Butler appeals two-year prison sentence

By Sally Gunter/The University Daily

The defense for Dr. Thomas Butler filed an appeal of the March 11 sentencing on Wednesday, the last day to appeal his sentencing.

U.S. District Judge Sam R. Cummings sentenced Butler to 24 months in prison and fines totaling more than $58,000. A jury found Butler guilty of 47 of the 69 counts against him on Dec. 1, in association with 30 missing vials of the bubonic plague in January 2003.

The state has 30 days to appeal the sentence and Butler defense attorney Floyd Holder said this influenced the defense's decision to file.

"It's a little complicated," Holder said. "They could put us in a box if we couldn't get an agreement."

The outcome of the appeal is difficult to foresee, and a hearing date has not yet been set.

"Predicting the future is not my strongest attribute,"

Butler

The defense will submit a brief to the U.S. 5th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals, and the prosecution has the same opportunity.

Holder said that once the briefs are submitted it will be the decision of the court as to whether oral arguments are presented.

It could take a year before the whole appellate process

Holder said.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Dick Baker said the appellate matters will be handled with the Dallas Office of the U.S. District Attorney.

"The Department of Justice will review its option to ascertain if a cross appeal of the sentence opposed would be in the interest of justice," Baker said.

is completed, Holder said.

Butler was found guilty of counts including mail and wire fraud, embezzlement and the unauthorized export and transportation of hazardous materials.

Butler said during his sentencing hearing he never imagined his work would lead him to "criminal procedures and trial."

In a settlement in January, Butler agreed to pay the Texas Tech Health Sciences Center $250,000 for fraud of research funds and to retire from his position within the university. He also surrendered his Texas medical license.

Cummings approved the defense's request for a downward departure at the sentencing, giving himself the discretion to determine how far below the maximum 87 to 108 months in prison Butler would serve.

During his reasoning, Cummings said the "conduct occurred on one occasion" and not during a repeated number of instances. Butler's interest was not "in evil or terrorist intent," in the pursuit of medical reasons for research, Cummings said.

Holder said following the sentencing that Cummings gave the lowest possible fine under the penalty.

"As a lawyer, I am very happy for what it did, but I'm sorry that my client is going to wind up having to go to prison," Holder said. "But it's not going to be near as long as what he was looking at this morning."

Butler has until April 14 to voluntarily surrender and begin serving his term. He will have a three-year probation term once released from prison.

Following the sentencing, prosecution for the state, Bob Webster, said the prosecution was satisfied.

"We believe the sentencing to be fair," he said. "It sends the appropriate fair message. We will not tolerate financial shenanigans."

Court debates pledge phrase "under God"

By Anne Gearan/
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP)—Not long after the Supreme Court came to order

Wednesday with the invocation, "God save the United States and this honorable court," the justices were deep in a wrenching argument over whether millions of public schoolchildren may continue pledging allegiance to one nation "under God."

The religious reference in the Pledge of Allegiance, a California atheist argued, is an unconstitutional government promotion of religion in his daughter's third-grade classroom.

"I am an atheist. I don't believe in God," Michael Newdow told the justices and a rapt, packed courtroom, arguing with passion and personal asides — unusual for the dry, cerebral high court. "Every school morning, my child is asked to stand up, face that flag, put her hand over her heart and say that her father is wrong."

On the other side, Bush administration lawyer Theodore Olson said the pledge reflects America's religious heritage.

"It is an acknowledgment of the religious basis of the framers of the Constitution, who believed not only that the right to revolt, but that the right to vest power in the people to create a government ...

Lubbock councilman withdraws candidacy

SHIFTING INTEREST: Frank W. Morrison wants to focus time on business, investments.

By Sally Gunter/The University Daily

Lubbock City Councilman for District 4 Frank W. Morrison announced Wednesday he is withdrawing his candidacy for the May 15 election.

"I plan on serving out the rest of my term," Morrison said in a news conference.

Morrison, 46, said he wants to shift his primary concentration to his business, Morrison Commodity Services, and take the opportunity to invest in the Hi Plains Feed Mill. The mill is a feed-processing facility focusing on soybeans.

"I plan to be a continuing and active member on the Council until then," Morrison said. "I'm not going away."

Morrison, who has served one term on the Council, will continue to offer his services by serving on city committees, he said.

Morrison said he had no intention of not running for re-election when he filed his bid in January.

"I didn't make a decision until over the weekend," he said. "It is a path I needed to pursue."

Morrison would have faced five opponents on May 15, but he said he is not dropping out of the race for fear of not being re-elected.

"I believe I would have won without a runoff," Morrison said.

Mayor Marc McDougal said he was surprised when Morrison told him Tuesday night he was pulling out of the race, but he can comprehend the business reasons.

"I didn't know how a man with a one-man operation could survive," McDougal said. "I certainly understand the decision he's made."

Morrison served his district well amid controversy, McDougal said.

"Frank has done a good job," McDougal said. "I appreciate his dedication to the Council."

When Morrison moved out of his district in 2002 to remodel his home,

Tech hires new vice chancellor of marketing

By Michael Castellon/The University Daily

As recent as 10 years ago, a college education was a ticket to prosperity and success. A college degree was a one-way pass to the American dream and opened the doors of privilege to anyone who could manage the financial and intellectual challenges.

A college education can still provide the ability to achieve those proverbial dreams, but it's getting harder. In light of more and more students pursuing college degrees and more companies refraining from hiring new grads, schools are having to find new ways to boost the image of institutions so that the draw of higher education seems appealing.

Schools across the nation, and especially in Texas, are scrambling to accommodate a plethora of new students spawned from the baby boomer generation. In fact, schools across the state are taking on new initiatives to boost their image and develop their brand in an effort to attract more students and the state and federal dollars necessary to accommodate them. In addition, schools are finding new ways to tout the importance of higher education and the benefits education can bring.

Texas Tech is no exception.

Enter Lynn Denton, a woman who knows about image and growth. Denton, the newest addition to Tech's administrative ranks, will carry the title of associate vice chancellor for communications and marketing, a new title for an existing position.

"The goals of this position include bringing leadership to the communication and marketing efforts of the university and Health Sciences Center," said Mark Lindemood, Tech's vice chancellor for institutional advancement.

Tech students prepare for Take Back the Night march

By Nikki Siegriest/The University Daily

Robin Milstead said she is not looking to the police or the government to make the night safe again. Instead, she is looking to her fellow students and community members.

She is helping to organize the third annual Take Back the Night march and rally at 6 p.m. today to raise awareness of sexual assault, and to honor those who have survived it.

"I don't need to be afraid when I go out to my car at night," said Milstead, the chairman of the event. She also is the president of the Feminist Majority Leadership alliance who is spearheading the event.

By standing with other students and members from the community she hopes to show predators students are going to take a stand against sexual assault.

"People are afraid to talk about it," the junior English major from Houston said. "They think they'll be exploited, and it's not just women. It's men, women and children."

She said she hopes others become aware of the commonness of different kinds of sexual assault.

"While I have never been sexually assaulted, there are so many people who have been," Milstead said. "It's not just a woman's issue; it's everyone's

Coast Guard searching for missing helicopter Texas man killed during traffic stop Pakistan's anti-terror stance provokes action

HOUSTON (AP) — The Coast Guard was searching the Gulf of Mexico on Wednesday for a helicopter that disappeared with 10 people aboard.

The helicopter last had radio contact on Tuesday night when it was about 90 miles south of Galveston. It was heading to an oil exploratory ship in the gulf, Discoverer Spirit.

"We are hoping that something went wrong and they maybe landed on a different platform," Coast Guard Chief Warrant Officer Adam Wine said. "We are hoping for the best."

No signs of the helicopter were found overnight. There were no reports of bad weather, Wine said.

The pilot, co-pilot and eight passengers were believed to be wearing lifejackets, Coast Guard Petty Officer Andy Kendrick said.

MARKSVILLE, La. (AP) — A state trooper shot and killed a Texas man because he thought the man was reaching for a weapon after being pulled over Wednesday morning, a state police spokesman said.

No weapon was found, said Sgt. Howard McKee.

McKee said the driver was stopped about 4:30 a.m. four miles north of Marksville on Louisiana Highway 1 in Avoyelles Parish. The man repeatedly refused to comply with the trooper's commands and at some point made an "erratic movement" as though he was about to pull a weapon, McKee said.

The trooper, whose name was not released, shot the man once, killing him.

The man was identified as Andrew Arway, 41, of Houston. His body was sent to Lafayette for an autopsy, McKee said.

WANA, Pakistan (AP) — A bombing and a series of rocket attacks in regions surrounding South Waziristan have raised fears that a bloody offensive by Pakistani forces against al-Qaida militants could be provoking a broad backlash.

Pakistani forces reported no fighting with al-Qaida militants on Wednesday in South Waziristan, where thousands of troops have been battling hundreds of militants and their tribal supporters.

A roadside bomb exploded late Tuesday in northwestern Pakistan as an army vehicle passed as part of the military's sweep against suspected terrorists holed up in the rugged tribal regions along the Afghan border, police said.

Three rockets also slammed into Peshawar late Tuesday, wounding two people, a police official said. Nobody claimed responsibility for the attack in the capital of Pakistan's North West Frontier Province, said Mohammed Khan, a police inspector.

The attack illustrates the dangerous line President Gen. Pervez Musharraf is walking as he seeks to appease Washington without disrupting Pakistan's delicate balance of Islamic and secular concerns.

A 30-member delegation of tribal elders left Wana, the main town in South Waziristan, on Wednesday for the area where most of the fighting has taken place.

The elders will try to track down tribesmen wanted for sheltering terrorists and find out where several kidnapped troops and government officials were being held, said Malik Ba Khan, a member of the delegation.

"We will make every effort to find a solution through negotiations. We will make every effort so that the situation becomes normal," Khan said.

Elders from other tribal regions held a meeting with Zalikhel tribesmen and had them take oaths on the Quran, Islam's holy book, that they will cooperate with the government, said Brig. Mahmood Shah, the regional military chief.

came as a result of religious principles," Olson said.

That view was loudly represented outside the court, with scores of demonstrators reciting the pledge and carrying signs that read, "In God We Trust."

The high court is expected to rule by summer.

Newdow, a lawyer, made the rare and usually foolhardy decision to argue his own case before the court. He withstood the justices' vigorous questions, and based on their smiles and glances, it seemed he had won their respect.

Newdow had prevailed in one respect before Wednesday's argument began. He had asked Justice Antonin Scalia to step aside because of remarks that seemed to prejudge the case. Scalia complied.

If the rest of the court agrees with Newdow now, it could declare that the phrase "under God" breaches the figurative wall separating church and state. That would mean an end to the Pledge of Allegiance as generations of American schoolchildren have known it.

Or, as several justices indicated during arguments, the court could rule that the words are a benign and ceremonial part of a traditional, patriotic exercise.

"We have so many references to God in our daily lives today," Justice Sandra Day O'Connor told Newdow, including the court's own, familiar opening call.

If the pledge cannot refer to God, the justices asked, what about the phrase "In God We Trust" on U.S. currency? What about dating laws and government proclamations with the notation, "in the year of our Lord?"

Newdow's answer: Nobody is making his 9-year-old say "In God We Trust" or singling her out as an oddball if she refuses.

The Supreme Court already has ruled that schoolchildren cannot be forced to say the pledge, but Newdow says that is not good enough. When a teacher, paid by taxpayers, stands up and leads the pledge, it is unrealistic to expect small children to opt out, Newdow said.

"Imagine you're the one atheist with 30 Christians," Newdow said.

Newdow is almost single-handedly fighting not only his daughter's Sacramento-area school, but also the Bush administration and a majority of American public opinion. The girl's mother also opposes his effort.

Almost nine in 10 people said the "under God" reference belongs in the pledge, according to an Associated Press-Ipsos poll released this week.

Newdow and supporters such as the American Civil Liberties Union also must contend with the court's own statements about the pledge in the past.

Olson pointed to 14 instances where various Supreme Court justices have endorsed the wording, religious reference and all.

Congress inserted the words "under God" in 1954, at the height of the Cold War, to distinguish the religious tradition of the United States from the official atheism of the Soviet Union. Some defenders of the pledge argue that even with those beginnings, the passage of time has laundered the words of their religious meaning.

Newdow won in San Francisco's 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which ruled that teachers are barred from leading the pledge, with its reference to God, in public schools.

The Supreme Court repeatedly has banned prayers and official religious exercises from public schools, and the 9th Circuit relied on those previous cases in its ruling.

Should the high court uphold the decision, public schools could still recite a pledge with its pre-1954 wording, "one nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

Before the high court decides the meat of the case, it must determine a crucial procedural issue.

The Bush administration and other pledge supporters claim Newdow does not have the proper legal footing to bring his case because he does not have full legal custody of his daughter.

issue. It's not just a campus issue; it's a community issue."

The group will meet at the new side of the Student Union and march to Memorial Circle.

Once arrive at Memorial Circle they will have a rally and candlelight vigil to honor survivors of rape and other kinds of sexual assault.

"We want to help Tech students realize that the city does care," she said. "A lot of the time students think the city is against them. There are also people on this campus who do care, and there are people to go to."

One of the women to be honored is the grandmother of Shannon Posern, secretary of the Alliance.

Her grandmother, Mary Snyder, was abandoned as a child and sent through foster care.

While Snyder was in foster care, she suffered abuse, but Posern said her grandmother was able to overcome it and become stronger from the experience.

The junior political science major from Pasadena said she has always seen her grandmother as a role model and wants to have the same kind of courage as her grandmother.

"I wish I could be half as strong as she is," Posern said. "Now she has a great family and is very involved in politics."

To Posern, Take Back the Night means being able to stand up to fear and taking charge of yourself and your community.

"It means not being afraid and not wondering 'Am I going to do this by myself?'" she said. "I should always have the option to do something by myself, whether it be to walk at night or go to a movie during the day."

Snyder, 71, will be present for the ceremony Thursday.

Posern said she hopes it will help bring awareness to others in the Lubbock and Tech communities.

"Students should become more aware that it happens, not just to other people, but to people close to them," she said. "I hope (those who attend) take the knowledge and become a better person. They need to march with us; stop the violence."

The ceremony is open to anyone who wants to participate, and men and children are welcome to come.

Posern said 14 percent of sexual assault cases are claimed by men.

Because men are victims of sexual assault as well, she said she hopes many will come out and support the rally to night.

Other organizations, such as IMPACT Tech, Women's Protective Services, Tech Family Relations and some local churches are helping to sponsor the event.

The groups are also selling luminarias to place around Memorial Circle during the candlelight vigil in honor or remembrance of those who have been sexually assaulted.

They cost $2, and all the proceeds go toward Women's Protective Services.

Milstead said she hopes the event helps promote awareness going into April.

"This should give momentum into April, which is sexual assault awareness month," she said. "We want to educate people about services in the community that women and men can go to."

McDougal said the situation was "blown up bigger at the time."

Morrison also admitted in February to being arrested in Hale County in October 2002 for drunken driving.

These incidents had no influence on his decision, Morrison said.

"The publicity did not affect my decision at all," he said.

With no incumbent, McDougal said it is anyone's race and he expects high voter turnout for District 4.

"I think it's going to be easier for one of them to pull ahead," he said. "But it might be difficult to win without a runoff."

Cindy Rugeley, who vacated her post last year. Denton's title reflects her broad and diverse administrative responsibilities.

"Tech and West Texas is a good fit for me," Denton, a San Angelo-native said. "I had already worked with (Tech Chancellor) Dr. David Smith and the State Health Department. This will be a big challenge and a great opportunity for me to work with the university and its Path to Pre-eminence."

Denton has strong roots in West Texas. Her family lineage here dates back to the late 1800s, and her employment history reads like a who's who of public and community service, including jobs with the Health and Human Services Commission and the Austin State School.

After several years of advocating the need for more awareness for immunization in children, Denton moved on to advocating healthcare education and awareness for Texas' youth.

"It has been a huge privilege for me to work for the State of Texas and have input in the decisions affecting Texans, especially children," she said.

Denton's primary responsibilities will be to aid in the tailoring of the university's image, which Tech officials hope will draw potential students and dollars.

Competition among institutions of higher education has left officials with the need to engage in hardcore public relations efforts the same way corporations would do so to market a product. In Tech's case, the product is education and research.

"We're in the middle of a process right now where we're looking at brand identity, and I think that process is leading us to look at our overall positioning in terms of educational effectiveness and delivering that message to key audiences," Lindemood said. "On the student front, we've made a lot of progress, but now we're looking at ways we can reach business and government leaders."

Lindemood hopes Denton's experience as campaign director of the Texas Higher Education's Coordinating Board will bring fresh air to Tech's efforts to attract and accommodate growth.

The Board's Closing the Gaps campaign, which promotes the statewide effort among colleges to prepare for 300,000 new students by 2015, has been adopted by Tech officials, who have a great deal of experience in accommodating growing student growth, and have been pushing for continued expansion.

Currently, Denton is spending time getting a feel for the university and its people, and is working with other administrators to outline specific goals.

"I have an open-door philosophy, I'm eager to have people call me up and would like to meet the people here," she said.

Children's cell phones should be taken away

Four million. Read it again, say it aloud even, if you're comfortable with that. I know what you're thinking, but no, it's not the money being set aside to build our bookman his book-family.

Let that number sink in, though, I'll come back to it in a bit.

I work with kids, and sometimes while I'm watching them run and play I think about how things were when I grew up, what all I said and did, and how I played with my friends. Some things haven't really changed much with children, like the bad kids that are in every group.

I'm sure everyone remembers the bad kids in their classes growing up. Not that they were necessarily bad people, but rather behaved badly. There was always at least one, or two working together. Either they smelled funny, talked back to the teacher, or were mean to everyone else around them ... perhaps even all three. But they were the ones sent to the principal's office about three times a week.

Well, with kids nowadays I'd have to say the amount of delinquents has increased to about nine or 10 per group, depending upon smell.

There is a greater number of children who cannot listen at all, run out of control, and say crazy, inappropriate things. What's worse, the middle group of kids that could go either way are encouraged to go over to the bad, leaving you with a few that make up the minority of goodness.

I used to wonder if kids had just gotten worse on their own, since I know we weren't near as bad growing up. But then I thought better of it, because children are clean slates, and parents are the ones who change. Then different experiences at my job reaffirmed that yeah, it's the parents.

Here's a wonderful example — I'm playing dodge-ball with a bunch of younger children (don't worry, it was completely fair) and this second grader tells another kid that he better "dodge like hell."

Now I remember saying bad words when I was young, but nothing like that, and especially not around adults. I wouldn't say words like "butt" around them, not because I would get in trouble, but because I knew it was wrong to say, and they knew it was wrong, too. Well, that and I was afraid of grown-ups.

Spencer Ingram

There seems to be a pattern forming here. Far too many parents are abandoning their kids to television, rather than getting too involved in their lives. An old saying goes, 'it takes a village to raise a child,' but a child raised by Japanimation, Hollywood and cell phones probably won't come out with a good sense of right and wrong.

After hearing it, I said "Excuse me? What did you say?" And he just nonchalantly repeated it, not seeming to understand I had definitely heard him the first time.

That wasn't quite the response I was looking for, so I pulled him inside so I could talk to him at the bad kids' table. He started to cry of course, because a lot of kids cry when they know they're in trouble (this one especially) in hopes that you'll leave them alone.

But by the look on his face I could tell he was crying because he was confused; he didn't know why he was in trouble or why that word was wrong. The reason for this was soon confirmed by his mother, whom upon hearing what he said responded with "Well you should hear what he says at home." Actually no, I'd rather not.

I recently saw Angelina Jolie's epic thriller "Taking Lives (and your money)", and a couple had taken what appeared to be their five-year-old son to see it.

There was a pretty gratuitous sex scene that I probably shouldn't have seen, much less a kindergartener. Once you have a child, you kind of need to change the way you live and what all you do, since some children aren't as mature as their parents.

Last, after seeing that commercial with the dad complaining about his daughter's phone minutes not starting until nine, I was saddened and decided to research it a bit.

And there it was — more than 4 million children ages 14 and under own cell phones. Why, so they can talk to their friends from school, the ones they see seven hours a day?

I didn't get a cell phone until this past summer, partly because I couldn't afford it, and partly because I was still stuck in the 90s. I still wish I had one of those huge Zack Morris cell phones.

There seems to be a pattern forming here. Far too many parents are abandoning their kids to television, rather than getting too involved in their lives.

An old saying goes "it takes a village to raise a child," but a child raised by Japanimation, Hollywood and cell phones probably won't come out with a good sense of right and wrong. Looking at the world today, would you really want to be raised by our society?

If you plan on having children, do the world a favor and teach them yourselves, don't leave it up to others. Be involved and take great interest in their lives, because your support and encouragement will be the most important to them. Just take them to the PG-13 movie, but don't buy them a cell phone.

Rape victims can get power back

Society must take sexual assault seriously

Every two minutes, somewhere in America, a woman is sexually assaulted, according to the RAINN Web site.

The Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network also reported 80 percent of rape victims are under the age of 30.

The topic of rape first came to my mind when I saw an article about a Texas Tech freshman woman whose accusations of a sexual assault were determined unfounded.

One of the biggest problems with rape is many women are afraid to tell someone they were raped.

Then, their rapist remains free to attack someone else. According to RAINN, in 2001 only 39 percent of rapes and sexual assaults were reported, which is only about one in every three. That leaves 61 percent that are not reported and all of those rapists will never serve a day in prison.

Then there are women who are brave enough to come forward and tell about their traumatic experience so as to stop the man who did it.

However, since there are women like the Tech woman who make up stories for some reason or another, the women who actually are raped are not always believed immediately.

Some women use the idea that they are the "weaker sex" as a weapon. For attention, embarrassment of consent, revenge or some other odd reason some women will tell people they have been raped when they haven't.

This isn't fair for the women who are raped because then they have to work extremely hard to prove their story. It is like the boy who cried wolf.

Also, the police spend a lot of time and money on investigations and when they waste their time on one that isn't even true, it takes away from other investigations into real crimes.

A lot of men rape because they like to feel the power and control they can have over a woman. It isn't fair that men are usually stronger than women. But, since they have this advantage, they are able to get away with attacking women.

After the attack, however, is when the woman can get the power back by coming forward and telling about what happened to her.

This is the one thing she has control over. She can say, "No, I will not be silenced" and show that no matter what she can be strong. Her coming forward will hopefully lead to a successful investigation followed by a trial and conviction.

Having put her rapist behind bars will help a rape victim to begin to heal and make her feel good knowing she protected many other women who could have been attacked by the same man.

Rape and sexual assaults are very serious issues that shouldn't be taken lightly. I can't imagine how anyone with a conscience could make up a story about something so serious.

If you or anyone you know have ever been the victim of a sexual assault, don't be afraid to come forward. If you need help or want to talk to anyone contact the National Sexual Assault Hotline at 1-800-656-HOPE. It is free, confidential, and available 24/7.

Also, the third annual Take Back the Night march and rally is at 6 p.m. to pay tribute to those who have survived sexual assault.

Anyone who wants to take a stand against this violence should meet at the new side of the Student Union and join the march to Memorial Circle where a candlelight vigil will be held. If we all stand together we truly can take back the night and make Lubbock a safer community.

It is wrong to discriminate in job market because of events like Sept. 11 attacks

By Rasmieyh/Northern Star

(U-WIRE) DEKALB, Ill. — Since the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, Arabs, Muslims and Sikhs have been the target of discrimination in the work force. Let's not kid ourselves — discrimination always has existed, but after the attacks more people feel they have the right to speak out against and direct their frustration toward Arabs, Muslims and Sikhs in the most derogatory of ways while displaying different forms of prejudices against them in the most extreme of ways.

The acts of that fatal September morning never will be forgotten, but people forget that it was a hate crime in itself, a monumental hate crime that started a ripple effect of hate crimes in the country.

Extremists, Osama bin Laden and his gang, were responsible for the attacks. And as hard as it may be to believe this, much of the Muslim, Arab and Sikh communities condemned this despicable act.

So it gets me when I hear of the latest discriminatory act against an individual because it is assumed that they belong to the same ethnic or religious group as that of the extremists.

People now feel justified when they reject a person's job application or fire a person because of their ethnicity or religion.

A friend of mine graduated from college a couple of years ago. During her last semester she went to scores of job interviews. She told me a story once of how she went to an interview and was told she would have been hired — if it had been a different time.

What different time? I thought that when a place says it is hiring, you print out a resume, go for an interview and get the job if you are qualified. What does getting jobs have to do with the times?

According to the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, "Employers may not treat employees or applicants less — or more — favorably because of their religious beliefs or practices."

In more plain English: An employer cannot refuse a employee because of a name, headscarf or turban.

I thought that when a place says it is hiring, you print out a resume, go for an interview and get the job if you are qualified.

few weeks ago Laila got a call from a firm that received her resume; they liked what they read and asked her to come for an interview.

Here is her description of the interview: "The interviewer walked in after me and saw me and then made me wait, during which time I could hear a heated argument in another room. Five minutes later I was shown into the same person's office. He had his back [toward me]. ... Then he finally turned around and said, 'This is going to be a short interview because we are looking for someone with the right fit.' The interview was supposed to start at noon, and including the five-minute wait, I was down the elevator at 12:11 p.m."

Let's examine this. Laila was invited based on her resume, so she must have been qualified in some way. The interviewer was shocked when he saw her. Why was he shocked? Did I forget to mention that Laila wears a headscarf?

When I asked her how she felt about the incident, she said, "Embarrassed."

It is embarrassing that human beings don't know how to be nice to one another; prejudice and ignorance always seems to prevail in our society.

It's important to remember that the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks were a hate crime ignited by hatred and ignorance. Let us learn from this crucial lesson.

Dealing with a different kind of hunger

Binge eating, often associated with anorexia and bulimia, is a way to handle emotional trauma

By Beth Aaron/
The University Daily

(Editor's note: the name of the woman who recovered from anorexia has been changed to Tina.)

Forget the occasional brownie pig-out or that handful of Hershey's Kisses. Everyone indulges sometimes. However, compulsive eating or uncontrolled eating, is sometimes kept secret.

Oprah Winfrey has admittedly overeaten for emotional reasons, leading to her fluctuating weight during her years in the television spotlight.

According to the National Eating Disorders Web site, symptoms of binge eating are: eating when not physically hungry, feeling unable to stop eating voluntarily and awareness that eating patterns are abnormal.

Marilyn Massey-Stokes, Texas Tech associate professor of health, exercise and sport sciences, said binge eating falls under a non-specific category of eating disorders. The disorder, like any other mental illness has a distinct diagnosis.

Massey-Stokes said she believes some people may be borderline between unhealthy eating habits or uncontrollable food thoughts and an eating disorder, whether it is binge eating or more well known disorders such as anorexia nervosa and bulimia nervosa.

Kitty Harris, associate professor of human development and family studies, runs the Center for the Study of Addiction at Texas Tech. She said the lines between anorexia, bulimia and compulsive eating are blurred.

"What you really find with eating disorders," she said, "is they evolve and overlap."

Harris said people with anorexia can exhibit bulimic traits, and those with bulimia can exhibit compulsive eating behaviors.

"It's like someone's put you in a hamster wheel," she said.

Compulsive eaters find their habits interfere with social relationships as well as professional ventures. Feelings of failure further fuel the habit.

Ann Thompson, a nutritional consultant, said the same feelings of guilt associated with anorexia and bulimia nervosa follow binge-eating patterns. Rather than purging out of guilt, she said, they continue to eat emotionally.

"Instead of nourishment for the body," she said, "it's to satisfy a feeling."

People who binge usually have a weight problem, Thompson said, but not everyone with a weight problem is a binge eater. The difference between an eating disorder and problems controlling food intake is in thought processes, she said.

According to an eating disorder information packet Thompson presents to friends and families of those suffering from eating disorders, up to 40 percent of people who are obese may be binge eaters.

Depression and suicidal thoughts plague compulsive eaters and medical effects of bingeing are the same as they would be for anyone with an unhealthy diet, Thompson said.

Overeating contributes to cancer, heart disease and diabetes, the three leading causes of death in the United States. It can also lead to gallbladder disease and secondary diabetes.

Tina, a junior English major from Clyde, is a recovered anorexic bulimic. She said she spent two years in an eating disorder treatment center, which helped people with all kinds of eating disorders.

Before she entered her final years of treatment, Tina said her treatment options were limited to Overeaters Anonymous. In her observation, she said most of whom she encountered with compulsive eating disorder were middle-aged women.

Eating disorders are considered to be addictions, as are cigarette smoking and drug and alcohol use. Tina said eating disorders are difficult to correct because people can't live without food.

"With an alcoholic, it's so cut and dried," she said. "You just don't drink. With food, you can't just not eat — food is everywhere."

Senate to address instructors' attendance policies

By Andrew Bell/
The University Daily

At 8 a.m. Texas Tech can resemble a ghost town. Only the few and the proud are awake and ready to learn, while others are still asleep. Despite having a more than sufficient grade in a course, a student could still fail a course due to 8 a.m. absences.

To alleviate the problem, the Student Government Association's Student Senate will discuss revising the attendance policy of the university at its meeting 7 p.m. Thursday at the Lankford Lab of the Electrical Engineering building.

The resolution proposes each instructor's syllabus should clearly state the attendance policy for the course. If a student is absent often enough to affect the student's standing in the course, the instructor would have the responsibility to report the absences to the student's dean, according to the resolution.

According to the proposal, it is not the right of an instructor to negatively alter the grade of a student based on attendance. Instead, an academic dean would have the option to drop a student from a course or suspend the student from Tech if excessive absences result in a failing grade.

Craig Campbell, a senator for the College of Agricultural Sciences and Natural Resources and author of the resolution, said the legislation is not a means for students to treat the attendance policy as a free-for-all.

Instead, Campbell's motivation to write the resolution was for the small percentage of Tech students who do not necessarily learn through classroom methods. These students are able to make good grades in their courses, but their grades can suffer because they do not go to all of the classes, Campbell said.

"A grade is earned," he said. "There are other ways to punish students who don't go to class."

By giving the responsibility of punishment to a student's dean, Campbell said the process could become more objective, while keeping sufficient means of punishment.

As much as absences are important to a Tech student, funding is just as important to student organizations.

The Student Senate will continue its effort to give student organizations the necessary funding for the next fiscal year. Currently, 140 organizations are included on the bill to receive funds beginning Sept. 1, to August 31, 2005, according to the bill.

Although many student organizations have been placed on the bill for funding, Heather Smith said it is not too late for any organization to try to get funding for the next fiscal year.

The senator for the College of Agricultural Sciences and Natural Resources said any student organization could contact a senator through the SGA Web site, www.depts.ttu.edu/sga or through the SGA office located on the third floor of Student Union Building.

At the meeting, Student Senate President Jacque Steinmetz will open the floor to discussion on the bill. If an organization approaches a senator to make an amendment to the bill on behalf of the organization, the senator could do so during the discussion.

However, organizations cannot present their arguments themselves. Regardless, the rest of the process is simple from this point, Smith said.

"Once an amendment goes in, it goes into discussion," she said. "Then we decide whether it goes in."

The student organizations that receive funds from the SGA might have to work harder in the next year to hold on to the money. Recently, the SGA passed a resolution requiring every student organization to attend Student Organization Advisory Congress meetings.

SOAC acts as a medium between the SGA and organizations to discuss events and information. In the last resolution concerning SOAC, senators could not agree upon who would punish the organization for neglect of duty, Senator-At-Large Chris Carr said. The resolution, to be discussed at the meeting, would give authority to the SGA Supreme Court.

"We were going to set up a committee," he said. "But this is the perfect opportunity for the Supreme Court to exercise their powers."

Given the opportunity, the SGA Supreme Court would meet and decide if an organization's absences are grounds for punishment. Such punishments would include suspension of funding or exclusion from SGA activities, Carr said.

While resolutions make their way into the session, one senator may be on his way out of the Student Senate. The Senate will discuss Thursday whether to impeach Nicholas Genzer.

A romance fit for a 'Prince'

Actors Julia Stiles and Luke Mably talk about acting, royalty and Shakespeare

By James Eppler/The University Daily

Julia Stiles and Luke Mably may be a bit younger than Deborah Kerr and Yul Brynner ("The King and I"), but the story of a woman falling in love with a man of royalty knows no age boundaries.

In "The Prince & Me," opening April 2, Stiles plays Paige, a college student who falls in love with the new guy in town. Little does she know that Eddie (Mably) is the prince of Denmark.

Stiles, who spoke on the phone from London where she is rehearsing for an upcoming play, said she has one more year left at Columbia University to earn a degree in English. She is balancing school and her acting career, and said she has a certain benefit most students do not.

"I'm lucky that I don't have to be searching for what I want to do after school," Stiles said. "It's something that I can do for my own enjoyment."

British actor Luke Mably studied drama at the Birmingham School of Speech and Drama in the United Kingdom. He has appeared in small roles in "28 Days Later" and the TV miniseries "Uprising," but is making "Prince" his first leading role in a film. He said, however, that he handles drama and comedy with the same method of acting.

"I try not to distinguish between the two of them," Mably said. "I approach them the same way, but I still had a lot of challenges."

One of those challenges, Mably said, was finding similarities between himself and his character, Eddie, in "Prince."

"I kept asking myself, 'Who is he?'" Mably said. "I love to do that. That's my ambition. That's when acting becomes special. A lot of my favorite actors do that. It's kind of boring just being yourself, isn't it?"

To get a better feel of what it means to be royalty, Mably said he and a friend from the movie went out on the town and told people he actually was a prince.

"You really get an idea of what it's like to be a prince," Mably said. "I was demanding tea and cake, waitresses were coming up to me and bowing and curtsying, the cab driver thought he should pay me."

Stiles said she had no trouble finding similarities between herself and Paige, but found the challenge in dealing with some of the tough things that they had in common.

"I discovered a lot about myself while we were making the movie," Stiles said. "So in that sense, I related to the character. But it was a stretch for me to come to terms with certain aspects that were similar between my character and I.

"It's very easy for me, Julia, to be guarded and not address certain things that Paige was not addressing, and then I have to sort of confront them myself. So it was kind of a personal stretch."

Stiles said she constantly looks for ways to improve her acting abilities and stretch herself as an actress, but it is easy to become labeled in Hollywood.

"I see a lot of my roles as different," she said. "I think it's very easy to be pigeon-holed. All I can do is keep making choices based on what will affect me about going to work every day."

Mably expressed praise for his leading lady and their work together. "Julia is amazing," Mably said. "She's committed to her work; she's a co-laborator."

Stiles said it is important for a screen couple to be comfortable and trusting of one another.

"You develop a familiarity and a sort of trust with the other person that you're working with so you feel comfortable acting with them," she said. "I like to bond with the person I'm acting with so we can feel like we trust each other. I felt that Luke and I did that."

One thing the two actors had in common is both have experience with Shakespearean work: Stiles played Ophelia in 2000's "Hamlet" with Ethan Hawke, as well as modern adaptations of Shakespearean plays ("Ten Things I Hate About You," "O"). Mably performed in a stage production of "As You Like It," in which he played Orlando.

"The Prince & Me" contains elements of, and references to Shakespeare, which Stiles said is understandable due to the wide influence of his work.

"I respect his work a lot," Stiles said. "It's a challenge as an actor. A lot of the plots of his plays get repeated for a reason — he hit upon something with his romances, with his tragedies, with his comedies — it's sort of timeless."

The timelessness of the story of royalty falling in love with a commoner is also evident in that many films have explored it. But Stiles and Mably both contend that this new film is special.

"The circumstances are interesting, but underneath that it's just a love story about two people who bond completely over reasons other than their circumstances," Stiles said.

Mably said the film is above the typical teen romance movie.

"It's not some teenage bubble-gum film," Mably said. "I think it's much more than that. A 40-year-old man that had seen the film told me it made him cry. It's an old-fashioned love story. It's got that feel to it."

Recording Industry sues 532 for allegedly swapping music online

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The recording industry has sued 532 people, including many using computer networks at 21 universities, claiming they illegally shared digital music files over the Internet.

The latest wave of copyright lawsuits brought by the Recording Industry Association of America marks the first time the trade group has targeted computer users swapping music files over university networks.

The RIAA filed the "John Doe" complaints Tuesday against 89 individuals using networks at universities in 10 states. Lawsuits were also filed against 443 people using commercial Internet access providers in five states.

The recording group did not name which Internet access providers the defendants were using.

With the "John Doe" lawsuits, the recording industry must work through the courts to find out the identities of the defendants, which at the outset are identified only by the numeric Internet protocol addresses assigned to computers online.

The defendants, which the trade group claims offered "substantial amounts" of music files, face potential civil penalties or settlements that could cost them thousands of dollars. Settlements in previous cases have averaged $3,000 each.

"We are sending a clear message that downloading or 'sharing' music from a peer-to-peer network without authorization is illegal, it can have consequences and it undermines the creative future of music itself," RIAA president Cary Sherman said.

Including Tuesday's filings, the recording industry has sued 1,977 people since launching its legal assault against online music piracy last fall, and has reached out-of-court settlements in around 400 of the cases.

Queen of Soul released from hospital Wed.

DETROIT (AP) — Aretha Franklin was released from the hospital Wednesday after being treated for an allergic reaction to antibiotics.

Franklin was admitted to Sinai-Grace Hospital Saturday after she coughed up some blood while on her tour bus, which was returning to the Detroit area from Chicago, her doctor, Claud Young, told WDIV-TV.

Young said it appears Franklin had an allergic reaction to penicillin she took while on the road. He said the singer was put on medication that brought her platelet level back to normal. Young has said Franklin's illness appears to be an isolated event.

Franklin smiled, waved and gave a thumbs-up to fans who gathered at the hospital when she was released.

"Love you back," she told well-wishers before getting into her limousine.

Franklin, whose soulful voice has made her one of the world's most revered singers, is best known for her signature song "Respect," though she's had countless other hits including "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman," "Chain of Fools" and "Freeway of Love."

RISKS that come with CREDIT CARDS

Students encouraged to open credit card account but should take caution when spending.

By Megan LaVoie/The University Daily

Spring Break in Cancun — $1,000. A night at the bar — $50. New bathing suit — $45. Credit card bill to pay for it all — Priceless. There are some things money can't buy, and more students are realizing they are getting more than they bargained for by using the little piece of plastic.

Ryan Halley, a graduate assistant for the Red to Black program at Texas Tech, said he doesn't discourage students from opening a credit card account.

"There are a lot of advantages to using a credit card, if it is used responsibly," he said.

The Red to Black program is a free and confidential counseling program designed to help students budget their finances and manage their debt.

Kim Maddock, a personal banker with Wells Fargo, said it is a good idea for students to have a credit card so they can build credit.

"Some students go out into the real world after college and they don't have any credit," she said. "If they don't start building their credit in college, it will be difficult for them to get approved for future credit cards and loans."

Credit cards are not all fun and games; there is a dark side to plastic.

Vickie Hampton, an associate professor with the personal financial planning department, said students need to use credit cards for the right reasons or they could end up down a long road of debt.

"Students who are using their credit cards to buy beer could be trading those beers for a house some day," she said.

Credit card purchases remain on a person's file for seven years. Experts claim if someone accumulates bad credit, it will take nearly 10 years for the credit to be erased, making any purchases within those years difficult.

Often short on cash, students are turning to credit cards to meet their financial needs.

Maddock said many people forget a credit card isn't "free money," and they eventually have to pay it back.

The popular trend being used by credit card companies is to offer a low minimum balance payment each month in conjunction with a high interest rate.

Halley said the combination of the two can be a recipe for disaster.

"Some credit card companies offer a minimum payment of 1 percent or 2 percent of the balance, which means on a $2,000 purchase they might only have to pay $2 a month," he said. "At that rate, someone could be paying for one purchase for 20 years."

Jaelyn Vasquez, a manager at Wells Fargo, said she recommends students put small purchases on their credit cards.

"Students should put small purchases like gas on their credit cards and pay it off in full each month," she said. "If they pay their bill in full each month they don't have to worry about interest rates and they can show responsibility and establish good credit."

While many companies offer special deals for students opening their first accounts, Maddock said students have to use common sense when choosing a credit card.

Halley agreed.

"I would be wary of any company that contacted me," he said. "Any legit credit card company is not going to call you and ask for your information over the phone."

Vasquez students should look for certain qualities when opening an account.

If there is an enrollment fee that is not good, she said.

"No company should charge you to become a customer," she said.

Be wary of an annual fee, rewards and automatic payments, Maddock said.

"Students need to read the fine print to make sure they know what they are getting themselves into," she said.

On average, a student can open a credit card with a 10 percent to 15 percent interest rate. Vasquez said students should look for this rate.

"A student's best bet is to go to their financial institution and open a credit card," she said.

Identity theft and credit card fraud are quickly becoming a norm in today's world.

Vasquez said students should never give out their personal information over the phone and should research any applications that come in the mail to make sure they are legitimate.

What to look for

- No enrollment fee
- No annual fee
- 10 to 15 percent interest rate
- Do not give personal information over phone
- Grace period of 25 days

Jackson's children's foundation defunct

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michael Jackson's Heal the World Foundation once spread millions of dollars around the globe to help children threatened by war and disease.

Fueling its success was the kind of money and excitement that only someone of Jackson's star power could generate.

With backing from the likes of PepsiCo and New Age guru Deepak Chopra, Jackson launched the charity at New York's Radio City Music Hall in 1992, complete with a boys choir singing his hit single and the group's namesake, "Heal the World."

Now, like its founder, the charity is in trouble. Starved of funding and leadership, the organization has stopped donating to charitable causes and has been suspended in California since 2002 for failing to file yearly accounting statements, records show.

Other Jackson charities have withered as well, in a decline that began well before the latest child-molestation scandal broke.

His Heal L.A. project, established to help aid inner-city children after the Los Angeles riots, has been suspended in California since 2001, and his Neverland Zoo Foundation to preserve endangered animals was dissolved in 1998.

The collapse of the celebrated Heal the World Foundation could further tarnish Jackson's reputation as a children's advocate at a time when he is facing allegations he molested a boy. Jackson, 45, is awaiting trial, and a grand jury is convening this week to investigate.

The reasons for Heal the World's decline largely remain a mystery. But Stuart Backerman, a former spokesman for Jackson, said its work began tapering off because there wasn't an "inspirational force" or chief executive to carry out its mission.

"So it just kind of went into suspended animation," Backerman said.

Jackson spokeswoman Raymone K. Bain did not respond to requests for comment.

Heal the World seemed destined to succeed when Jackson founded it.

With his career soaring thanks to a new album, "Dangerous," and a lucrative Pepsi endorsement deal, the singer planned a world tour to help raise $100 million for his new children's charity and "spread the message of global love."

The organization built playgrounds, provided immunizations and funded scores of children's causes around the world. It helped pay for a Hungarian boy's lifesaving liver transplant and co-sponsored an airlift of more than 46 tons of relief supplies to war-torn Bosnia-Herzegovina in 1992.

Although it never reached the pop star's lofty $100 million goal, the foundation doled out about $4 million in its first five years, said Richard Fowler, director from 1995 to 1997.

In late 2002, it had net assets of just $3,542 and reported $2,585 in expenses, mostly for "management fees," according to the latest available tax filings.

Gene separating man from ape possibly found

(AP) — Touching off a scientific furor, researchers say they may have discovered the mutation that caused the earliest humans to branch off from their apelike ancestors — a gene that led to smaller, weaker jaws and, ultimately, bigger brains.

Smaller jaws would have fundamentally changed the structure of the skull, they contend, by eliminating thick muscles that worked like bungee cords to anchor a huge jaw to the crown of the head. The change would have allowed the cranium to grow larger and led to the development of a bigger brain capable of tool-making and language.

The mutation is reported in the latest issue of the journal Nature, not by anthropologists, but by a team of biologists and plastic surgeons at the University of Pennsylvania and the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

The report provoked strong reactions throughout the hotly contested field of human origins with one scientist declaring it "counter to the fundamentals of evolution" and another pronouncing it "super."

The Pennsylvania researchers said their estimate of when this mutation first occurred — about 2.4 million years ago, in the grasslands of East Africa, the cradle of humanity — generally overlaps with the first fossils of prehistoric humans featuring rounder skulls, flatter faces, smaller teeth and weaker jaws.

And the remarkable genetic mutation persists to this day in every person, they said.

Nonhuman primates — including our closest animal relative, the chimpanzee — still carry the original big-jaw gene and the apparatus enabling them to bite and grind the toughest foods.

Raiders excited about starting workouts

By David Wiechmann/
The University Daily

The 2004 football season is one step closer as the Red Raiders opened official spring workouts Wednesday afternoon. It was a day to shake the cobwebs loose and move on from 2003 and begin the journey toward a Big 12 Conference Championship.

"This is not the most exciting thing we do all year, but it gives the young guys a chance to get a grip for our offense," said offensive lineman E.J. Whitley. "The first practice helps us get our minds back in the game. It helps us get back into the swing of things so the first time we put pads on we're not wide-eyed."

Introducing new players to head coach Mike Leach's complicated spread offense could be difficult, and Whitley said it did not come without a few bumps on opening day.

"We had a rude awakening for a few guys; they didn't realize how fast the speed really was," he said. "But I felt they adapted really well as practice went on."

Early signs of improvement are what the Raiders would like to see, and the defense has been improving since the end of the 2003 campaign.

Middle linebacker Mike Smith said fans can expect big things from Texas Tech this year, similar to the Houston Bowl.

"I think our defense has carried over from the bowl game," he said. "We had a great day today; we've got some new stuff coming into our system. We looked real good out there, and we have a lot of guys that are willing to get better."

Some of the improvements on defense have come from hard work in the weight room and finding out what went wrong last year. The team has already analyzed every game from 2003 to make adjustments for the upcoming year.

"It involves knowing the game," Smith said of improving. "We've broken down every game from last year. Ninety percent of last year if they beat us it was a busted package. We just gotta break those down."

The offense can also see the improvements the Swarm D has made.

"The thing I think everyone needs to watch out for is our defense," Whitley said. "They've improved so much and worked so hard in the offseason. Our offense, we're gonna come through and throw the ball like we always do."

This is the last year Smith will wear the Red and Black, and he said he is looking forward to the year. He is glad to have kicked it off on a good note with a solid first practice, but most importantly he said he will make the most of every one of his last days as a Red Raider.

"This is my senior year so every day is a big day for me, every day counts," he said. "This is my last go-round, so it counts for me, and I enjoy coming out here. It's the only thing I look forward to doing."

Starting the first day of the 2004 season means there is no more 2003, and Whitley is excited about that. He is glad to be back on the field where every one is equal until opening kickoff.

"There's a couple games we should have won last year, but that's in the past," he said. "Everything's brand new to us. Everyone's starting the season off 0-0. I'm excited to finally get that season behind me."

FRESHMAN RUNNINGBACK KELLY Hildebrandt catches a pass during the Raiders first official spring practice Wednesday afternoon. Spring workouts will close with the annual Red-Black Game in Jones SBC Stadium on April 17.

Seven female crew members sue Baylor

By Lindsey Gomez/
The Lariat (Baylor University)

(U-WIRE) WACO — Seven female members of the Baylor Crew team are not seeking damages, but have filed a lawsuit against Baylor alleging Title IX violations.

Robbin McNeal, a Colorado

Springs, Colo., senior and crew member, said the team is doing well and deserves to be elevated to varsity status.

"We just feel that we work just as hard as any other group of people; so that's why we decided to file it," McNeal said.

According to an article by The Associated Press, the students argue Baylor's failure to consider crew as a varsity sport defies Title IX.

The women's complaints include no scholarships, an unpaid coach, no university-provided uniforms and an inadequate amount of oars and boats.

"Female students have historically been, and continue to be, underrepresented in Baylor University's intercollegiate athletic programs," attorneys Samuel J. Schiller and Ray Yasser said in the petition filed Monday in U.S. District Court in Waco, according to the AP article.

Charles Beckenhauer, Baylor's associate general counsel, said in a press release the university has emphasized Title IX compliance in both the past and present.

"Even before the filing of this lawsuit, Baylor has been conscious of its obligations under Title IX and has been striving to maintain compliance," Beckenhauer said in the press release.

The athletic department is establishing a five-year plan, a portion of which will concern Title IX fulfillment.

"This plan, which we expect to be completed this summer, will include a gender equity plan detailing Baylor University's commitment to maintaining compliance with Title IX," Ian McCaw, Baylor athletic director, said in the press release.

"It is premature to speculate regarding the addition of the varsity programming until such time as this plan has been fully developed and approved," he said.

Nick Seeman, a Dallas junior and coach of the men and women's crew team, said crew has approximately 70 members and about 30 are women. The students compete against other teams, some of which are varsity-level.

Title IX, a federal law passed in 1972, says that women as a whole are to have opportunities equal to those of men in regards to financial assistance, scholarships and other benefits.

"No person in the U.S. shall, on the basis of sex be excluded from participation in, or denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any educational program or activity receiving federal aid," the law reads.

"We just want to be treated equally," McNeal said.

Surprising Santa Barbara faces challenge in Sweet 16

(AP) — Most of the old, familiar teams made it to the final 16 in the NCAA women's tournament.

Two-time defending champion Connecticut is back in the regional semifinals. Duke and Tennessee, too. So are Texas, Penn State, Purdue and UC Santa Barbara.

Wait. UC Who? Every tournament can use a surprise team to spice things up, and 11th-seeded UC Santa Barbara is filling that role. The Gauchos have reached the regional semifinals for the first time and are the lowest seeded team still playing.

They did it by knocking off No. 6 Colorado and No. 3 Houston in the friendly confines of the Thunderdome on the Santa Barbara campus. All they have to do to keep advancing in the East Regional is beat UConn. At the Hartford Civic Center, the Huskies' second home. In front of 16,000 fans who bleed UConn blue.

"We've talked a lot about the mountains we wanted to climb this year and getting through this one was one of the mountains," UCSB coach Mark French said. "Now we've got another one looming in front of us in Connecticut that we're eager to climb."

The East and West semifinals are Saturday, while the Midwest and Midwest start Sunday.

All the No. 1 seeds are still in contention: Tennessee, Penn State, Texas and Duke. UConn, Purdue and Vanderbilt advanced as No. 2 seeds.

"A lot of the uncertainty has gone out of it, hasn't it?" said Georgia coach Andy Landers.

Women's tennis comfortable on road

By Joey Kirk/The University Daily

She may be from Oklahoma, but Cari Groce said all of her family and her fans are now in Texas.

The Texas Tech women's tennis players get the chance to visit their coach's hometown as they face two opponents from the neighboring state, but all the support they need will be sitting next to them in the van.

"There are 10 of us traveling, and we make a good enough crowd on our own," Groce said.

In tennis, Groce said players get used to traveling, and they are used to having less support than they would at home. Tech has learned that aspect of the game after taking eight different road trips this semester to its five home matches.

"Most of the time, you travel the world alone if you're in tennis," she said. "It's the nature of the sport. We've learned to block out that issue and other variables."

The Raiders will face Oral Roberts in Tulsa, Okla., at 10 a.m. Friday and Tulsa at noon Saturday.

Groce said heading north across that border is surely fun, but the old saying, "Home is where the heart is," still stands.

"It's always good to go back home, but my family is here, and the team is all we need to do well," she said.

And keeping up with the competition will help them accomplish the goal. Tulsa is currently ranked among the top 50 teams in the nation, Groce said, and it will give the Raiders a good chance to move up in the rankings if they leave with a win.

"Tulsa will be a good test for us," she said. "We have to take advantage, don't back off and go after the ones left, which are ranked opponents."

After losing to one of those ranked opponents, No. 41 Baylor, Sunday, 5-2, senior Kendall Brooks said Tech (8-4, 2-3 Big 12) will have to play the ball, not the person across the net.

"We saw Tulsa in the fall, and they are good," she said. "But we're gonna go out there and play the ball, not necessarily the opponent."

The loss to Baylor gave Tech an opportunity to observe the way the Raiders play, Brooks said, and she is pleased with the performance of the team.

"We've played some tough matches, and we should be happy where we are at right now," she said. "There's always room for improvement, and that's important."

Another important aspect sophomore Tara Browning is looking at is the fact that the team is still dedicated.

"As you see, we're getting up here earlier now. We're taking the court, competing," she said. "If we weren't doing that and staying committed, we wouldn't be out here every day."

Every day during practice, Tech tries to practice for perfection, and Browning said the Raiders have to keep it up, and it will determine where they stand.

"We had two days off, and no week-long spring break. We've been doing good workouts, and we try to improve on our mistakes so we get better," she said.

Right now, Browning said she is stuck between a rock and a hard place. She does not know which way to go.

"I'm happy where we're at, but I know we can get to other places too," she said. "We can do that this weekend against ORU and Tulsa, but we can't give anything less than the best."

JAIME TOMÁS AGUILAR/The University Daily

HYRISTIANA GOCHEVA SLAMS a two-handed backhand during Tech's match against Baylor at the McLeod Tennis Center on Sunday. Tech lost the match 5-2. The Raiders face Oral Roberts and Tulsa in Tulsa, Okla., this weekend.

Cowboys team to watch in tournament for many reasons

Now that the Texas Tech men's basketball team has been ousted from the NCAA Tournament by St. Joseph's, I have another team the Red Raider faithful can root for in the tourney.

I was fortunate enough to attend the Big 12 Tournament two weeks ago in Dallas and sampled all the Big 12 teams, and their fans with hopes of writing a glorious column about my experiences in a "best of" column from Big 12 schools when I returned.

But what I forgot was that when I returned I would be on my second consecutive spring break and by the time we printed again it wouldn't be too timely. So now instead, I will tell my faithful legion of fans who to pull for in the upcoming weeks of March Madness.

Tech fans should now pull for the Oklahoma State Cowboys, why you ask? Because the Pokes are good — at everything.

Now, without further ado, my ob-

Adam Boedecker

Tech fans should pull for the Oklahoma State Cowboys, why you ask? Because the Pokes are good — at everything.

servations from the Big 12 Tournament.

Best Player — Tony Allen may have gotten MVP of the tourney but I didn't vote for him. John Lucas is the man. Allen makes a lot of bonehead mistakes as I witnessed, and coach Eddie Sutton is on him all the time. Allen deserves most of the yelling from Sutton. He tries to be flashy too often and a lot of the times it will result in a traveling violation, or a bad pass. He's good, don't get me wrong, but Lucas drives that team.

Best Fans — This isn't even a question, and if you were there or even watched on TV you should know who it goes to. That's right, OSU. I was very impressed with their fans, especially in the championship game. Texas has to have two or three times as many fans, but OSU still outnumbered them 60- (to 40-) percent. They are loud too. I'd love to go to Gallagher-Iba Arena.

Best Band — You guessed it, OSU. I sat right next to the group both games and the band was hilarious. I love their fight song, it's still stuck in my head.

Hottest Pom Squad — Two words, "Goodness Gracious!" OSU's girls were all drop dead gorgeous and I had a front row seat. As Christopher Walken in his world-famous "Continental" skit on Saturday Night Live would say "WOWIE, WOW, WOW!"

With all of this being said, I still wouldn't trade Tech for anything in the Big 12, but if I did have a choice of another school to go to in the conference it would be in Stillwater. And the sole reason would be to attend basketball games in Gallagher-Iba.

So everyone pull for the Big 12. Kansas, Texas and OSU are all possible Final Four teams, which would be great for the conference. Pull for OSU to beat Kansas and then Texas in the championship game, and the Big 12 will prove its superiority to the college sports' world.

Texas A&M hires new basketball coach

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Staring into the abyss that is Texas A&M basketball, Billy Gillispie admits it's a familiar feeling.

"I'm a guy who 16 months ago took a job at Texas-El Paso and an impossible situation. We turned the impossible into a storybook season," Gillispie said Wednesday after accepting the A&M job.

"This is not an impossible situation," he said. "This is an unbelievable opportunity."

Gillispie, who took Texas-El Paso from 24 losses to 24 wins and nearly upset Maryland in the NCAA tournament, agreed to a six-year contract that guarantees him $585,000 annually. He could earn as much as $880,000 with incentives. He made $145,000 a year at UTEP.

Gillispie would be worth every penny to the Aggies if he can reverse their fortunes.

"We are going to build champions," athletic director Bill Byrne said.

Raiders take clean shaven coach to Baylor

By Joey Kirk/The University Daily

Baylor is looking for a win against Texas Tech on Saturday and then it will continue on its way to the NCAA tournament. But Michael Innerebner said he is not frightened by the Bears' stigma.

Baylor's men's tennis team may be ranked No. 2 in the nation, but Innerebner said it gives the Raiders a better reason to try.

"I'm never scared," Innerebner said. "We're entering conference and we will give it our best, and what happens, happens."

That is the mentality Tech has carried throughout the season, and in nine matches, it has enabled them to win. Now, conference play begins against the top-ranked team in the Big 12, and six other ranked teams stand in Tech's path.

Innerebner said there are two things the Raiders have learned to do, be prepared and not be intimidated.

"If you're scared, you'll do poorly," he said. "You just have to get everything ready, and you have to want to win. That's what we did this weekend."

After losing to No. 63 Louisiana-Lafayette, 4-3, Friday, the Raiders came back to win another close match against No. 68 New Mexico, 4-3, Sunday. Even though Tech won, head coach Tim Siegel will lose.

"I won't look too good without hair," he said.

Prior to the match, Siegel made a bet with his players, if they won, his hair would come off, and if not, he would get to keep it.

"When we came back to win against Arkansas-Little Rock, I said I would do it," Siegel said. "I didn't go all the way. I guess I have to now."

During practice Wednesday, Siegel still had his locks, but junior Jakob Paulsen said hopefully Waco will get to see a new side of his coach when Tech travels to face the Bears.

"I hadn't seen it yet. I don't know if he will do it, but he better," he said.

Baylor will also get a chance to see a new level of competition from Paulsen, being the No. 50 player in the nation. Knowing he recently broke higher into the rankings, he said he is ready for anything throwing his way.

"I have nothing to lose," he said. "It's my highest ranking so far, so it does give me a boost."

That lift will play a big part in the match against Baylor, Paulsen said, and against the rest of Tech's schedule.

"We started out playing the weaker teams," he said. "In the end, the only ones left are the strong ones. I can't wait to play."

Out of the 15 matches the Raiders have played, 13 of the teams have been ranked. Siegel said it allows Tech to prepare for tougher competition, which will begin soon.

"We're ready for the Big 12, I believe," he said. "Baylor is one of the teams favored to win the NCAA tournament, but they can't get ahead of themselves."

Siegel said it might be the Bears goal to win it all, but Tech will give them a tough time, no matter what the circumstances are.

"We're gonna play like we have been, and the results show for themselves," he said. "It will be a tough match, but we won't back down from the challenge."

RYAN VOGL HITS the ball during practice at the McLeod Tennis Center. Tech upset the No. 68 Lobos 4-3 on Saturday, and head coach Tim Siegel said he would shave his head if his team pulled out the win. The Raiders will now travel to face No. 2 Baylor on Saturday.
