We gathered at the County Barn at 6 p.m. for our regular July indoor picnic--since we are past the age to endure ants, flies and mosquitos. Hamburgers, salad and homemade ice cream were greatly enjoyed by all.

The music provided by Stratford's "Over the Hill Gang" plus a group of musicians from Boise City, Oklahoma--Clifford, Ben and others--lent a most enjoyable atmosphere to the meal and lasted long afterward. Thanks so much to all.

We are grateful to others who served our meal and to Howard, Baskin, and Darrel for the meat. All of you cause us to feel "loved and appreciated."

A cure for Bluebonnet plague

Bluebonnet Plague, a non-fatal but widely prevalent malady, afflicts many Texans when they attempt to grow the state flower. They sow seeds, but only reap frustration. Instead of beautiful patches of springtime blue, they just get the blues.

It can happen to anyone--regardless of age, sex, creed, social status or economic ability. The plague generally is caused by Bluebonnet seeds which do not germinate.

Now, there is a simple cure which works in nearly all parts of Texas--scarified seeds.

These are Bluebonnet seeds which have been scratched (scarified), either mechanically or by tumbling in a cement mixer with sharp sand. This process abrades the hard seed coat and allows moisture to penetrate to the embryo, triggering fast germination.

And when seeds sprout quickly, they generally produce bigger plants and more flowers for a longer period of time in the spring.

You can scarify your own seed by rubbing them between two sheets of sandpaper, or a pair of bricks, or against a piece of screen wire. The process and benefits of scarification have been long known to plant scientists, but scratched seed have been available to the general public only for the past couple of years. If you can't find them at your own garden center, you can order them by mail from Carroll Abbott's Green Horizons, 500 Thompson Drive, Kerrville TX 78028.

Abbott used to be the state's only fulltime wildflower seed and plant collector, but he has spent most of the past year fighting lung cancer. His health continues to improve, but the ravages of the treatments have limited his activities. Abbott's mail-order firm offers the scarified Bluebonne seeds on a first-come, first-serve basis.

He believes that Bluebonnets--which are a cool-weather legume--should be planted in the late summer and early fall for the best showing in the following spring. They must have a sunny location in a soil which is neutral to slightly alkaline.

Agent's office or your favorite nurservman how to make it sweeter. Bluebonnets in acid soil will turn yellow, curl up and die in the seedling stage.

Cover Bluebonnet seeds lightly--if they are buried more than a half-inch deep, they have difficulty in germinating--and firm up the seedbed. You can do this by pressing the soil with a lawn-roller, or you can simply walk gently over it. A firm seedbed makes for better germination. Water gently, but thoroughly. If it doesn't rain within a week after sowing, water some more. Bluebonnet seeds will start sprouting within a few days and will continue for many weeks to come.

The seedlings look like two fat little watermelons. They will provide a feast for sow bugs (pill bugs) if you do not dust the seedbed with an all-purpose insecticide. The insects can wipe out a planting overnight.

Bluebonnets are bright and fragrant and they make excellent cut flowers. It is not against any law to pick Bluebonnets on private property.

During the winter and early spring, Bluebonnets form rosettes of leaves which hug the ground. They are difficult to see sometimes, since they are only an inch high. When the warmth of spring arrives, the rosettes will send up blooming spikes.

Students experience creativity in several areas

A week at the West Texas State University Gifted and Talented Institute has given 69 area elementary and junior high school students the opportunity to experience creativity in several areas through individualized attention.

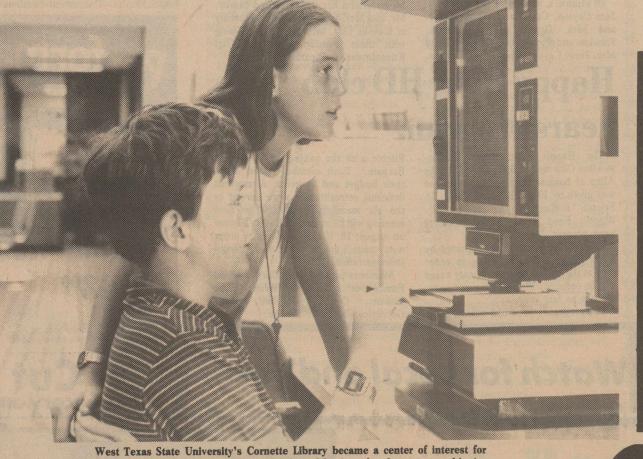

Participating in the summer Gifted and Talented Institute from Stratford were Gary Laramore, Marcus Reinart and Beny Shuping.

WTSU's program of academic offerings to area children who have been identified by school districts as gifted and talented has been conducted through the academic year. This is the first year for the student to spend a week on campus.

The students participated in daily classes in English, science, creative dramatics, art, music and physical education. They lived in a campus resident hall and ate meals at the dining hall. They interacted with WTSU students attending the first summer session.

Each student received a certificate which included a comment concerning each child, said Mary Jane Reeves, who coordinates the program. WTSU's Program has been funded through a grant by the Rockwell Inc. of Houston. She said that faculty members visited with parents at the banquet which concluded the week about various talents exhibited by the students.

WTSU plans to continue Saturday sessions during the fall semester, said Reeves, and the success of the week this
