"European Holiday" Is Theme of Progressive Study Club Program

Members of the Progressive Study Club continued their trip around the world in the program at their regular meeting Thursday, Nov. 17.

First, they met for a short business session in the community room of the Haskell National Bank. Mrs. Vernay Teague was voted into the club as an active member. Mrs. W. E. Woodson gave a "Prayer of Thanksgiving."

Mrs. Huey Bledsoe, the Travel Guide for the evening, announced that our first stop would be London. A Man's Town. All the members drove to the home of Mrs. Bill Holden, where the living room and dining area was beautifully decorated for an "English Tea Party." Refreshments of tea biscuits (English cookies), butter sandwiches and tea, with cream and sugar, were served.

Guest speaker was Peter Chandor, who was born and reared in London, but who is now a citizen of Texas. The speaker described the British Isles as the small home of Great Peoples. Although less than half the size of Texas, the British Isles have almost all the geographical features found in much larger land areas of the earth. The irregular coast line provides fine natural harbors. London is known as the City of Parks. It has more parks than any city in the world and is the "heart" of the British Empire. No spot in London calls up more memories of historic names and events than the Tower. This moated Norman fortress still stands guard over the eastern boundary of the city, but it is used chiefly as a museum.

Above the mists of London the soaring central dome and western steeples of St. Paul's rise like mountain peaks. When the area around about was blasted to ruins by German bombs, the massive cathedral stood firm.

The Mall leads to Buckingham Palace. Each year when the King and Queen open Parliament they travel along the Mall in a magnificent state coach.

Across the street from the Houses of Parliament stands Westminster Abbey, the national shrine not only of England, but of the far-flung British Empire.

Not far from Westminster Abbey stands Buckingham Palace and St. James Palace. Westward of St. James Park is the famous Hyde Park, a vast expanse of 390 acres, with Ken-

Dolores Thane, Burl L. Medford, To Repeat Vows

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Thane of Haskell are announcing the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter, Dolores Jo, to Burl Leon Medford, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Medford of Haskell. Wedding vows will be exchanged in Haskell, December 17, the wedding anniversary of the bride-elect's parents.

Neighbors Hobby Club Meets With Mrs. Harris

The monthly meeting of the Neighbor Hobby Club was held Wednesday, Nov. 16 in the home of Mrs. Henry Harris. Mrs. Clois Thomas served as co-hostess.

A delicious buffet luncheon, featuring salads, was served at noon and enjoyed by eleven members and three guests.

A special program of trio music was presented by Mrs. Clinton Kimbrough, Mrs. Robert Middleton and Mrs. Ray Smith with Mrs. Al C. Williams at the piano. Songs selected were: He, Let There Be Peace, Were You There, When Day Is Done, Autumn Leaves, Ciribiribon and Tammy.

The president, Mrs. John Wallace, presided over the business meeting. It was decided that each member would bring $1.00 to the Christmas party which will be turned over to the Goodfellows for the underprivileged youth in Haskell.

Games were played, after which the hostess served dainty minicemeat tarts and coffee.

Enjoying the afternoon were special guests Mesdames Al Williams, Rob. Middleton, Clinton Kimbrough, Andy Landess, Hamp Harris, and members, Mmes. Lee Brown, Buck Cal-jeway, John Wallace, Willie Burger, Norman Bevel, Clois Thomas, Ray Smith and hostess Mrs. Henry Harris. The next meeting will be Dec. 14 in the home of Mrs. Hamp Harris.

Rainbow Sewing Club Meets With Mrs. Lusk

Mrs. Annie Pearl Lusk was hostess to members of the Rainbow Sewing Club and a guest, Miss Alpha Dyches of Rochester, at the club's regular meeting Nov. 15.

The club president, Mrs. Stella Jossel, presided. Roll was called by the secretary and minutes of the last meeting were read. Thought for the day was given by Mrs. Zada Smith. Flossie Rogers led the group in singing several numbers with Mrs. Lusk at the piano. Old and new business was transacted. Needlecraft was won by Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Edwards. Final plans for the Thanksgiving supper were discussed. Bro. Copeland will be the speaker and Otis Johnson will be song leader.

Refreshments were served to a visitor, Miss Alpha Dyches, and the following members: Mesdames Zada Smith, Ann Taylor, Sallie Patterson, Cora Pittman, Flossie Rogers, Eva Pearsey, Sue Peavy, Essie Bland, Eddie Johnson, Stella Jossel, Elizabeth Andrews, LaVerne New, and the hostess, Mrs. Lusk. The next meeting will be Dec. 6 in the home of Mrs. Austin New.

After the talk by Mr. Chandor, pictures of England in color were shown on a screen. Then our Travel Guide started us on our way. This time we were entertained in the home of Mrs. Bailey Toliver where the atmosphere of "Gay Paree" was carried out in the setting of a cellar cafe. Her little daughter, Lee Ann, dressed in peasant costume, carried a basket of flowers and she gave each member a flower to wear. The den of the Toliver home featured tables centered with a candle and Lazy Susan that was filled with salami, cheese and French bread. Mock champagne was served by French waitresses dressed in turtle-neck sweaters and wearing berets. Colored slides of scenes in France were shown as the guide called attention to important places.

Leaving Paris, members continued their journey to Spain, in the home of Mary Nell McCoy. The house was completely done in Spanish decor. The table featured lamps, grapes, and a bull fight scene. Typical Spanish dishes and hot chocolate were served and an entertaining program was presented in Spanish.

Hunting Season In Full Swing Over State

The Texas hunting season is now in full swing with practically all species available to the gun, according to H. D. Dodgen, executive secretary of the Game and Fish Commission.

Deer and turkey seasons opened in most areas Nov. 16. Duck season previously had opened Nov. 11. Goose season had opened Oct. 26. Quail season also is in progress in all the Trans-Pecos counties, and in several others in the state. Quail season will open in the Possum Kingdom area a Nov. 24, and in the remainder of the state Dec. 1.

Although the dove season in the North Zone ended Oct. 30, it will remain open in the South Zone through Dec. 5. Most of the South Zone area reports a bountiful supply, but with deer and turkey season open most of the shooters are turning to larger game.

Although the hunters report seeing many ducks and geese, warm weather has been a barrier to successful hunting in many areas. There hasn't been enough cold weather as yet to bring them down to decoys, and there is so much water on the ground both ducks and geese are badly scattered.

A number of seasonal wardens have been added over the state, and every effort will be made to reduce illegal kills, according to Dodgen.

A senior at Highlands, Mrs. Smith is majoring in elementary education and minoring in speech.

Hints Given for Turkey Buyers

College Station, Nov. 17—Thanksgiving and Christmas are almost here, and turkey buying fever is beginning to rise. Will your dinner centerpiece be something to be proud of, or will it be a bird that does not quite fill the bill?

F. Z. Beanblossom, extens. on poultry marketing specialist, offers the following tips to help homemakers buy a bird that they will be proud of on these festive occasions. Factors such as body conformation, size and quality should be considered when shopping for the holiday turkey.

What should you look for in body conformation? Most important are proportions—a broad breast, deep body and medium length. Also, the legs should have bulging thighs and neck drumsticks.

How large a turkey should you buy? The size will be influenced by the number of people you expect to serve and the attitude of your family toward leftovers. Beanblossom says you should allow about 3/4 pound of oven-ready turkey for each person to be served.

After you have decided on the size of turkey to buy, you should consider quality. Grade A turkeys will have an even covering of fat over the entire body. In addition to this fat, top quality birds will also be broad breasted and have bulging thighs and large drumsticks. Turkeys with these qualities will have the highest ratio of meat to bone, thus giving more edible meat for each dollar spent, the specialist points out. Blemishes such as torn skin and bruises are also factors to consider when determining quality.

Has the turkey been inspected for wholesomeness? Turkeys that have been inspected for wholesomeness under USDA supervision will be so tagged. Birds that have been graded under USDA supervision will also carry this information. Do not confuse the two, Beanblossom warns.

In addition to buying tips, Beanblossom passes on these suggestions on cooking. Kathryn Bell Nyles, home economist for the Poultry and Egg National Board, suggests that you allow 5 to 20 minutes cooking time per pound of oven-ready turkey weight. She also recommends a temperature of 325 degrees Fahrenheit. The larger the turkey, the less time per pound will be needed for cooking.

Farm Facts

Of course, farmers provide us with our daily bread, as well as cotton and wool for clothing, but they are making another contribution to the American economy that sometimes is not recognized.

Farming, measured by almost any standard, is our biggest single industry and is a major customer of other industries. This industry is getting bigger instead of smaller.

In 1959 the gross income of farmers was $46.3 billion. This was 9.7 per cent of our gross national product for that year.

With that money farmers buy 6.5 million tons of steel a year—half as much as the automotive industry uses.

They buy more petroleum than any other single industry—more than one-eighth of all the petroleum produced in the country. They use more electric power than Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Detroit, and Houston combined. It takes $6 billion worth of containers and packing materials to pack the food farmers raise in a year.

Last year farmers bought the equivalent of 15 billion gallons of crude petroleum, making them better fuel customers than any industry.

Citizens whose incomes amount to $46 billion and with $200 billion in assets, who buy from nearly everybody and sell to everybody, are important indeed to the U. S. economy.

Texas Weather Wet and Stormy During October

October weather in Texas was wet, stormy, often times violent, and more characteristic of late spring than autumn, according to the statewide resume just completed by the Weather Bureau Climatologist in Austin. Damaging floods, wind and hail storms, and nine tornadoes kept the weather unsettled throughout the month.

The dry weather of the previous month was dramatically reversed as all sections except southwest Texas reported rainfall much above the average. Amounts of rainfall were excessive in south central Texas from San Antonio to the coast. Victoria reported 17.25 inches, the wettest month on record. For Corpus Christi it was the wettest October of record with 10.66 inches at the Airport; 15.49 inches downtown. Austin exceeded its October rainfall normal by 9.38 inches. Amarillo has now accumulated 26.02 inches of rainfall in 1960, or 16.42 inches above normal. By way of contrast Galveston still lags behind with the yearly total 14.55 inches below normal.

From the 16th to the 30th torrential rains were common in south central Texas, with many 5 to 6 inch rains, and 10 to 12 inch rains on several occasions. Major flooding occurred on most rivers and streams south and east of San Antonio with heavy damage to property and crops.

Flood waters moved in on Seguin on the 14th, Victoria on the 18th and 19th, Odem on the 19th, Rio Grande City on the 23rd and 24th, Pettus and Kenedy on the 26th and Austin on the 29th. Seven to ten inches of rainfall in Central Texas caused floods, drowning ten persons in the Travis-Gillespie Counties area. Three hundred homes were flooded in Austin with damage to the city estimated at 2.5 million dollars. Damaging hail storms were frequent in west and north central Texas, with damage to crops running into the millions. On the 15th, damage to crops in a 1200 square mile area between Muleshoe and Floydada was estimated at 10 million dollars.

Tornadoes occurred at or near Friona, Abbott, Brownwood, Floydada, Sinton, Corpus Christi, Victoria, and Schulenburg with the storm at Sinton injuring 11 persons and the storms at Friona and Schulenburg causing the most damage to property.

Discovery well of the famous Spindle Top Oil Field, the Lucas Gusher, can be seen four miles south of Beaumont, near the Gulf Coast and Louisiana border.

USDA Announces Spring Vegetable Acreage Guides

Vegetable growers have to take a long look ahead at planting time to make sure there'll be a good market for the produce they harvest, months later, points out Clyde Singletary, extension horticulturist at Texas A&M College.

While each grower has to make his own decision, the U. S. Department of Agriculture offers some help with acreage marketing guides on vegetable crops. The guides are based on expected demand, orderly marketing and average yields.

Just released are acreage-marketing guides for the 1961 spring vegetables and melons.

If Texas growers follow these recommendations, they'll plant 5 per cent more early spring tomatoes and 5 per cent late spring tomatoes, this year than last.

The guides also call for 20 per cent of fewer acres in carrots and eggplants in Texas; 5 per cent less early spring cauliflower, celery, and cucumbers; 5 per cent more early spring cabbage and lettuce, late spring sweetcorn and spring watermelons; and 10 per cent more spring cantaloupes.

It is recommended that acreages of other spring vegetables be unchanged from 1960 plantings. Most will be harvested in April, May and June, 1961.

Compliance with the guides is voluntary, although any USDA assistance to producers will be conditioned on compliance in specific areas.

Me, Mother, Help Me!

had never had any of her own. She had been widowed a year ago. She loved to cook and delighted in baking cakes and goodies. She had worked for one family for over eight years. They had gone to Europe, but she would give us the telephone number of a friend of theirs who would recommend her.

Hardly was she out the door when I called the number. The voice at the other end said she remembered Beulah. It had been a long time ago, but as she recalled, Beulah was wonderful with children and her friends had been well pleased.

That did it! I had a maid! My problems were over.

Before I went to the hospital in October, I found Beulah was all she claimed to be. Her pies and cakes were out of this world, and the children loved her. She seemed to delight in making them happy and in keeping the house spotless. She sang all day. When the time finally came for me to go to the hospital, Beulah patted me on the back and told me she would take care of everything. Never had I left the children with such complete comfort.

On October 15, 1960, Christine was born. Ted and I were delighted, and we couldn't wait to get her home to her brothers and sisters. On the day I came home, Beulah had my room glistening. The curtains were starched, and the bassinet had been placed next to the bed. After the children had wandered over this tiny new bundle, I climbed into my sweet-smelling bed, and as I lay there, I thought, I guess I'm the luckiest person in the world. It was not to be for long. Soon the children began ailing. First one and then another, without rhyme or reason. Just a temperature for a day or so, and then they would be all right again. I became panicky. They certainly got enough sleep and proper food. Beulah seemed as worried as we were. She carried trays to them and read them stories while I took care of the baby.

Then, to complicate matters, I came down with the flu for two weeks. I had Ted bring me home several sterile masks so I would not give her her bottle. Beulah again took over complete charge of the house, including the baby. I would lie on my pillow, too weak to lift my head, and watch her bathe and dress the baby.

I recovered from the flu and took over the children's care from Beulah. But they continued to be sick. Finally the baby got sick. She just seemed listless one day, and I decided to check her temperature. It was 101, so I called the doctor. The other three children were all right at the time. The doctor treated Christine for an infected ear, but her temperature never got below 100. We called an ear specialist, who diagnosed it as a ruptured eardrum. The ear wouldn't heal, neither would the temperature go down. For six solid weeks, the baby ran a temperature every single day. I was almost crazy with worry. The other children would be well for two or three weeks and then sick for several days. The doctor and drug bills hit us hard, so with many misgivings I let Beulah go. She promised to help me Saturdays with the washing and ironing. She had been with us only two and a half months, but the day she left I all but cried and so did the children. Afterward, things would not have been so hard if only the children had stayed well, but they kept getting sick. The worry exhausted me mentally as well as physically. Ted's reaction was the same. Every night when he came home his first question was, "Well, who's sick today?"

One consolation was the baby. At three months, she was as fat as a little pig. She ate well, slept plenty, and cooed when she was talked to. But she still ran a low-grade fever every day. One day without warning her temperature shot to 102, and she lay in her bassinet without moving. Her big brown eyes followed me all around the room—almost as if they were saying, "Help me, Mother, help me." A fear that I cannot explain gripped my heart. The doctor said the baby would have to go to the hospital for a series of tests. There was nothing apparently wrong with her except her ear, and this should have cleared up long before.

The two older children were home from school sick, lying around the house and watching television. Robby, who was then four years old, was in bed with a temperature of 102. I was very upset about leaving them, but I felt that I had to stay with the baby. Ted and I decided that I would stay with her at the hospital and he would stay home with the children. My sister-in-law, Ann, said she'd relieve Ted as much as possible.

I bundled up the baby, and Ann drove us to Children's Hospital in Washington, D. C. As worried as I was, I felt a sense of relief.

At the hospital, the intern asked routine questions. Several technicians took blood tests and a urinalysis. Through all this Christine just lay in her crib. She was too sick even to cry. I had a bed next to her crib. I lay there, wide awake, and all through that long night, wondering, worrying and praying. Ted called before I went to bed and said the other children were asleep but they all had a fever. Dejected, I kissed the baby's hot cheek and climbed into bed.

After an eternity of silence, broken only by the occasional crying of a sick child, morning came. A nurse came in with a bottle for the baby. She said they were going to X-ray the baby as soon as she finished feeding. They could just as well have taken her then, for she wouldn't drink a drop. Soon a nurse came in and carried her off to the X-ray room. In less than fifteen minutes, they brought her back crying.

and right behind him the doctor. He gave it to us quickly. "Christine has pneumonia. She has a spot on her lung the size of a silver dollar."

The feeling of relief was overwhelming. "Thank God," I whispered. "Thank God it's nothing worse." I felt that with God's help I could pull Christine through pneumonia. The doctor's voice broke into my thoughts explaining that Christine must stay in the hospital until she was better. When Ted left for his gas station, he kissed me and said, "Now if we just knew what was wrong with the other three . . ."

In just two days, Christine was well on the road to recovery and her temperature was normal. I was anxious to get home with her, for the other children were no better. Once when I called, Sherry answered and said, "Well, Don's all right, Mommy, but Robby's so hot he burns my hand when I touch him." My heart sank when I heard that I sat in that phone booth fully five minutes. Should I go home to them? Or should I stay with the baby? If I did, others?—Beulah! I got her at her place of work. She explained she couldn't come before Saturday, but would send a very good friend of hers to help us out till then.

So, on Thursday, Jean came to our house to help Ted with the children. She worked only two days. I have never even seen her, but I'll never forget her. And I'll soon explain why.

On Saturday, only five days after she had been admitted, I brought the baby home. The doctor did not want to release her. I begged and pleaded, and he said that I could take her if I would isolate her in a room. He would have to continue the penicillin shots.

When I got home, I put the baby in my room and closed the door. Then I rushed in to see Don and Sherry, and they both leaped out of bed and threw their arms around me. I thought they looked fine, and my spirits lifted. Robby was in the other bedroom. He didn't jump out of bed to greet me. He lay there flushed with fever. I sat beside him, and he put his feverish arms around my neck and said,

Ted came shortly after noon who would help Ted with the

Help Me Mother

"I missed you, Mommy. How is Frankie?" Oh, dear God, I cried within myself, what is wrong with him? Beulah was standing in the doorway behind me. "Mrs. Smith," she said, "you've got to do something about that boy. There's something terrible wrong with him."

The next day was Sunday, and everyone seemed better except Robby. That night after the children were asleep, Ted and I relaxed in the living room with a cup of coffee and a cigarette. "Maybe," Ted said, "maybe we're over the worst of it. If we can only get Robby well . . ."

The telephone rang. It was Jean, the friend of Beulah's who had come to the house to help. Her conversation was brief and shocking. "Mr. Smith," she began, "I couldn't sleep tonight until I told you something I just found out. I been thinking about these nice children of yours and how sick they are. Especially that little boy. I gotta tell you, Mr. Smith, Beulah has tuberculosis, and she's been hemorrhaging every night and then coming out there to work for you. Her husband died with tuberculosis, and five members of her family have died with it, and if I were you, I wouldn't lose no time in getting those children to a hospital right away and having all of them 'telescoped'."

Beulah had tuberculosis! "Ted," I could hardly whisper, "do you think—Could the children—?" I couldn't finish. Ted's face was ashen. Like a man in a trance, he dialed the doctor's number and repeated word for word what Jean had told him. Then he hung up, turned to me, and with a dazed expression said, "The doctor says to take all the children to the hospital tomorrow to be X-rayed." I don't think I realized just then the full import of what I had heard. Beulah! Did she know she had it? She must have known. Then, how could she have subjected the children to so terrible a disease? She had never even coughed the whole time she'd been here, and she had done the work of two women. Could she have done that if she was sick? Neither Ted nor I slept that night.

In the morning, the doctor came to give the baby her penicillin shot. He was quiet and all I can remember him saying is, "If the baby has it, it is going to be terrible." If there was hope, then, but if she did

I couldn't think past that. My mother arrived to help us. We bundled the children up, and drove the ten miles to Children's Hospital in silence. Even the older children, in the back of the car with my mother, sensed trouble and spoke in whispers.

Finally we were at the hospital. As soon as the X-rays were taken, we drove to the doctor's office, where he gave us all the tuberculin test. Then, weary and exhausted, we took our family home.

Ted made a poor attempt at straightening up the house while I went out to the kitchen to prepare dinner. Mother read stories to the older children. All of us acted as if there had been a death in the family. My father arrived late in the afternoon to help us wait out the news. The doctor had said he would call us as soon as he heard from the hospital. Every time I passed the phone I repeated a silent prayer.

Finally, at five o'clock that afternoon, it rang. The doctor's voice was grim. "It's not good news," he said. "My knees got weak, and I leaned against the doorway. 'All four have tuberculosis. Don is a healed primary tuberculosis. Sherry has primary tuberculosis, Robby has primary tuberculosis, and the baby has it worst of all.' I could hear Ted's voice on the extension: 'Oh, my God.' I turned to my parents and sobbed. 'All four of them. Oh, Mother, all four of my babies have tuberculosis!' Dad rushed over and put his arms around me and we stood there sobbing together.

Mother had gone to pieces, too, and she was pacing the floor holding the baby in her arms. The two older children were crying by this time. They didn't know what was wrong—they didn't even know what tuberculosis was—but they knew something terrible had happened. Don, the oldest, had his head cradled in his arms on the dining-room table and was crying his heart out. I put one arm around him and pulled Sherry to me with the other. I found myself telling them not to cry that everything would be all right, and then I thought of Ted. He was sitting in the living room, his handkerchief to his face, sobbing quietly. I went in and sat down beside him. We clung to each other and cried. There is something about a grown man crying that is pitiful, and I felt strength returning to me as I attempted to comfort him.

"Don't cry, honey," I whispered, as I wiped his face with his handkerchief. "We've been through a lot together, and have always pulled out. We'll pull out of this, too."

I thought of the many things that had happened to us in our 11 years of married life. Don had developed a cast in his eye when he was nine months old. Sherry had been born with a twisted foot which determination and constant massage had corrected. Robby had been born with a heart murmur which to the amazement of the doctors had disappeared. Ted had been struck with bulbar polio only three years before and had been hospitalized for three months. But now, four children with tuberculosis. What were we going to do?

The doctor came, and we all gathered in the living room. I sat holding the baby tightly in my arms.

"We don't have to worry too much about Don," the doctor said. "He is typed as a healed case, but we will have to put him to bed until we can get a blood test made to see if the infection is completely over. Sherry and Rob will have to stay in bed, too, until they are healed. The baby must be isolated. I am going to start giving her injections of streptomycin twice a day for six weeks. Without that, she doesn't stand a chance. Tuberculosis is one of the worst things a baby of this age can get, but I will do everything in my power for her." I looked down at my fat little baby, and my tears fell on her blanket.

The doctor went on to describe the other children's X-rays. Each showed a spot on the lung about the size of a nickel; Christine's was the size of a silver dollar. Robby's X-ray had been the best, and yet he was the sickest. But he had always been that type of child—sicker than the rest with even the slightest cold. Since his X-ray was good, I didn't worry too much about his high temperature, but Ted did. He said that night he felt Robby was worse than we thought. The doctor told us that Ted and I should be X-rayed the next day. Until then it had never entered my head that Ted or I could have it.

Isolating the baby was a problem. We have only three bedrooms in our house. Sherry and the baby had the small room, the two boys shared bunk beds in the middle room, and Ted and I had the master bedroom. Dad helped Ted move the bunk beds into our room and Sherry's bed into the boys' room. That way both the baby and Robby would have a room to themselves, and Don and Sherry could sleep in the bunk beds in our room.

After Robby and the baby had been put to bed, I came downstairs to get Don and Sherry. I found them sitting at the kitchen table saying their rosaries. When I saw them, their heads bowed, I felt ashamed. Here my children were doing what I should be doing—praying. I put my arms around them, and together we finished the rosary.

The next morning everything seemed unreal. I lay in bed telling myself that it had been a nightmare. Then I saw the bunk beds, and found myself crying again. My eyes were swollen shut from crying most of the night. My head throbbled unmercifully. I finally dragged myself out of bed and went downstairs to heat the baby's bottle. When I went to the baby's room, I almost expected to find her dead, but she was lying there cooing and kicking. As soon as I had fed the baby, I went into Robby's room. Ted was sitting on the bed beside Robby, holding his hand. He looked up at me and said, "He's worse, Virginia. I know he has it worse than the baby." I couldn't stand it. I just walked out of the room and went downstairs to fix breakfast. Three trays had to be prepared, for the children were not to get out of bed. I drank a cup of coffee and fixed Ted a man-sized breakfast he'd never eat.

After a cup of coffee, Ted left with a list of supplies we would need—masks, hospital gowns, antiseptic, pans, hypodermic syringe and needles. Before he came home, he had his chest X-rayed. Then he hurried home so I could have mine done. Our X-rays, it turned out, were all right, but we would have to be careful to avoid infection.

I immediately began changing the house into a hospital. An antiseptic pan was placed in the baby's room. The clothes hamper was moved into the hall to make a table for the box of sterile masks. A large bag was hung on the wall as a container for used masks. I hung a hospital gown outside the baby's door. A large kettle was put on the stove to sterilize dishes and baby bottles. Diapers, blankets, baby clothes, sheets—in fact, everything that came out of the baby's room had to be sterilized. The job ahead seemed superhuman.

In the afternoon the doctor came, and after he had given Christine her second shot of streptomycin, he went in to examine Robby, who still lay, feverish and hot, on his bed. I stood and watched as the doctor listened to his heart and tested his reflexes. Then he picked up his bag and walked downstairs. I followed. At the foot of the stairs, he turned to me and said, "Robby has to go to the hospital." My little tough cowboy, Ted was right—Robby was the worst. "Oh, no," I said. "You can't take Robby away from me now. He'll die. He's never been away from me. Please—" I started to cry.

The doctor walked into the living room. Finally he turned to me and said, "It's not a question of what you or I want. It's a matter of life and death. He must have a spinal tap right away. I think he has tubercular meningitis."

I didn't call Ted right away—I couldn't. Robby was the one Ted would pick up in his arms and run away with when I went to spank him for some mischief. He would wash Robby's marks off the wall before I could see them. He would do anything to protect his Robby. Now I had to tell him Robby had to go to the hospital.

At five o'clock that afternoon, I couldn't stand it any longer. I called Ted and asked him to come home. It seemed he was there, his arms around me, in minutes. "I knew it," he said.

The phone started to ring, as friends and relatives called to see if what they had heard was true. Some were not afraid of contagion, and they came to help us that night. Eddie and Jessie Blade, friends of ours, and my brother, Bob, and his wife. They took over and fed the children, sterilized the bottles, and tried to restore some order to our completely disrupted household. We bundled Robby up in his blue snow suit, a suit I had bought him in the fall and which he had hardly had a chance to wear. I shook all over. If Robby had meningitis, he would be hospitalized for months and his chances of recovery were too slim even to think about. The worst of it was that I could not see him only through the way there to a hospital to how can you separate from his Daddy? He was a vator going up ward, his eyes and he flung his around Ted's be

WASHER SPECTACULAR

2 Speeds! 2 Cycles!

3 Water Levels! 5 Wash-Rinse Temperatures!

Washes efficiently at low water level—saves water on partial loads. 5 water temperature combinations—even cold-water wash.

Agitator-Filter!

Filter snaps on agitator, constantly filters surging water to take out lint and fuzz. It's also an excellent dispenser for detergent.

smart—24" wide yet it's a big 9-pounder. New Acrylic enamel finish helps prevent rust—this keeps its looks for the HA-16.

Haskell Gins Process 13,051 Bales Cotton

Haskell's three gin plants had processed 13,051 bales of cotton from this year's crop at noon Tuesday, a survey revealed.

Good weather of the past two weeks has resulted in a rush of cotton to the gins, and some of the plants have been operating around the clock in keeping up with the harvest.

Weathering of the crop is now well past the peak, ginners report. They expect receipts to hit continuing low levels after another week of pretty weather.

Member Early-Day Haskell Family Dies In Lubbock

Mrs. John Agnew, member of a pioneer Haskell County family, died several weeks ago in Lubbock, friends here have learned.

She was the former Que Standefer, whose parents were among the first settlers here when the community was known as Rice Springs. She was a pupil in the first school established here in the 80's. She married John Agnew, another early settler here.

We are hoping to make our community a better place in which to live. We want to teach our girls wholesome constructive living, with good attitudes, clean in conversation, conduct and practice. We want them to demonstrate good citizenship, be well behaved and well mannered. Demonstrations will be given in making up beds, how to sweep, dust, mop, wash and iron, along with instruction in ceramics. We are looking forward to big banquet in February, with the Cubs and Boy Scouts of Troop 65.

Several trips, weiner roasts and picnics are being planned for the Scouts and Cubs in the near future. Principal Brembrly is the Institutional Representative for the Scout groups, both boys and girls.
