Jap Dreams of Easy Conquest Fade As U. S. Aid to Australia Grows; President's 'Victory Plan' Depends On Successful Offensive in Pacific

(EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

VICTORY:

For Navy Forces

Almost coincident with the arrival of General MacArthur in Australia the first great word of an offensive against the Japanese had been received, and the U.S. had hailed a great naval victory in New Guinea.

First reports had been of the sinking of 23 Japanese vessels, a dozen of them vessels of war, and though few details were announced, it was obvious that it had been a battle of he air rather than of the sea.

Important in the first dispatches had been the word that they were island based" forces of the United States and Australia, and this had been comforting in the extreme, for until this point America had not known that there were any island bases left to us in the Pacific theater with the exception of Hawaii. It had been learned, of course, that the Japanese, after taking Wake island, had later abandoned it, but few believed that our own navy had moved back in there.

Aside from speculation about where the base was, a fact the Japs would ordered in late February, but had like dearly to know the victory itself was important. In the battle of Java sea we had lost one heavy cruiser ourselves, and our allies had lost four.

In this battle the Japs had lost two heavy cruisers, one light cruiser and other ships of war of lesser import. The rest of the ships sent to the bottom or put out of action were freighters, some of them being used as troop transports.

OFFENSIVE:

Aussies' Viewpoint

Almost coincident with the arrival f General MacArthur, his chief of staff, Maj. Gen. Sutherland, and the rest of his party, official Australia began to talk and think in terms of an offensive against the Japs on a scale hitherto not dreamed of.

As to the Japanese themselves, after having previously reported, weeks ago, MacArthur's flight from the battlefront to Corregidor and other untrue stories about the commander, they were considerably taken aback by the news that the commander was in Australia.

They did just what President Roosevelt had predicted, and declared that General MacArthur had 'run away'' from the Philippines, and then went on to say that "American resistance in Australia would be shortlived."

The resistance in Bataan had stood as a monument to Japanese falsehoods and false hopes of easy conquest, and some believed that MacArthur's assignment to Australia might give the Japanese pause in going through with the invasion. At any rate, Prime Minister Curtin had said:

"It is most gratifying that the American troops are now here in force. Their numbers are most substantial.

"We are the base from which to strike at the enemy.

"American aid is doubly welcome because Britain could not carry the burden of the Pacific while engaged in a life and death struggle with Germany and Italy.

"Our nation must demonstrate to history that it has the moral and physical stature to stand up and trade punches with the enemy not for six weeks or months but year after year if necessary, giving odds, but fighting the enemy to a stand-

"If we fail ourselves, nothing will save us. We have to show ourselves worthy of aid."

His sentiments were echoed all over Australia, and in the halls of congress at Washington, senate and house leaders joined in. Chairman Snyder of military affairs said, after the applause had died down:

"I hope from now on many of our 'swivel chair generals' will remember that on this day many things are under way which will be just uals or groups that showed any as pleasing to them, when they find tendency to interfere with the ing field days in Chinatown, as the General MacArthur's status."

RUSSIANS:

Clamp Down

The Russians, having carried out their continued offensive during the coldest of the winter, had clamped down on several important points, including Kharkov and Vyamza, and claimed that 200,000 German troops were trapped in the latter area.

The Germans also, the Reds had asserted, were steadily giving ground in the Kharkov region, dubbed the Pittsburgh of Russia.

There also had been considerable favorable military activity in the district of Smolensk, which for a time, rumor had it, had been Hitler's personal headquarters.

In the meantime the Russians had taken over the suburbs of Kharkov and had started what they described as the fiercest sort of house to house

In each of these encounters the Russians had been able to mass well-trained troops in superior numbers over the Germans, and in the Staraya Russia sector they had asserted that the Germans were refusing to yield, and were gradually being exterminated.

Even in the southwest, where Hitler was supposed to have ordered a counter-offensive, the Russian machine was still moving ahead, Moscow had reported.

SUICIDE:

Confirmed

A roundabout method of confirming the suicide of General Homma in the Philippines by the hara-kiri method was discovered by Carlos Barry, a Chilean newspaper man stationed in Tokyo.

He sent a dispatch to the newsthen to take the long and perilous paper El Chileno in which he said the suicide of "General Masaharu Homma for failure to destroy the American and Filipino defense forces had been confirmed."

He did not say that Tokyo conall sides. For he was taking on his firmed it, but added:

LOTTERY:

There was little question but that Number Three

Washington's selective service heads, aided and abetted by draft boards from coast to coast swung into the task of classifying and calling up 9,000,000 men, drawn in the third draft lottery.

The word had gone out that not all would be drawn for military service, but that many might be drafted into defense industry.

THE STORY SO FAR: Karen Waterson, believing herself to be the heir to Alakoa, the island estate of her grandfather, finds herself no heiress at all, when the old gentleman, Garrett Waterson, turns up after a long disappearance. Meantime she and her lawyer have been engaged in a dispute over the rights to the property with the Wayne family, who have been in possession since the old man left, many years before. Richard (Tonga Dick) Wayne has fallen in love with Karen, as has also the lawyer, John Colt. After a quarrel with Dick, Karen decides to leave Alakoa with Colt. Old Garrett Waterson has arrived at Alakoa and is very ill with fever but expresses a wish to see Karen. Dick gathers a crew, overtakes Karen and Colt and argues with their ship's pilot, Ramey, to turn back. Ramey refuses, saying he can bring piracy charges against Dick. Now continue with the story.

"Such as will get you laughed out of the Islands. It's too bad, but those will have to wait. Turn your boat, Ramey.'

"Hold your course as you go," Colt ordered.

"Are you going to turn, or not?" "And what if I don't?" Ramey jittered.

"The Holokai has orders to come alongside, lash fast, and board, in just about another two minutes. You can turn your boat, or my crew will turn your boat, I don't care a damn which.

"He's bluffing," Colt said. "Hold your course, and I promise-"

"No, he isn't," Ramey whimpered. The little one-eyed skipper looked as if he were going to break down and cry. "I wouldn't put it past him to do it, by God! And if those crazy-headed Kanakas of his start running wild-"

"You won't like that, will you? Well-here they come!"

The Holokai was swinging nearer now; by her deck lights they could see Dick's Kanakas, eager at the

"Oh, dear God in heaven!" Ramey blubbered. The Seal turned back.

CHAPTER XV

Whatever else Dick Wayne accomplished or failed to accomplish by bringing the unhappy Seal back to Alakoa, that extravagant gesture undoubtedly saved the life of old Garrett Waterson.

The Seal's anchor was no more than down when Dick took Karen aboard the Sarah. Dick and Karen still had nothing to say to each other; so that Dick had no way of knowing what was going on in her mind. It seemed to him that she was timid, but also a little eager: and, in the face of his supposition found this surprising.

At first it seemed that they were too late. Garrett Waterson was mumbling weakly from the depths of a fever haze; he recognized no one, and could not be made to understand that the person Dick had brought him was the granddaughter whom he had never seen. When finally he was persuaded to fix his eyes upon her in what appeared a moment of clarity, the effect was worse than as if he had not seen her at all.

"I won't talk to you," he said, his words suddenly strong and distinct. "I'm positively not interested in any further marine insurance. I've told you before, I do not wish to discuss insurance in any way."

Tears came into Karen's eyes as she turned to Shimazu. "You're the doctor? Do you think he's going to

"What I cannot understand," said Shimazu, "is why he is still alive Karen's eyes darted about the smothering confusion of the little cabin. "We'll have to move him out of here to some place where he can be taken care of. This place isn't even clean."

"You can't move him," Stahlquist said from the door; "he would fight."

"It would be dangerous," Shimazu agreed. "I would be afraid to move him now.'

"Then we'll have to do the best we can here," Karen said. She took somebody have my things sent over from the Seal?"

"What are you going to do?" "I'm going to find some way to get some air in here. And then I'm going 'o clear up this litter. There aren't even any sheets on that bed. The doctor will have to tell me what else a nurse is supposed to do." "You can't change anything in here," Stahlquist said pessimistical-"He'll fight like hell. This is a terrible old man; pretty near everybody's afraid of him, but me."

"I'm not afraid of him," Karen said. "I'm going to take care of him."

That was the beginning of a week that seemed a long time for them all. In the face of a good deal of discouragement Karen persisted in doing just what she had said she would. She moved onto the Sarah and stayed there, and somehow she persuaded Garrett Waterson to submit to the care which no one had fore. Colt fumed and paced upon the Leaving it at all.

"All right, all right," Dick said. "I'll go to Nuku Hiva." "Have to go myself," Waterson insisted.

On the bay of Alakoa the three | aware of a weak but persistent hope factors of the John Colt-Dick Wayne- that something had happened to Karen Waterson triangle-each of cause John Colt and Karen Waterthem established in lonely and foolish grandeur on his own boat-were suspended in a deadlock which only could be broken, apparently, by either Garrett Waterson's recovery or Dick saw to it that the Sarah was provided with everything that Karen or Dr. Shimazu wanted, but he hardly ever went aboard her himself. When he did go aboard, Karen Waterson avoided him; and when this was not possible she still managed to disregard him so completely that he was left with a curious feeling of not being in existence any more. Reports on Garrett Waterson's condition were encouraging, but Dick found that they did not interest him much.

Dick Wayne was rapidly drifting into a state of mind where nothing interested him at all. Honolulu was pestering him to come there for the reading of James Wayne's will, and there was nothing to prevent his going; but he stayed where he was, for no more reason than that it seemed too much trouble to go anywhere else. Ernest Wayne tried to talk to him from Honolulu on the wireless phone, but Dick did not go ashore to take the call. He let his days drag out in a morose inactivity, chiefly filled in with innumerable games of solitaire in the cabin. Yet at night he was unable to sleep.

For a day or two he drank heavily, in the hopes that it would make had to go to Nuku Hiva. Once the that she had left Alakoa in prefer- him sleepy, but it did not; and when old man had purchased an option ence to facing her grandfather, he the Holokai's liquor ran out he did not bother to have it replenished. He stayed away from Karen Water- about 2, only to remember it sudson, trying to accustom himself to the idea of a world in which, for him, she did not exist; for he knew what was the matter with him well

Ramey came to see him in the posed. middle of the week, driven by a need of supplies. Now that it was apparent that the return of the Seal to Alakoa had resulted in a lengthening of John Colt's charter, the Seal's one-eyed skipper seemed to hold no grudge.

"I'll send you your engine oil," Dick said, "if you'll tell me one thing." "Like what?" Ramey asked dubiously.

"I'd kind of like to know," Dick said, "where Colt and Miss Waterson were going, and what for, the night I had to come out and fetch you back."

"Oh, is that all?" Ramey grunted. "Why, they was going to Honolulu to get married."

"So that was it." He managed a faint, sardonic grin. "She certainly had a busy evening." "Huh?"

"Let it go." Dick went back to his solitaire. When the week had stretched on into ten days it was known that Garrett Waterson, definitely, was going to live. The tremendous vitality of the old man had asserted itself once more. When this was concluoff her hat and tossed it aside. "Will sively evident, even to the unbelieving Shimazu, Dick knew that Karen would not be at Alakoa much longer.

He knew that he ought to try to interest himself in something-anything, to overcome the lethargy upon which he was stranded; but it took the departure of John Colt to get him into half-hearted action.

The Seal moved out of the bay of Alakoa unostentatiously one morning at daybreak. She blundered her way through the shoals by means of the curious luck which seemed to follow Ramey no matter what folly he committed, and eased off around the east point of the island roughly in the direction of Honolulu. Nobody on the Holokai knew the meaning of this at first. It was hours before they knew definitely that Colt had gone back to Honolulu on the Seal-but that Karen Waterson was still aboard the Sarah. Dick's curiosity was sufficiently ever been able to force on him be- aroused by this to cause him to row all the way over to the Sarah-a distance of some two hundred yards-Seal; Ernest and Willard Wayne for a visit with the convalescent old were in Honolulu; and Dick Wayne man. He tried to conceal from himsulked aboard the Holokai, hardly self his reason for wishing to talk to Waterson, but he could not. He was son to break up; and he wanted to find out from Garrett Waterson if this might be the case.

Karen Waterson was taking an hour ashore, so that her grandfather was alone. He was propped up on clean pillows, smoking a cigar which he had probably taken this opportunity to steal; and though he looked feeble, and somehow chastened, he was surprisingly himself.

"Where the hell have you been?" he demanded gustily, in what was evidently meant to be a roar. "You've got to get me out of this!"

That Garrett Waterson was notably tamed in spirit needed no more proof than his concession that he needed any help from anybody; but other evidence was not lacking Such a change had taken place in Garrett Waterson's quarters as Dickwould not have believed. All the great litter of charts and miscellaneous duffle had disappeared; even the bulkheads, which had been a scaling and ancient green, had been scraped and painted white.

"We've got to go to Nuku Hiva." Garrett Waterson announced, "and doctor and this girl of mine don't understand."

worked himself into a state of mind. Dick knew enough about Garrett Waterson's scattered and loose-knit on a site for a wharf, or something of the sort. Then he had forgotten denly and inauspiciously just as the option was about to run out. Dick did not believe that either Waterson or Nuku Hiva needed a wharf, but it was no use arguing, he sup-

"If we don't take that thing up by the first of the month," Waterson declared, "that English outfit will get in there, and the opportunity of a lifetime will go up in smoke-just like that!" He blew a blast of smoke at Dick to illustrate what was going to happen to the opportunity of a lifetime, and it made him cough, so that he spilled cigar ashes on the highly scrubbed deck.

"All right, all right," Dick said. "I'll go to Nuku Hiva."

"Have to go myself," Waterson insisted.

"You'll stay here," Dick said, "or I'll have nothing to do with the business at all. Then where will you be?"

The old man finally had to be satisfied with that. Not until the long digression about lifetime opportunities in Nuku Hiva was settled, was Dick able to raise the question which had really brought him here. He put out a tentative feeler. "I see John Colt has gone back."

"It's none of my business," Dick said, "but I'd kind of like to know why he should be rushing back to "I sent him back," Garrett Waterson said complacently. "You sent him back?"

"So I hear."

"He was over here with some scoundrelly proposition, whereby I was supposed to throw in with him, and we were supposed to get the island of Alakoa away from the Waynes. He made me kind of mad Seemed that all I had to do was offer proof that I'm out of my mind--that gets us the islands back. I told him to get to hell out. I told him if he wasn't out of the bay in twelve hours I was going to have my crew grab him and keel-haul him. I guess he must have taken me literal."

"But Karen is going to stay with you?'

"I'd like her to; but she says not. I believe she'll be following Colt to Honolulu directly."

"Following Colt?" "She's kind of a little poker face," Garrett Waterson complained. "It's past me to make out what she's going to do. But if you is singing for the boys on her tour of want my private personal opinion, I think she's going to marry the guy."

Dick managed to say, "How are you going to like that?" (TO BE CONTINUED)

Advertising and high prices do not go together at all. They are extremely incompatible to each other. It is only the product which is unadvertised, which has no established market, that costs more than you can afford to pay.

THE SILVER LINING

In a vivid account of her experiences during a typical San Francisco blackout, Kathleen Norris shows that it is possible to see the brighter side of life even in wartime. It is, she believes, our duty to do so. War will bring inconvenience and, perhaps, hardship, but we will be better able to endure that hardship if we face it with a smile. To worry unnecessarily is not only foolish, but a waste of the time and energy we should spend on intelligent prepara-tion for such possible emergencies as blackouts and food shortages. Remember that slogan of World War I?-"Look for the silver lining!"

"May God help you through these hours of horror," writes an old friend of mine from Detroit. "If from your heart memories that and God knows we would relieve you all of some of it if we could."

Well, one can't exactly laugh at sympathy as sincere and distressed as that, but it is impossible to keep from laughter when such a letter is read at the week-end gathering of the clan. Pearl Harbor naturally smote us all with consternation, and for a few days there was some flurry of apprehension: again it was like the earthquake, immediately after which people did rush about frantically asking, "What shall we do? What's coming next? What will happen if-if-if-"

But within a few days-almost a few hours-everyone settled down to help, to serve, to philosophize andyes, to enjoy the crisis.

God forbid that anything should is all bad. But we are fighting for what is good, good for everyone, values that will long outlast the war.

My hope is that if states in our own country can have so exaggerated an impression of things out here, some of the other atrocities reported of life everywhere, in England, Russia, China, in the oppressed and conquered countries, are less in actuality than we fear. We hear frightful details, and alas! some of them are true. But remember, when you feel your heart heavy, as you think of | ian Defense of the United States,"

WAR TIME ATTITUDES

We had some very interesting discussions one afternoon at the White House on the subject of what the general attitude of the people should be during this war period. I've come to one very clear decision, namely, that all of us-men in the services, and men and women at home, should be drafted and told what is the job we are to do. It seems to me there should be immediately a freezing of prices, of profits and of wages. No one can be frozen without freezing all.

The only way I can see to get the maximum service out of our citizens, is to draft us all and to tell us all where we can be most useful and where our work is needed. So long as we are left to volunteer, we are bound to waste our capacities and to do things which are not necessary.

We are bound quite thoughtlessly, to waste materials which we have wasted in the past, but which we no longer have a right to waste. I the war and write the peace" gains would be relieved beyond measure, prominence, homemakers all over and so would many people throughout the nation, if an authority greater than our own personal decision told us where we could be most useful. We are in quite a different situation this time. I personally, am in a different situation in the White House because the President, as head of the nation, requires in his household certain things which would not be necessary in any private house. In private life, however, I should like to feel that I was complying with the wishes and doing the things which those in authority thought should be done.

. . . BOOKS ON PRESENT CRISIS

There is a bulletin from the Colege of the City of New York, which are entitled "What We Are Fighting For" and "What We Are Fighting Against." These lists are prepared by Dr. William Bradley Otis, professor of English, in an effort to present situation.

We can all keep busy for a long while if we undertake to read all the books mentioned, though there are a few with which we may already be familiar. Surprisingly film of butter if you expect to keep enough, I find that those I know best | it for a long time. Keep eggs away are in the column of "What We Are from strong foods to prevent their Fighting For," so I shall have to do some reading on "What We Are Fighting Against."

There are other boys whom we know only slightly, who might be glad to get a package and have see these packages, remember they are put there for your use and, if service man.

NATIONAL PLANS

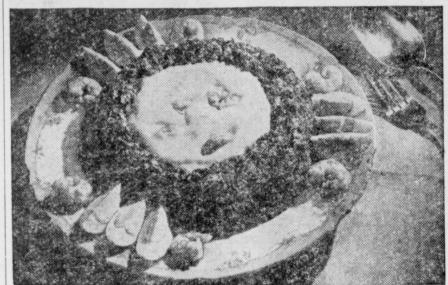

I have had an interesting talk with a young Korean woman, married to an American citizen, who has been promoting an organization among the women of her community which she thinks would be of value in many other communities.

Her hope was that I would head up this organization on a nation-wide basis, but I feel very strongly that everything that is done should originate in a community need and, therefore, should enlist the interest and activity of the people in a particular community. National plans smack too much of something handed down from the top. Though I think it is well when something valuable is done in any community to have it given wide publicity so that other communities with the same needs may adopt it, I think it is a mistake to try to start any new rational organizations at this time.

. . . COMMUNITY BENEFITS

I was interested in an appeal which I received the other day. It was from one of the community organizations in my home state. They explained that they felt benefits and large mass meetings should be the methods used to raise money for the extraordinary war activities. That the usual community organizations, both charitable and civic, should obtain their support simply by reminding their subscribers of the need in the community. I think this theory is excellent.

Lynn Says:

You can be smart about the way you use leftovers. Here are a few ideas:

Save leftover vegetables from dinner, wash the butter off and use in salads combined with celery, lettuce and dressing. Use other vegetables for stews, meat pies, and casseroles.

Leftover roasts slice nicely so you can have them cold or serve hot with leftover gravy. Meats combine well in casseroles, croquettes, stews, soup and salads. Meat juices and bones combined with a few vegetables make up nicely into soups.

Clarify fats (bacon drippings, lard, suet, or chicken fat) by heating and adding 1 peeled, sliced potato and cooking until fat stops bubbling. Strain through a double cheesecloth, and store. Substitute 1/2 cup clarified fat for 1 cup butter in recipes.

Pour cooked cereals leftover from breakfast into jars or pans. Slice, fry and serve with syrup. Leftover egg yolks are good for custards, mayonnaise, sauces and frosting. Leftover egg whites are excellent for angel food cakes, circulation of air. Soft cookies remain moist if kept in a well-covered tin or jar with an apple or slice of lemon, orange, or grapefruit to provide additional moisture. Change the fruit every several days.

Tight containers which close out the air are recommended for keeping cakes at their best freshness. Cover them with waxed paper, too.

A bread box scrupulously cleaned at least once or twice a week with soap and water, and dried thoroughly contributes in large measure to the freshness of bread.

Keep in a Cool, Dry Place:

Coffee, spices, flour and crackers need dry, cool storage in tightly covered containers since they are affected by air. Use metal or glass containers for them. When crackers get soggy, crisp them in the oven for a few minutes and they will be as good as when you bought

THE TRANSFIGURED CHRIST MEETS HUMAN NEED

LESSON TEXT-Luke 9:28-43a. GOLDEN TEXT-And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God.-Luke 9:43.

Glory and grace go together. Spirituality finds meaning in service. Holiness is faith in action. Every fine emotion should be translated into conduct.

This is the message of our lesson as it presents the transfigured Christ and the disciples, moved beyond intelligent words by His transcendent glory, going forth into the valley to meet the need of demon-ridden humanity.

I. Amazing Glory (vv. 28-36).

To three of the disciples came the privilege of seeing in the mount the outshining of the deity of Christ through the humanity of His flesh in such amazing glory that Peter could think of nothing more wonderful than to prolong the experience by tarrying in the mount.

One could wish that it were possible in presenting this lesson to get over into the thinking of those who read or hear, a proper conception of the glory of our Christ, but words seem to be such weak and insufficient instruments. One would cry out-"Look at Him-the Son of God with the transfigured face-and the light of heavenly glory shining forth in a dazzling whiteness" (literally, like lightning)

If men would only look upon Him, they would see how untrue are those who take from Him His deity, who speak of Him as only a good man or a great teacher. He, our Saviour, who took upon Himself the limitation of our flesh, was and is eternally Significant it is to note that with Him on the mount were Moses and Elijah. The former had died (Deut. 34:5, 6) and the latter had been translated without death (II Kings 2:11), but both were alive, recognizable, intelligent, interested in the redemptive work which Christ was to work out on the cross (v. 31). This definitely denies such false theories as soul-sleep or annihilation at death.

But the vision of glory becomes a means of blessing as we see

II. Amazing Grace (vv. 37-43a). Like Peter, there are many folk who think that the thing to do is to remain on the mountaintop, just enjoving the vision of glory and the delightful fellowship of Christ and the redeemed. They do not learn gest kind of waste in food. Perhaps such things from Christ or from the Word of God. The next day (v. 37) meats at too high He and the disciples met the cry a temperature of an anguished father whose boy and cause them was possessed of a demon and who to shrink more had found no help (v. 40). It seems to the writer of these notes that God is waiting to do a of all to know Him ourselves, as our own Saviour and Lord. Then we (Rom. 12:1, 2). Then, we must put through our lives. letter was addressed to Pahaguarry Township in Warren county. State defense officials wanted to know what the citizens planned to do in case of a war emergency. All inquiries went unanswered until the puzzled officials finally received the following communication from Minard Hamilton, the spokesman for the 72 unworried souls in New Jersey's tiniest
