UPT: 43 earn their wings, get world-wide slots

Forty members of the United States Air Force and three Italian officers will receive pilot wings this morning during the graduation ceremony for Undergraduate Pilot Training Class 83-07.

Lt. Gen. George M. Browning Jr., comptroller of the Air Force, will be the guest speaker at the graduation. Following the general's address, class award winners will be named and the new pilots will receive their wings and aeronautical certificates.

Today's activities mark the completion of a full year of pilot training which included 175 hours of flight training in the T-37 and T-38 aircraft and many hours of simulator and academic training.

The class is made up of six captains, a first lieutenant and 36 second lieutenants. Included among the second lieutenants are the three members of the Italian Air Force.

Twelve members of the class will remain at Reese to become instructor pilots in the T-37 and T-38. Strategic Air Command assignments are ahead for three other new pilots.

The Military Airlift Command will receive 15 new pilots for its transport aircraft and eight members of the class will head for the Tactical Air Command for assignments in fighter and support aircraft.

Four of the new pilots will be heading overseas and two graduates will be returning to National Guard positions in their home states.

Wave the flag!

Four flags are left at the $10.95 sale price at the Reese main exchange. The exchange flag sale ends Saturday; after this weekend the flags will be sold at $14.95 each.

Flags are three by five feet. The Reese Noncommissioned Officers Academy Graduate Association has volunteered to affix flag holders to Reese Village homes for people who buy the flags.

Get your flag and fly it proudly; demonstrate your patriotism. Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Philip E. Grimmert reminded everyone two weeks ago: Patriotism is never outdated or corny.

Remember, if you need help installing the flag holder device contact Bonnie Betz at Ext. 3147, Nancy James at Ext. 3163, or Phil Reynoso at Ext. 3360.

GEN. ANDREW P. IOSUE, commander, Air Training Command, will visit Reese Tuesday for an orientation visit. The general is no stranger to Reese, having won his pilots wings here in 1954. General IOSUE assumed command of ATC June 23.

Fuels Branch in running for institute's trophy

The 64th Supply Squadron's Fuels Management Branch has been nominated for the American Petroleum Institute trophy competition.

The API trophy is awarded annually to the best operated fuels management system in the Air Force. The Reese branch has been a contender for the trophy each year since 1976.

The Reese fuels branch will compete within Air Training Command against fuels' branches from Mather AFB, Calif., and Laughlin AFB, Texas, rounding out the top three ATC branches.

From three per command, the number of branches in competition will drop to one per command as each of the command's fuels nominees hope for Air Force-level victory.

During their years of contention, the Reese fuels management branch has represented ATC in the Air Force-wide competition (1977) and been the first runner-up twice (1981 and 1982).

The April 1983 visit by the ATC Management Effectiveness Inspection team left the fuels branch with yet another plus — their fourth consecutive "excellent" rating by an inspection team.

How did the Reese fuels branch earn the distinction as one of the best in ATC? Simple: The fuels staff receives and issues more than 100,000 gallons of jet fuel daily. That makes it easy to understand how they service an average of more than 300 aircraft per day.

The base fuels management team has its work cut out; the competition for the 1983 contest is with old fuels rivals Laughlin, the 1981 ATC winner, and Mather, the 1982 ATC winner. Reese proved they could win in 1977 and according to the fuels staff 1983 could be their chance to do it again.

'It's great to be home again'

by Gen. Andrew P. Iosue
Commander, Air Training Command

(ATCNS) — It's great to be home again in Air Training Command. I have found memories of my assignments as commander of Recruiting Service and the Air Force Military Training Center. They resulted in countless friendships that I look forward to renewing during the months and years ahead.

I've kept close touch with the command during my past four years in the Pentagon as Air Force deputy chief of staff for Manpower and Personnel. After all, training and personnel are inseparable functions.

That's how I know ATC is in great shape. This command's strength is in our people — the officers, enlisted personnel, civilian employees and all their families. Our reserve forces are also part of that team, as are retirees and people in civilian communities who support us.

Strong Foundations

So, from a people perspective, the ATC family is exceptionally healthy. I want you to know that and be proud of your performance and accomplishments. We have a strong foundation upon which we can build for the future.

Realistically, we must admit that the future contains both threats and challenges. But there's nothing we can't handle if we all work together. That's the driving force behind this article and the future "Command Issues" articles I plan to write from time to time for your base newspapers. I want to keep you informed about issues and current concerns so we can work to solve them as a team.

One of my concerns I believe many of you share (and all of us should share) is the trend toward viewing military service as just another job. It's not! It's a calling that's vital to the safety and well being of our nation.

Back to Basics

Let's turn that misperception around. Let's focus on concepts that characterize military life and get "back to basics."

I believe the most basic of these "basics" is simple, unadorned patriotism. Some of us may have come to the belief that patriotism is old fashioned. Some might even ask, what is patriotism? Where are the boundaries? Can you measure it? Can you buy it? Where can I buy some?

For all the many definitions that exist, there's one I particularly like. John Masefield put it this way:

"Patriotism is not a song in the street and a wreath on a column and a flag flying from the window . . . it is a thing very holy and very terrible, like life itself.

"It is a burden to be borne, a thing to labor for and to suffer for and to die for: A thing that gives no happiness and no pleasantness — but a hard life and an unknown grave, and the respect and bowed heads of those who follow."

We talk about patriotism, and most of us say we want it. Remember the Bicentennial just seven years ago? Everything was painted red, white and blue. Remember the flags flying? How about the parades, fireworks, concerts and all the other events?

Didn't we feel good? Weren't we proud? I was — for sure.

It would be a shame to wait another hundred years for the next renaissance of patriotism. I want us to put ATC into the forefront of changing that situation so that patriotism becomes a vibrant, functioning part of our daily lives.

Ready and Willing

In my mind, apathy is as much a danger to our way of life as the Soviet threat. Especially with our lifestyle in the armed forces, we must be ready to lay it on the line for what we really believe and be ready to serve wherever, whenever and however we're needed. That's not a trite concept — it's a fact.

In our command, we must have that extra reservoir of readiness — of energetic patriotism. We need that gut-deep commitment in Air Training Command because our attitudes touch the mind of every trainee who comes into our classrooms.

We need to remember that those young minds will soon control the destiny of our Air Force, and thus the safety of our nation. After we have passed from this life's scene, our legacies must be preserved by these young lions that are professionally nurtured by the First Command — by you.

Stand Tall, Proud

"Getting back to the basics" is a theme I intend to continue to pursue. And patriotism is the most basic, powerful and beautiful concept of them all. It's all part of flying the colors, standing tall and proud during the National Anthem and really believing that the Star Spangled Banner still waves over the land of the free and the home of the brave.

I don't offer any magic formula for getting back to the basics. It's something we all need to work on.

However, I know we need to cherish patriotism where it exists and rekindle the fires wherever they've burned low. It's a challenge I give each of you, individually, and to all of you as members of ATC.

Patriotism — love of country — is the heart and soul of our Air Force. You can't get much more basic than that.

No second chance on first impressions

General Iosue plans to visit Reese Tuesday. That being the case, we need to fine-tune our operation again to prepare for our new ATC commander.

General Iosue has the personal approach that an unkempt base, squadron or shop is not professional. He wants spit and polish in the belief that it will roll into our work and create a better product. Sound familiar? Of course it does. This is the same philosophy that we have been practicing here for the past two years. Has this philosophy worked? I think our record speaks for itself.

The Leadership, Management and Development Center Team came to Reese last November and did a thorough evaluation of our operation and our people, both military and civilian. The team said "Reese AFB is the best wing that we have seen in the Air Force in over two years."

Beginning in January, we have proven ourselves to be the best with a number of excellent inspections: ATC Stan-Eval, MCI, MEI, Air Force Inspector General, Hospital IG, staff assistance visits, Personnel Assistance Team visits, and others.

Do we want to take a chance on letting all of this success go for naught with a bad first impression on the new boss? I don't think so.

We don't need to change a whole lot because we are already in line with General Iosue's management concept. However, we do need to put the finishing touches on the little things.

We have all worked very hard to make Reese the top wing in the command. Let's make sure that we live up to our reputation and be ready for General Iosue's visit Tuesday.

Remember, we don't get a second chance to make a good first impression.

CARE Line

The CARE Line is prepared by Col. Richard E. Hearne, 64th Flying Training Wing commander. All information provided to the CARE Line will be held in strict confidence. Callers are urged to give their name and duty number so that a personal reply may be made; however, neither are mandatory. Callers are urged to use the CARE Line only after all possible means to air complaints through the chain of command have been exhausted. The CARE Line Ext. 3273.

"I WOULD LIKE to complain about the way they're watering the soccer field and track," said a caller. "They have a lake instead of a track now."

We know this has been a problem so we're going to watch how we water the soccer field more closely to try to keep this from occurring again.

ANOTHER CALLER WONDERED why, with a long waiting list for lockers at the base gym, so many of the lockers were broken and unusable.

The lockers have been fixed and there is now no longer a waiting list for them.

AN ITEM IN A RECENT "Roundup" was the subject of another call. This caller had seen a news brief that indicated that a Reese airman had received five years in prison for possession of marijuana, while another person he knows received only an Article 15 for a similar offense. He was concerned about the equitability of punishment.

The airman who got five years was tried by civil court downtown last year for involuntary manslaughter. The court gave the airman a suspended sentence and put him on probation for eight years. He was court-martialed early this year for possession, use and distribution of marijuana. After this airman finished his court-martial sentence, which was four months in confinement at hard labor as well as a fine and reduction in grade, the state of Texas revoked his probation because of his marijuana involvement and imposed five years of the suspended sentence.

The other airman the caller was talking about was caught possessing marijuana off base and was tried, convicted and fined in very short order in the civilian community where he was caught. The Air Force's power to take punitive action against this individual is limited, because he is already being punished by a civilian court for the crime of possession of marijuana. For us to then take further punitive action against him would be to punish him twice for the same crime, and while this would not technically be double jeopardy, it is against Air Force policy.

I understand and share this person's concern about the equality of treatment across the base for similar offenses. However, we should note that the circumstances surrounding these two individuals about whom he asked are not very similar. While the one was charged with possession, use on numerous occasions, and distribution of marijuana on base, the other was charged by a civilian court with possession only off base. Furthermore, my policy is that no judgement shall be made concerning any alleged offender, or any certain type of crime, until all of the individual factors relating to the case are evaluated. Therefore, just as individual factors in every case vary, so too will the handling of cases vary.

A YOUNG BASE HOUSING resident was concerned that the security police did not send home a couple of kids who were playing outside at about midnight recently.

There is no curfew for minors on Reese. Therefore, how late children play outside at night is a parental responsibility. Security Police do stop people who seem to be wandering aimlessly around the housing area at night, but in the case in point, the children were playing in their own yard, were creating no disturbance and vandalizing no property, so there was no reason to question their playing outside at midnight.

A SAFETY-CONSCIOUS PERSON called and asked if there is a way for people who see traffic violations to report them to the Security Police. "I know the Security Police can not watch all the drivers on base," he said, "so I want to know the best way for an individual seeing such incidents happening to handle them."

The Security Police recommend filing a traffic complaint. This complaint is filed at the SP desk and requires the vehicle license number, the description of the vehicle, the location of the incident, the type of incident and a statement of what happened. A copy of the complaint is forwarded to the squadron commander of the registered owner of the vehicle.

We appreciate this person's concern for traffic safety on base.

AN ENLISTED OPEN MESS PATRON had a problem at the club concerning inconsistent enforcement of the dress code in the dining room. This diner, wearing shorts, was sent home to change into acceptable dress. Upon returning to the dining room a number of persons in similar short attire were found being served in the dining room. The club apologized for the mistake and implemented new procedures to prevent this from happening again; and invited the caller to the club for dinner on the base.

AND, A COMMISSARY PATRON likes the new meat labels the store has been using. We thank her for the compliment and add that the commissary tries hard to meet the needs of all its shoppers.

LASTLY, A CALLER ASKED why it seems that higher ranking NCOs get lots of "perks," e.g., time off to play golf and take three-day camping trips, while the young airmen on swing shift have to work their entire shifts and then come in for medical appointments and so forth during the day when they are supposed to be off duty. He added that it also was an inconvenience to have to move out of his dorm during the day and then go to work that evening.

Without knowing specifics, I will do my best to answer this complaint against supervisors.

This is the season for intramural golf and all ranks are allowed to participate, mission permitting. Also, such programs as "comp time" and recognition awards allow time off which may be used in recreational activities. As for "three-day camping trips," a person should be on a three-day pass granted by the squadron commander or be on leave to miss a duty day adjacent to a weekend.

I'll admit there are opportunities for supervisors to abuse the system; however, I have a lot of faith in my NCOs. Many of them unselfishly work long hours without worrying about a "normal" shift or duty day. If they do abuse their positions by spending excessive amounts of time on personal business during the day, other NCOs in the squadron have usually corrected the problem by the time I learn of it.

Now, concerning the lack of time off from swing shift for hospital appointments or other business matters handled during the day: Unfortunately, we do not have enough people to keep base services such as the hospital and finance open every shift. So, some things will always have to be done during normal duty hours. I also regret the inconvenience caused by switching dorms. Many people on all shifts had to spend some of their off-duty time to move, but I'm sure the renovation will make it worthwhile.

Finally, we must realize there are many things we must do during off-duty time, regardless of our shift. Hospital appointments are an inconvenience for a swing shift worker, while car repairs downtown are almost impossible for a day-shift worker. I still believe, though, that we "take care of our own" and I'm sure my supervisors will try to help with reasonable requests and complaints. Thanks for the call.

CAPT. ROCHELLE DUCHARME, Air Training Command Nurse of the Year for 1982, listens as Brig. Gen. (Dr.) Bealer T. Rogers Jr., ATC Surgeon, reads the citation to accompany the silver medallion she received in honor of her recent accomplishment. Approximately 140 people turned out for the hospital dining-out Friday evening. General Rogers addressed the dining-out audience on military medicine, pride in the uniform and in the Air Force.

Do you know the rules for our flag?

(ATCNS)—Flying the United States flag is an honor and privilege. With that privilege comes the responsibility for proper care and respect for our national colors.

Remember the following rules when you handle or display the flag:

- The flag should be raised and lowered by hand. Do not raise the flag while it is furled. Unfurl the flag, then raise it quickly to the top of the staff. Lower it slowly and with dignity.

- In most cases the flag is displayed only from sunrise to sunset outdoors. The flag may be displayed at night only if it is properly illuminated.

- The flag should not be displayed in the rain unless it is an all-weather flag.

- When the flag is to be flown at half staff, it should be raised to the peak and then lowered to the half-staff position.

Before lowering the flag for the day it should again be raised to the peak then lowered.

- When handling the flag, do not allow it to touch the ground or brush against objects. Be careful to keep it from becoming soiled.

- When the American flag becomes tattered and torn or too soiled to clean, it should be burned. Never dump the flag in the trash.

Cut our manpower, says SP chief

by SSgt. Ralph Monson
Headquarters SAC Public Affairs

OFFUTT AFB, Neb. (AFNS) — The size of the security police force today is too big, announced the Air Force Chief of security police.

Brig. Gen. P. Neal Scheidel made that surprise statement during an interview at Strategic Air Command Headquarters.

"I say that because one out of every seven people who enlist in the Air Force today becomes a security policeman," explained the general. "While that makes security police a sizeable force and gives us a pretty good capability to protect our resources, it doesn't give the Air Force any more war-fighting capability. It doesn't put one more bomb on target.

"I think we have to find a smarter way of doing business," he said. "We have to make better use of sensors and various other electronic devices to reduce the amount of Air Force manpower dedicated to security police activities." For example, the general said large numbers of security police are dedicated to controlling entry to a variety of locations. Many of these locations could be more efficiently controlled by machines.

"Within state-of-the-art technology, we can develop entry control devices that will be more efficient. For example, identification by hand print or voice print is pretty much infallible . . . and much cheaper," he said.

The 23-year veteran of security police work noted the typical 24-hour entry control point costs of the Air Force are about $125,000 per year. "You can buy a lot of equipment for $125,000," he said.

"Our number one task," said General Scheidel, "is the protection of our nuclear weapons. The public has a right to expect — really, to demand — that nuclear weapons be given our highest priority of protection."

The general said even in the United States, where bases are relatively "secure, the threat of a terrorist attack provides a mounting challenge to that protection. Today's terrorist forces are very mobile and very well financed. They could hit any place in the United States they want," he warned.

General Scheidel pointed to the Peacekeeper Challenge competition at Kirtland AFB, N.M. in November as an example of the type of training security police need.

"At Peacekeeper Challenge, we exercise our people and test them under the most adverse conditions," he said. "We attempt to duplicate the types of threats they can realistically expect to see, such as terrorist attacks."

General Scheidel said today's security police force is the best trained and most motivated ever.

One week remains for entries to be turned in for the 1983 Designer Craftsman Contest. The Deadline is Aug. 14. The contest is open to active duty military personnel, with categories of leathercraft, plastics, wood, metal, ceramics and open.

A firm date for the 1983 base photo contest hasn't been set yet, but entries should be in by the end of September. The center will host the ATC portion of the contest in October. The base contest will be open to all military personnel, dependents and DOD civilians.

"Christmas in August" will be held at the center from Aug. 17 to 31, complete with a tree and music. Demonstrations and workshops all centering around Christmas projects will be the focus of the two week period. Projects will include leather, macrame, pottery, ceramics, art photography and wood. And, the air conditioner is working again!

The crafts shop will sponsor a craft bazaar in conjunction with the base picnic scheduled for Sept. 3. Anyone interested in selling their wares should contact the arts and crafts center. Only handmade items can be sold.

The shop offers a number of classes for beginning, intermediate and advanced craft workers. Contact the center or watch the Roundup for information on future classes.

Nine score high on CDC finals

Nine Reese people recently received outstanding scores on the end-of-course examinations of Career Development Courses they took.

One third of the top scorers are assigned to the 64th Organizational Maintenance Squadron. They are SSgt. Cynthia Hammack, 96 on the 00011 exam; Sgt. Michael Odom, 91 on the 43171 exam; and, Amn. Richard A. Weber, 90 on the 43151 exam.

Two of the top testers are assigned to the 64th Field Maintenance Squadron. They are SSgt. David A. Nelson, 91 on the 43171 exam, and Sgt. David E. Phillips, 96 on the 42374 exam.

Amn. Dominic Lauretta, of the 1958th Communications Squadron, scored 92 on the 29150 exam.

Amn. Melanie Jardonek, of the hospital, scored 91 on the 90250 exam.

AB Robert S. Shaffer, of the 64th Civil Engineering Squadron, scored 91 on the 55151 exam.

Amn. James Moser, of the 64th Air Base Group, scored 91 on the 61130 exam.

Thus far in 1983, 50 testers have scored more than 90 percent out of 87 total end-of-course exams.

AFR 30-30 applies both on and off duty

(ATCNS) — Be careful if you're urging fellow GIs to sell commercial products for you. You may be violating the Air Force's Standards of Conduct.

A master sergeant from Davis-Monthan AFB, Ariz., was court-martialed recently for soliciting subordinates to sell Amway products for his profit.

The Standards of Conduct, Air Force Regulation 30-30, prohibits Air Force members from making personal commercial solicitations or sales to individuals junior in rank or grade. This applies anytime, on or off duty.

This includes selling insurance, stocks, real estate, and any other commodities, goods, or services.

The regulation is there to protect an individual from being pressured into buying something from someone higher in rank, according to Col. James E. Lawrence, Air Training Command's deputy staff judge advocate.

The convicted NCO also failed to get permission from his commander to engage in a private business. The final sentence will cost him $700 a month for four months and a reprimand.

A major at Whiteman AFB, Mo., is currently awaiting court-martial on similar charges.

Colonel Lawrence said many people don't understand the Standards of Conduct. "Some individuals think they can solicit as long as it's outside their chain of command, regardless of rank," he said. Actually, it's a violation to sell to anyone junior in rank.

The regulation does not prohibit the one-time sale of personal property or a privately owned dwelling to a junior ranking member. Also, the limitations do not apply to off-duty DOD personnel employed in retail sales stores.

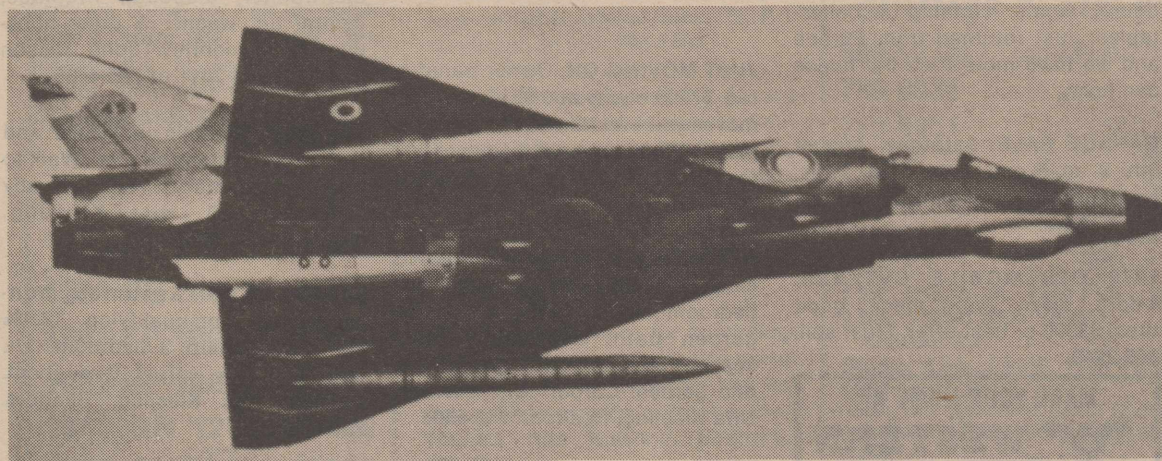

Legal officials are urging members to get familiar with the Standards of Conduct.

"Don't hesitate to see your legal office if you have questions concerning what you can and can not do," the colonel said. "They can help keep you out of trouble."

Air Force members are briefed semi-annually on the contents of AFR 30-30. For more information contact the Reese staff judge advocate's office in Room 207, Building 800, or call Ext. 3505.

Additional insurance available for interstate household moves

Persons moving their household goods by motor van within the continental United States may purchase extra property insurance beyond what the carrier and the government automatically provide, according to base transportation officials.

Cost of this additional coverage is $5 per $1,000. Shipments are automatically covered by the carrier at 60 cents per pound per article and by the government for a maximum $25,000 based on the depreciated value of claimed items.

Extra coverage purchased by property owners must come to at least $1.25 times the weight of the shipment; however, owners may declare any value in excess of this minimum which they deem adequate to cover the property's value.

This service is available only on interstate van shipments and must be arranged by traffic management personnel at the time of processing through the TMO.

For more information, contact the Traffic Management Office at Ext. 3838.

States offer financial breaks to military families for education

SPRINGFIELD, VA. (AFNS)—Nearly two-thirds of the states give military families a financial break when their children attend state run colleges.

Thirty-three states permit families to pay the lower "resident" tuition while assigned in the respective states. They are: Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

These tuition policies apply to military families who are not residents of the state in which they are assigned, and whose children attend that state's public post-secondary schools. In the remaining 17 states, tuition policies vary and families should explore them carefully. California, for example, grants in-state rates to military families for the first year only. After that year legal residence must be established to pay the resident tuition.
