An artist and his wife came to visit us over the weekend, and wanted to roam around the countryside looking for interesting houses to paint.

We loaded them up and set off, with a hearty promise that they would be well supplied with almost any variety of barn, house or farm ever found in the area.

In doing so, it brought home that much of what we take for granted as abandoned buildings rotting away is actually a wealth of documented. un-

By dark, the poor couple were almost overwhelmed by the variety, age and number of structures they had seen.

We had shown them examples of plantation style buildings, with stores, big houses, small share cropper houses, barns and silos.

They had found a "steamboat" house in the best victorian tradition, and a log barn.

Classic east Texas farmhouses with dog walks, verandas, gingerbread work or long porches were almost too numerous to photograph.

Sadly, a number of the buildings were in the process of falling down or being town down.

Happily, a number are also carefully kept, painted, repaired and cherished.

Nothing expressed the history of an area better than not just the unusual or large structures of the wealthy, but the small, every-day homes that sheltered families that lived on the land.

They are out there, ready for a pleasant evenings drive, gracefully fading away...a true picture of what our land looked like back in the days of our grandparents, greatgrandparents...and on back.

THE SINGLE VISION LENS

When most people get their first pair of eyeglasses or contact lenses, more often than not they're made with single-vision lenses. This doesn't mean they can see only in one direction. Nor at only one distance. The "single" stands for just one set of optical corrections in the lens.

The single-vision lens can be for reading or for seeing at a distance. It all depends on the problem that needs correcting.

Nearsighted people need help in seeing things at a distance. Farsighted people may need help seeing objects near-by. People who have an astigmatism need help in both directions. Their eyes have two points of focus in-
