Aransas County Ranch Held as Model For Range Management in Coastal Area

A tour of the D. W. Grant ranch near Rockport was included Friday in a field day program sponsored by the Texas section of the American Society of Range Management in cooperation with the San Patricio Soil Conservation District.

Jack Fletcher, chairman of the Texas Section of the American Society of Range Management, was master of ceremonies on the field day program. Among other officers of the organization attending the field day were Meril G. Carter, Uvalde, secretary-treasurer; Dr. Gerald Thomas, Abilene, vice chairman; and Leo Berrill, Sonora, director.

O. D. Ediger, SCS work unit conservationist assigned to the San Patricio County Soil Conservation District, told farmers and ranchers and conservationists attending the field day that the range improvement program on the Grant Ranch is one that has never been tried anywhere else. In fact, he said, it is one that had been frowned on and discouraged. The soil on the ranch is a deep, loose sand and was covered with heavy growths of sweet bay and oak, which had choked out practically all the grass and other desirable vegetation.

Ediger said that old-timers recalled that in earlier days the Coastal Prairie in the Rockport area was comparatively free of brush. Except for occasional motts of live oak, the area was covered with tall bluestem grasses; and "it was possible to see from Rockport to Aransas Pass." However, when the brush invasion started, it spread rapidly and the once-prairie country was covered with dense growth of brush.

In such a situation, there are three courses open to the landowner, Ediger pointed out. He can: (1) do nothing; (2) suppress the brush by chopping it with rotary or rolling cutters; or (3) he can root-plant and overseed the range.

In January of 1957, Grant root-plowed a portion of the range on his ranch, plowing to a depth of about 15 inches. The plow was equipped with fins that tended to kick the roots out of the ground and expose them to the weather. Considerable skepticism accompanied the operation; but the final results were convincing.

It was estimated that more than 95 percent of the brush was killed; and the combination of Rhodes grass, bermuda grass, and buffel grass with which Grant overseeded the area as he root-plowed it, soon established a good growth and prevented the sand from blowing. The area is now covered with the improved grasses, along with an encouraging amount of native climax grasses. Ediger said that clipping tests made last week showed that the range is producing more than 25,000 pounds of bluestem grass to the acre on the root-plowed area; while in areas where no effort had been made to control the brush, there was only a trace of the native grasses. Ediger said that there are approximately 100,000 acres of this type of rangeland along the Gulf Coast.

D. W. Grant, owner of the ranch, in discussing his range improvement program, said that he had tried to control the brush at first by chopping it. He treated about 400 acres in this manner. It resulted in a suppression of the brush and gave the grass a limited opportunity to come back; but it was not wholly satisfactory. It was then that he decided to root-plant and overseed the range in an effort to eradicate the brush and eliminate the necessity of having to carry on a continuous maintenance program. He said that, in order to tie down the soil while other grasses were getting a start, he included bermuda grass in the mixture with which he overseeded the root-plowed land. He used two pounds of bermuda grass seed, a pound of Rhodes grass, and a pound of buffel grass. The bermuda grass early tied down the soil, thus preventing wind erosion, while the other improved and native grasses were becoming established. The wisdom of his methods was apparent in the results obtained. Although the other grasses have just choked out the bermuda, it served its purpose.

In another pasture, where the soil is characterized by a high sodium crust, Grant root-plowed and overseeded with buffel grass. The results were phenomenal here also. The sodium crust has evidently been dissipated by the heavy stand of grass, and the water intake of the soil has been tremendously increased. On adjacent soil where no treatment was applied, only a six-inch penetration was obtained from an eight-inch rain; while on the root-plowed and overseeded area, moisture penetration seemed bottomless. On this 600-acre pasture, Grant has grazed 59 head of cattle since Jan. 1; and they have been unable to keep up with the productivity of the buffel grass.

Among others who spoke briefly on the Grant Ranch tour were Gerald Thomas, Abilene, vice chairman of the Texas Section of the American Society of Range Management; Bobby Joe Ragsdale, Extension range specialist; Howard Murphy of the Holt Machinery Co. of San Antonio; Meril Carter, Uvalde, secretary-treasurer of the Texas Section.

Carter said that one of the chief objectives of the society of range management is to encourage and make possible the exchange of ideas.

"We have a tremendous stake in such work as is being done here on the Grant Ranch," he said.

New Senate Hand Aided Democrats

When William A. Blakley was appointed to the U. S. Senate in 1957, he was a political unknown in Texas. But Washington awaited his arrival with great interest. So close was the party balance in the Senate that Blakley's vote was the difference between Democratic and Republican control.

True to his Democratic tradition, Bill Blakley voted with his fellow Democrats. They have been in control ever since.

Now Bill Blakley seeks his first elective term in the U. S. Senate. A vote for Blakley is a vote for sound, Democratic government.

LOCAL MAN GROWS HUGE CUCUMBER Perry Zapantis likes to grow things, and the little trailer home he and his wife occupy in south Rockport is reminiscent of the days before the Winter Garden and the Valley started to furnish early vegetables, and this little Coastal Bend city furnished vegetables and fruits to the nation. "I didn't know when I came here a couple of years ago from Houston whether things would grow in this sand or not," Perry said. "But look. These are casaba melons; these are Greek muskmelons, sweeter than any cantaloupe you ever ate. These are honey dews; these are Rocky Fords, and here are the watermelons," he continued, as he pointed out one sprawling vine after another. "These are kershaws over there," pointing out a deal that looked like a bunch of oversized dumbbells with one end cut off, "and they taste something like sweet potatoes, only better." But the pride of Perry's garden is his Greek cucumbers. He got the seed from a friend and planted them in the sandy loam on his lots, and they have really produced some extraordinary looking vegetables. Two of them were perfect circles, and grew that way because the winds moved the vines, Zapantis said. One of these circular vegetables (or fruits) was 4 1/2 inches long, from tip to tip; the second was a little over 52, and several reasonably straight ones measure 42 inches or more as they lay on the ground, still attached to the vine. They are ribbed, like a saguaro cactus; they are greenish white, and the outer rind is rather tender. They also make good salad, used just like more conventional varieties. "These are the kind that grow where I was born," Perry said. "I came from Cephalonia, in Greece, many years ago. That's the place where they had such bad earthquakes five years ago." Named after the great Greek sculptor and city planner, Pericles, who was responsible for much of the glory that was Greece in the times before Christ was born, Perry came to this country when he was just a young man, who had been trained as a wood carver and cabinet maker. However, he wasn't in America long before he joined the Army, and he served a year or so at Laredo, before he was discharged. He came to this country in 1916, and except for five years, has never been out of Texas again. Copelin, lot 5, block 5, Little Bay Shores. J. B. Carroll to A. F. Library (Continued from Page 1) six to nine hours a week, and the library is now open three afternoons each week: Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Operation is under the direction of the Woman's Club. Fifteen women have been trained to serve as librarians. In addition, Mrs. West said, a number of Girl Scouts are assisting in the summer months. All of these, including Mrs. West, serve without pay, for the good of the community. Mrs. West's report shows that the library received $600 from the United fund of Aransas County; $100 from the Commissioners' Court; took in $23 in fines, $20 in memorials, and $4.24 from the Woman's Club. In addition to the money spent for books, Mrs. West says, supplies have cost $21.60, book binding was $5, and the card catalog filing cabinet cost $63.35. The balance of this year's money on hand is adequate for the purchase of requested new books, new adult fiction, and new children's books for the remainder of the year, Mrs. West said, in submitting a proposed budget for 1959 of $850. Two hundred of this, the county librarian said, is for one item which is badly needed—a good encyclopedia, such as the Britannica. Otherwise, the proposed budget would provide approximately the same books and services as have been provided in 1958, and which have been used, not only by the townspeople but also by tourists who are delighted with the opportunity to borrow books. Lighting Planned (Continued from page 1) from Highway 35. At present, this is shell, and connects the Highway with one end of the runway leading from the North-South flight strip to the airport buildings. The old power room used during the war is still packed with equipment, according to Judge Wendell, and this week the commissioners authorized him to hire an electrical engineer to inspect this equipment, and to see how much of it could be utilized after overhaul. The commissioners are also considering expansion of the hangar facilities at the airport. According to Buster Coward, airport manager, these are inadequate, and the airport has lost much civilian business that it could have had otherwise, because there is no place to store more planes. Judge Wendell says that Coward and he between them have had at least 15 or 20 applications for more hangar space, if and when it becomes available. The buildings, if constructed, would be of the T-hangar type, and would be large enough to house twin engine planes, the Judge said. Preliminary sketches of this sort have been made for the Commissioners' Court, and they are studying the possibilities. There are more than 100 breeds of domesticated dogs.

Sure-footed Man Serves Texas

The colorful language of the ranch and trail seems to fit Bill Blakley, who made his start in life as a working cowhand. He still rides and ropes with the hands on his ranch at roundup time.

Speaking of Blakley's service as U. S. Senator in 1957, the Dallas News said: "... If he was as unassuming as an old boot, it was nevertheless a well polished boot that never wobbled or wavered from its purposeful path. For this man Blakley is a sure-footed man who knows exactly where he stands and what he believes."

Texasans will vote to return William A. Blakley to the Senate on July 26 because he truly represents the spirit, traditions and views of all Texas.

Descendant of Founder Here

Murray Eidson, of 529 Lincoln, Corpus Christi, who was in Rockport Monday, has two keepsakes of which he is very proud—a soldier's discharge from the Confederate States of America made out to his grandfather, James M. Doughty, and a faded photograph of the same gentleman, who was one of the partners that laid out the Doughty and Mathis subdivision in early Rockport, a pillar of the Fulton packing industry, and part owner of the first and only steam ferry ever to ply the waters of Aransas Bay, between Live Oak Point and Lamar.

Doughty was born in Tuscaloosa County, Alabama, back in 1824, and came to this part of the world in 1853, when his father and mother, Joseph and Mary, moved to Refugio with six of their seven sons, and a daughter, to be near another brother, Dan, a Mexican War soldier who had married Ellen Duggan.

Most of the Doughty boys became prominent in public affairs, and although James' discharge shows that he was a farmer at the time of his enlistment, in Captain M. M. Kenney's Company K of the 21st Texas Cavalry, he had also held various offices in Refugio County before that time, Eidson said.

Old records of Refugio County show that at various times he was a deputy sheriff, tax assessor-collector and sheriff, and when the first Refugio Court House was built, Doughty's name appears as one of the contractors who hauled shell for concrete and lumber for building from the landing at Old Copano, on the shores of the bay of the same name.

According to the discharge (which is suitable embellished with a cannon below the words "Confederate States of America") Doughty enlisted on September 20, 1864, "for three years during the war" and "served first on the western frontiers of Texas" and for the last eight months "in the provisional army" until, at the conclusion of the war he was "honorably discharged from the army of the Confederate States, having remained true to his colors to the last and having served faithfully and honorably."

Rockport was the work of many people, but Doughty was one of the chief among them.

Harry Traylor, Rockport historian, says that Doughty was operating a beef packery near Flour Bluff in the sixties, and that he asked Captain Charlie Dean to show him a site on Live Oak Peninsula that would be more suitable.

Dean took Doughty to the present site of the city, pointed out a rocky ledge about where the First National Bank now stands, saying that it had deep water alongside and was a suitable place to load boats, and Rockport was under way.

Doughty built the first cattle pens, warehouse and wharf at Rockport in 1866, the pens and warehouse being west of what later became the townsite. A year later he conveyed these properties to J. M. and T. H. Mathis, early settlers on Live Oak Peninsula, and three days later the Mathis cousins reconveyed an undivided one-third interest to Doughty, as a partner.

It was about this time, according to Eidson, that the Doughty and Mathis subdivision was laid out, as an adjunct to the townsite of Rockport, which the partners had surveyed and platted in 1867.

Doughty himself was one of Rockport's more influential citizens. He owned a packing plant located on the shell ridge south of town in partnership with A. W. Clarke. He had extensive real estate holdings with the Mathis cousins, and, in 1871, the three of them operated a steam ferry between Live Oak Point and Old Lamar.

However, the Mathis cousins disposed of a third of their interest in the wharves, warehouse and shipping facilities to Perry Dordridge and Captain Richard King, and a few years later Doughty himself sold out and went to work for King at the Santa Gertrudis headquarters of the King Ranch.

He was for long one of King's foremen and herd bosses on the drives to the Kansas railroads, and Mrs. Henrietta King had placed him in charge of the ranch during Captain King's last illness. After his death, he remained as Richard Kleberg's assistant and

People Ought to Do More Planning and Less Talking About Hurricanes Corpus Christi Weatherman Says on Visit Here

"People ought to do more planning and less talking about hurricanes," said Russell P. Mozeney, head of the Corpus Christi weather bureau, here to inspect weather equipment operated by Paul Clark Sorenson, official observer for Rockport.

"Since we can now forecast water heights with a good deal of accuracy, along with the wind strength to be expected, plans ought to be made that a community can follow in case of a tropical blow.

"I think six feet is your critical height in Rockport, but a lot of damage could be done if the tide reached four feet. The wave action would force water far inland here as well as at other places along the coast that are below that level.

"It depends on the storm, but generally we can give from 18 to 24 hours warning of any hurricane, and that ought to be enough. If the people at Cameron last year had headed the weather bureau, a lot of lives would have been saved."

Mozeney said that at the present time, every other day reconnaissance flights are made from the Navy base at Jacksonville, Florida, where special crews, planes and equipment are maintained for the purpose. These flights are to observe weather conditions over the Gulf of Mexico.

"The Weather Bureau gets few reports from ships in the western Gulf," the veteran meteorologist said, "and if we didn't have the reports from the planes we couldn't do nearly as good a job. And with their data, and what we have learned in the last few years, we can hit the water and tide heights very closely indeed."

Mozeney said that another great advance had been made in hurricane forecasting and warning, when the Air Defense command had given permission to the Weather Bureau to use the Conelrad (Control for Electro-Magnetic Radiations) warning system.

This is a little gadget that comes built in some radios, and that can be applied to the rest, that turns the radio up full blast to warn that a storm is on the way.

The radio is left on, but turned down so that it won't bother anyone. Then, if a storm comes up suddenly, or changes direction, the Weather Bureau can direct the various radio stations in the area to switch on their Conelrad warning, and the impulse from that turns the speaker on loudly enough to waken even the heaviest sleeper.

The Weather Bureau is recommending that everyone along the coast try to purchase radios equipped with this system whenever they buy sets, and that all law enforcement and emergency relief agencies equip themselves with similar sets.

Radio or TV service men can obtain information on this from the Weather Bureau or from their nearest radio or TV station, Mozeney said.

"Those Conelrads can be purchased," the weatherman said, "and they're inexpensive, but they're sure a necessity along the coast. They operated on a muted

Fisheries Exploration Continues in Gulf of Mexico for Fish Schools

Exploration for mid-water schools of fish in the Gulf of Mexico continues, according to the latest release by the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Harvey R. Bullis, Jr., in charge of Gulf commercial fisheries exploration and the M/V Oregon, says that during that vessel operated in the southern Gulf, from the northern coast of Yucatan to the Arcas Reef on the Campeche Banks, but that signs of fish were scant.

The heaviest concentrations of fish were found about 40 miles north of the Alacranes Reef, in 25 to 30 fathoms, where widespread schools were observed at night. Most of these were round herring and scad.

Further south, the Oregon found few traces of any such schools in mid water.

Heavy bottom schools were noted on the fish finder over most of the area, but could not be sampled with the trawl, and attempts to attract schools to night lights were unsuccessful.

The latter part of May, Bullis said, the Oregon operated in the northern Gulf, around the mouth of the Mississippi, and the northern end of Chandeleur Island. Again, only occasional schools of fish were found.

In both areas schools were seen on the recorders primarily at night.

Dallas' first building was one-room log cabin erected in 1841 by William Neely Bryan.
