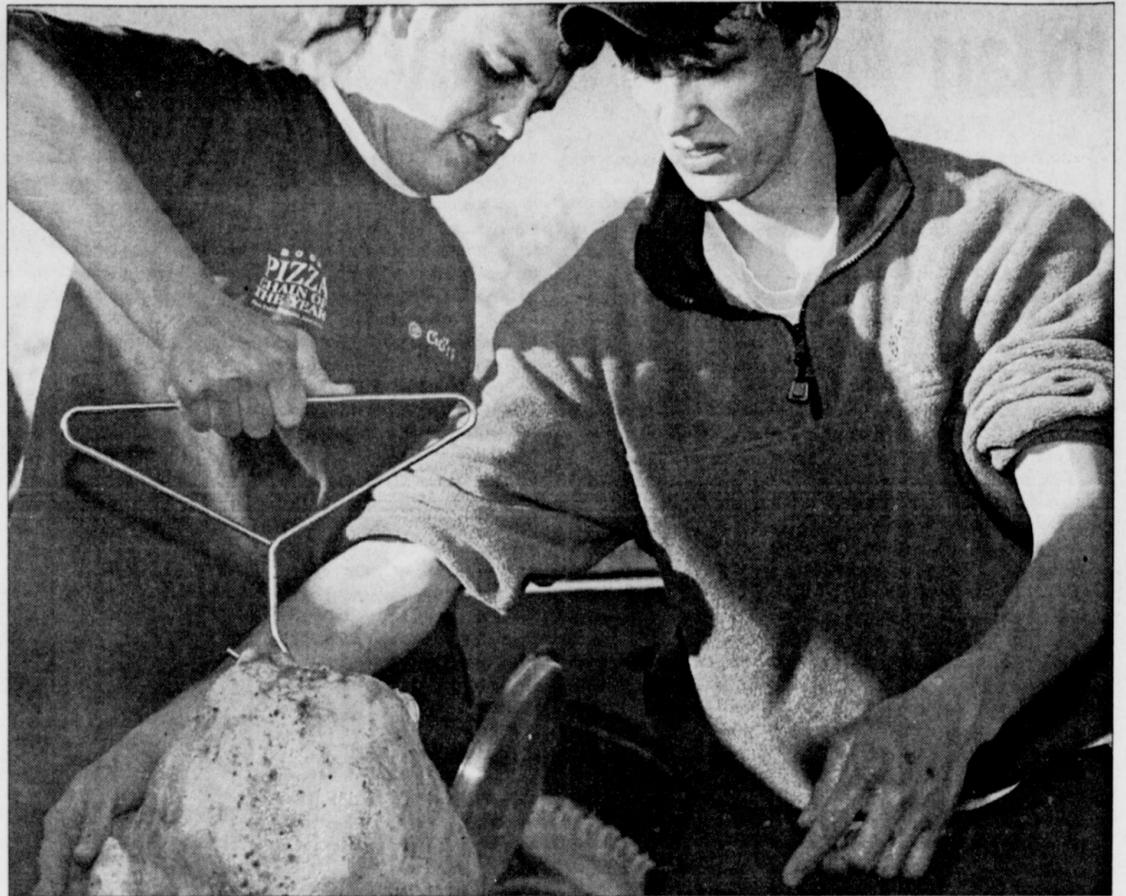

President of Panhellenic Council Kristin Tarbox agreed.

"This is a laid-back environment, and we get a good chance to relax," said Tarbox, a senior family financial planning major from Fort Worth. "There is not a lot of work involved."

Don't tell head chef of Farmhouse Nathan Harvey there is not a lot of work involved.

Using a crutch to support a bad right ankle, Harvey, a junior advertising major from Lubbock, fried and sliced turkey. Sore ankle and all, he was not about to miss this event.

"Tailgating is my thing, and I love it," he said. "There are a lot of cool guys, a lot of cool ladies and a lot of real good food. It all works out real well."

His turkey drew a big crowd, as it was gone in less than two minutes.

"I enjoy seeing what everybody else comes up with," he said. "But I want to show them what I can do."

He said events like these show that Greeks should not have bad reputations.

"This definitely shows that Greeks are in it all together," he said. "If one fraternity gets in trouble, then everybody suffers. But when everybody comes in here and is all buddy-buddy, it says a lot. We are all hanging out, listening to some good music and eating some good turkey."

Zeta Tau Alpha member Secily Allcom, a sophomore pre-communication disorders major from Brownfield, agreed with Harvey. She said most people think Greek events only include alcohol. Not this one, she said.

"This is something fun that we do that does not involve any alcohol," she said. "Everyone is mingling and everyone hangs out with each other."

Kappa Alpha Theta member Laci Loerwald, a junior English education major from Austin, said this event shows Greeks do not hate each other.

"This is a good time for Greeks to come out and show comradery," she said. "We all have friends in other sororities and fraternities. This is a good time to hang out with each other and have healthy competition."

Greek Week continues Wednesday, which is slated as movie night, and Thursday with the Relay for Life, which will take place from 6 p.m. Thursday to 6 a.m. Friday at R.P. Fuller Track.

Greek Week will conclude Friday with an awards banquet that will name the winners on a point system that fraternities and sororities receive throughout this week and semester.

Red Raiders outrun Greyhounds 12-1

By Jason Lenz/Staff Reporter

Not missing a beat, the same flock of birds that visited the field for Monday evening's 10-4 win versus West Texas A&M returned in the bottom of the fourth inning of Tuesday's game against Eastern New Mexico.

Also not missing a beat were the Red Raiders, who dismantled the Greyhounds 12-1.

Texas Tech (22-13, 4-7 Big 12 play) scored one run in each of the first two innings and then came alive in the third, scoring four runs on three hits and one error, sparked by an RBI double by junior first baseman Doug Beck, who went 3-4 with two RBIs for the game.

The Raiders scored two more in the fourth, one more in the sixth and three more in the seventh.

Tech was held scoreless in only the fifth and eighth innings.

Senior starting pitcher Nathan

Fouts threw a complete game, giving up seven hits, one earned run, striking out three and walking only one hitter.

Head coach Larry Hays said he was pleased with the efforts of the team, especially Fouts.

"That was a big thing for us (Tuesday) night for Fouts to step up and throw like that," he said. "Hopefully, he'll do that again. That was huge for us."

The two games against West Texas A&M and Eastern New Mexico were bright spots for the pitching staff, Hays said.

"We seemed to be more relaxed (Tuesday) night than we were (Monday) night," he said. "Over the two nights, the best thing we had was our pitching. (Jeff) Karstens did well, and then Nate followed up (Tuesday) night. That's encouraging."

Fouts said he was pleased with his effort and also pleased with the help of his defense. He said the hitting in the game was a good improvement.

"Those runs aren't too bad to have in a game," he said. "It's fun to see us hitting again. For a while there, we struggled, but after (Monday) night and (Tuesday) night, I think we're back on track."

The two home games were preceded by two consecutive losses at Missouri. Fouts said the team's morale has been improved with two wins.

"I think these two games were very important for us after that Missouri weekend," he said. "We were just backwards in what we were trying to do...but now, we've talked about it, and it seems like everybody's back on track."

Beck said the team's resurgence at the plate was a pleasant change.

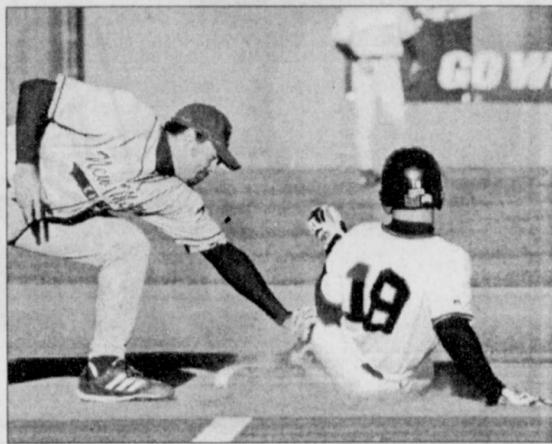

"(It) kind of gets us back on track, get back up there and get comfortable again, gets us back to where we were before we started struggling again," he said. "Games like that are going to get us back on pace for the rest of the season, and hopefully, we can jump back in there in conference and do the job."

Junior designated hitter Travis McElroy, who went 5-6 with a solo home run in the bottom of the sixth inning, said the win against the Greyhounds is one step closer to where the Raiders need to be.

"(Monday) night we played OK, but I think (Tuesday) night we played better," he said. "I think that's kind of the building process. You always want to play better each game, and I think that's going to help us going into this weekend. We want to play better than we did (Tuesday) night on Friday. This will help us get going a little bit."

The Raiders return to Big 12 Conference play this weekend with a series against Kansas at Dan Law Field. Game one begins at 7 p.m. Friday.

UConn nips Tennessee for second title in a row

ATLANTA (AP) — Diana Taurasi tormented Tennessee again, and Connecticut proved it could rebuild — and still repeat.

Leading a young team that had four new starters, Taurasi ignored the sore back and bum ankle that have bothered her for several weeks and carried Connecticut to a 73-68 victory over Tennessee on Tuesday night for its second straight national championship.

Taurasi, who averaged 22 points in her first five games against Tennessee, scored 28 in this one with a variety of the flashy moves that made her the national player of the year and the Final Four's most outstanding player.

The Huskies (37-1) won their third title game between the nation's two premier programs, and it was mostly because of Taurasi, who became the leader on a team that lost four starters.

She made 8-of-15 shots, including four 3-pointers. She scored on a floater in the lane, a backdoor cut and even threw in a shot left-handed.

Still, Tennessee (33-5) closed with a rush after trailing by 13. When Britany Jackson pump faked and then made a 3-pointer as she fell forward, the lead was down to 70-66 with 1:01 left.

Gwen Jackson's layup drew Tennessee to 71-68 with 21 seconds remaining. But Ann Strother, one of two freshman who start for Connecticut, sank two free throws, and freshman Ashley Battle intercepted Tennessee's inbound pass.

The Huskies moved the ball so quickly that Tennessee could not foul, and fittingly, Taurasi ended up with the ball. She flung it into the stands at the buzzer and Connecticut began yet another victory celebration.

If any more evidence was needed that Connecticut has supplanted Tennessee as the nation's top program in women's hoops, this was it.

The title was the fourth overall for the Huskies, who also beat Tennessee in the 1995 and 2000 championship games and now have beaten the Lady Vols four straight times.

Inner-Tube Water Polo Championships

A co-rec inner tube water polo team that goes by the name of Better Ghetto Society (BGS) was crowned this year's champion. With the defending champions - CHI - out of the picture in the semi-finals, Better Ghetto Society defeated the Guppies in the semis then went on to defeat Sink or Swim in the championship game. Better Ghetto Society is powered by the female duet of Lindsay Harrell & Lindsey Doherty. The men of Better Ghetto Society also powered the Men's Inner tube water polo champion - the prettiest mermaids.

In men's action, the prettiest mermaids, mauled through their tournament to claim their first Inner Tube Water Polo title. Team members include Brent Thompson, Bryan Lutz, T.J. "tito" Martin, Mike Graham, Charles Martin, Todd Richardson, & Han Shengbeh.

This year's Inner tube Water Polo season was the biggest ever. We started with 36 teams in both men's and co-rec divisions. Thanks to all that participated and maybe next year, you can put a team together and come have fun in the pool at the Rec's Aquatic Center. Aquatic Staff - Thanks for all your help.
