A Strategic Air Command B-52 Stratofortress will kick-off tomorrow's open house and air show with a fly-by at 10 a.m. The B-52 has been the workhorse of the Air Force's strategic bombing force for three decades. The "heir apparent" to the B-52's strategic role, the B-1 Peacekeeper will be among the many military and civilian aircraft on static display during the open house. (U.S. Air Force photo)

Base set for open house tomorrow

The Reese open house salute to the South Plains will get underway with a roar here tomorrow morning.

That's the roar of eight turbojet engines producing more than 130,000 pounds of thrust. Strategic Air Command's veteran B-52 Stratofortress will officially open tomorrow's open house and air show with a fly-by at 10 a.m.

And that's just the beginning.

Reese officials have lined up a day full of activities, including aerial demonstrations by an AV-8 Harrier and an F-15 Eagle. There will also be an Air Training Command fly-by of Reese aircraft. It won't just be the "big" planes flying. The Lubbock Radio Control Club will show what models can do at 11 a.m.

And all of this leads up to the day's main attraction — the Thunderbirds.

The U.S. Air Force's official flying ambassadors will begin their show with the traditional launch ceremony at 2 p.m. Then it's up, up and away as the Thunderbirds perform a series of maneuvers demonstrating the aerial combat capabilities of Air Force fighters and pilots. During some of these maneuvers the Thunderbirds will pilot their F-16 Fighting Falcons at speeds up to 650 miles per hour.

Following the show the Thunderbirds will be available for autographs and to answer questions.

All of the action isn't in the air.

There will be more than 30 military and civilian aircraft on static display throughout the open house. There will also be a variety of exhibits on display in Hangar 82.

Food and souvenirs will be available at a variety of concession booths.

For a complete schedule of events, exhibits and static displays see the special open house section of today's paper.

Reese personnel inviting friends from the community to the open house should urge them to arrive early, note open house officials. People intending to attend the open house should plan on arriving before noon, preferably as close to 10 a.m. as possible.

Appointments

AF chief of staff authorizes revisions

After discussions with major air command commanders, Gen. Larry Welch, Air Force chief of staff, approved several revisions to the Line of the Air Force Regular Appointment program.

The revisions, which are a part of ongoing Officer Professional Development initiatives, affect the number and timing of regular Air Force augmentation boards and augmentation rates.

Effective immediately, the Regular Air Force Appointment program is decoupled from captain promotion boards.

In the past, Reserve line officers have been considered for regular appointment in conjunction with the captain board and after their fifth and seventh years of commissioned service.

In the future, Reserve line officers will meet a single regular Air Force board before their eighth year of commissioned service.

The next regular Air Force board is tentatively scheduled to convene during the fall of 1989. However, the officers meeting this board, Reserve officers commissioned in 1983, will have previously been considered for regular Air Force in conjunction with their captain board. The same situation will exist with the 1984 and 1985 year groups.

The 1986 year group will meet the fiscal year 1992 regular Air Force board and will be the first group of Reserve officers to receive a single regular Air Force consideration.

Selection opportunities will be established based on force structure requirements. Separate announcements regarding changes affecting the non-line regular Air Force augmentation will be forthcoming.

Regular appointments for military academy graduates and distinguished graduates from the Reserve Officer Training Corps and Officer Training School remain unchanged.

For more information, contact SSgt. Mike Gaydos, 3823.

Commander's Perspective

Reese spirit

First off, I want to thank everyone at Reese for the warm welcome and continuing hospitality you have given me and my family since our arrival six weeks ago.

I have spent much of my time during the past several weeks traveling around the base, meeting and talking with many of you and visiting many of the facilities where you work and recreate yourselves. Without reservation, I can truly say that there is a special spirit here at Reese—let's call it the Reese spirit.

I see it everywhere—the pride you have in our mission and your role in its success, the facilities you work in, live in and relax in, the enthusiasm with which you go about your duties, the "can do" attitude, the courtesies you display for your fellow workers and the special bond you have with the people of Lubbock and the surrounding communities.

I also see the Reese spirit in your desire to make our base an even better place to work and rear our families. Many of you have suggested ways we can improve life here at Reese, particularly with respect to expanded services and hours of operation of our morale, welfare and recreation programs.

I am pleased to say that we are moving out on some of your suggestions.

- The Officers' Open Mess is now open at lunch for NCOs and civilian equivalents and above.
- The MWR logistics (camping supplies/garden tools) is now open Saturday mornings.
- The new Civil Engineering "Pride" store (self help) is also open Saturday mornings.
- The child development center will be open Friday evenings until midnight starting tonight.
- Beginning in May, the OOM will begin a Sunday Brunch, once a month, open to all Reese personnel (don't forget the Easter brunch and the Mother's Day brunch).

• The youth center is expanding their programs to include gymnastics lessons.

• The enlisted club will soon undergo a major renovation as will the snack bar at our Windmill Bowling Center and the arts and crafts facility. Also, ground breaking for the new auto hobby shop is only a few months away.

I have scheduled a town meeting on the evening of May 4th to allow everyone the opportunity to give us your thoughts on how we can make Reese even better.

Air base group is primarily a service organization. I am proud to be the commander of a group of folks who are committed to providing each of you at Reese with the quality of life you so richly deserve.

Tax Tips

No advantage to separate return

By Base Legal Office

In almost all situations, married taxpayers will pay more tax if they file separate returns instead of a joint return. There are several factors that need to be taken into account when considering filing separate returns.

The tax rate itself is higher for married persons filing separately. Also, if one spouse itemizes their deductions, the other spouse must do the same as no standard deduction would be allowed. Further disadvantages are the loss of any child care credit, Earned Income credit and credits for the elderly or disabled.

The greatest disadvantage of filing separate returns comes if a taxpayer is domiciled in a community property state. In this case income is considered community property and is divided equally between both spouses. For example, if one spouse makes $10,000 and the other earns $50,000, each would be taxed on $30,000 of income on a separate return. The tax would be calculated at a higher rate than on a joint return showing $60,000. Texas is a community property state, as are Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Washington and Wisconsin. If you are domiciled in one of these states, you must take community property laws into consideration when you decide what filing status to use on your tax return. Contact your Unit Tax Advisor if you need more information on this matter.

It is also important to note that married taxpayers can file a joint return even if they have lived apart all year or even if they married on Dec. 31 of the tax year. Separated but not divorced taxpayers who cannot or do not want to file a joint may qualify to file under 'Head of Household' status. See your tax booklet, IRS publication 17, or you unit advisor for more information about his possibility.

Remember that when determining whether you are eligible for Earned Income Credit, you MUST include all nontaxable benefits paid to you such as BAQ, BAS, VHA, or the value of Base Housing in your earned income. If you otherwise qualify for EIC but these nontaxable amounts put your earned income above the limits, you must write NEI by line 23b of Form 1040A or line 56 of Form 1040. If you do not do this and the IRS figures the credit for you and adds it to your refund, you should file an amended return (1040X) and repay the additional refund. If you don't do this by the filing deadline (April 17, 1989), you will then become liable for penalties and interest.

To insure or not

More than a few military members were recently identified as having operated their automobiles without insurance. Most will have purchased coverage at one point, to get the vehicle registered, but then allow the policy to expire. This is not a great way to save money.

It only takes a momentary lapse behind the wheel of an automobile and a life's savings can evaporate. Even if the individual is not at fault, the other driver might see it that way.

It is also a crime—a class C misdemeanor and potential Article 15. It doesn't take an auto accident to get caught. Texas Law requires proof of insurance as a condition to driving. A law enforcement officer can ask for proof if he stops someone for speeding, defective equipment or something else. If the policy has expired, the insurance company must report it if notified by the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Also, base driving privileges are lost. The base decal and tabs will be removed from the car and the member will walk or ride on base with someone else. Off base privileges (driver's license and vehicle registration) can be suspended by the courts on a second conviction.

Insurance premiums may be high on a vehicle, but it beats the alternatives. The alternatives are: get caught without insurance—gamble on getting civil litigation, criminal charges and lost privileges; or deposit $55,000 in cash or securities with the State Treasurer in lieu of insurance.

Another idea is to buy uninsured motorist coverage, because someone else might be taking the risk of being uninsured.

CARELINE

The CARELINE is prepared by Col. Monroe S. Sams Jr., 64th Flying Training Wing Commander, on a weekly basis. All information provided to the CARELINE will be held in strict confidence. Callers are urged to give their names and duty telephone numbers so that a personal reply may be made; however, neither are mandatory. Callers should use the CARELINE only after all possible means to air their views or complaints through the chain of command have been exhausted. The CARELINE number is 885-3273.

Street delay

I would like to know why it takes so long for the contractors to repair the streets on base. The streets have been messed up for over eight months. It doesn't take them that long downtown.

I appreciate the inconvenience suffered by yourself, and all base personnel, due to the closing of the streets for construction. The contractors were given authorization to start work on both the D Street and 2nd and F Street projects about five months ago. These projects involve completely rebuilding the streets as opposed to just "patching" them, and this extensive work takes time. Inclement weather occurring near completion of the projects, and additional required work, delayed the project's completion date. The D Street project is now complete and 2nd Street is also open. F Street and some repairs to the gym parking lot will be finished shortly. Thank you for your interest.

Clothing allowance

I would like to know, since clothing sales does not sell fatigues, if it is possible that we get a bigger clothing allowance due to the cost of the Battle

Dress Uniforms?

I realize the BDU's are very expensive, however, we've been told that the Air Force Uniform Board considered this additional cost when they raised the clothing allowances at the beginning of fiscal year 1989. The allowance was increased by $36 for males and $32.40 for females.

Gym water

Every time I take a shower at the gym, a "substance" gets in the shower water whenever someone flushes the toilet.

The environmental branch of 64th Civil Engineering Squadron investigated the condition and found no problem. Samples of the shower water have been taken to ensure that there is no danger to personnel.

Conservation vital to offset energy cost hikes

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

Fossil fuels — coal, liquid petroleum and natural gas — are nothing more than the remains of plants and animals buried in the sand, swamps and seas millions of years ago. But those resources play a very important part in everyone's life. They power automobiles, light homes and offices, regulate temperatures and are vital to any nation's defense.

While countries around the globe currently hold vast reserves of fossil fuels, that most certainly will not be the case in the future. Simply put, those fossil fuels will run out, something DoD planners must take into account.

In the early 1980s, known world reserves of petroleum were estimated at 670 billion barrels — about 33 times the yearly world consumption.

The United States — the largest consumer of refined petroleum products in the world — depends on foreign sources for between one-fourth and one-half of its petroleum needs. Domestic reserves in the country would last only five years, said a DoD official.

Unfortunately, the memories associated with the most recent energy crisis — remember the long gasoline lines at the service stations in 1973-1974 and the high heating bills of the period? — are beginning to dull.

They shouldn't, according to Department of Defense officials. Although DoD's energy consumption is enormous — 2 percent of all the energy consumed in the United States and 80 percent of all energy used in the federal government — energy conservation programs in the last 10 years have saved the department upwards of $4 billion.

Reese has been among the Air Force leaders in conservation efforts, capturing the Air Training Command Energy Management Incentive Award in the small unit division for the past two years.

While the news about energy conservation in the DoD is encouraging, recent studies show that the country is not paying as much attention to conservation as it once did. It's probably a good idea — for individuals and the country — to look at home and at work and do the little things that can add up to big savings, both in energy and money.

Conserving energy wasn't always a big deal. Long before 1000 BC the Chinese were drilling for natural gas and transporting it via bamboo shoots to heat and illuminate the palaces of emperors. In those days, natural gas was plentiful and free, so consumption was not a problem.

Not so today. It is costly and the need to adopt conservation measures grows with each passing year. Even though Reese is one of the top energy conservationists in the Air Force, the gas and electricity energy bill here for fiscal year 1988 still topped $2 million, said Pat Sanderson, 64th Civil Engineering Squadron financial manager.

To help hold down costs, energy experts recommend setting thermostats at 78 degrees in the summer and 68 degrees during the colder months to conserve energy and save money. The cost of keeping room temperatures above 68 degrees in the winter can be as high as 63 percent more for a thermostat set at 80 degrees. The same is true for cooling a room at 72 degrees during the summer.

Other home energy savings include:

- Lowering the water heater thermostat to 110 degrees.
- Using fluorescent lighting when possible because it uses less energy.
- Turning off lights when they aren't needed and putting outdoor lights on a timer.
- Washing only full loads of clothes and only in warm or cold water. Be sure the lint screen and outside exhaust of the dryer are both clean.
- Sealing, sealing, sealing. If the water heater, windows, doors or anything else in the home leaks, seal it to prevent drafts and higher energy costs.

Drinker's Special

A real traffic stopper. No one will pass you as you experience the satin smooth ride of this custom fitted vehicle. Standard equipment includes six chauffeurs. This model is in heavy demand among drinkers and speeders. Transportation provided to the dealer at no additional charge.

ATC directs 'lights on' day

Air Training Command officials have designated March 31 as "Lights on for Safety Day" throughout ATC and are asking everyone to drive with their automobile headlights on this day.

The theme for the occasion is "Don't Be Fooled, Be Seen," and its purpose is twofold: To increase awareness and to remind people of those command members who have been injured or who have died in traffic-related accidents.

Since November 1988, six ATC people have died and one sustained permanent serious injuries as a result of auto mishaps.

According to ATC safety officials, three of the six fatalities were attributed to drinking and driving, which continues to be the number one killer of Air Force people. Other common denominators include excessive speed and failure to wear safety belts.

Safety officials are determined to turn the trend around and remind all drivers that as the spring season and good driving weather nears, so does risk on the highways.

"We have to promote a strong and continuous safety awareness program for our people," said Lt. Col. Gene Uptegraph, ATC safety director. "We have a defensive attitude on the job but we need to focus on the off-duty environment as well. Remember, 'Don't Be Fooled, Be Seen.' Drive with your lights on March 31." (ATCNS)

FSC schedules special seminar

Military, civilians and families affected by maintenance conversion are encouraged to attend a seminar April 4, 10 a.m. and 7 p.m. at the Mathis Recreation Center.

According to Judy Bellenger, director, Family Support Center, the seminar will offer first hand information about the conversion from conversion group representatives and key maintenance personnel. "The main focus is to dispel rumors and keep all personnel accurately informed," she said.

The seminar will offer a question and answer session and a guest speakers in areas of family services, housing, personnel issues, stress, assignments and other maintenance conversion related areas.

In addition, Family Services offers various household items for check out to members who are preparing for a move. They also have brochures on U.S. and overseas Air Force bases, and some Army and Navy installations.

For more information, call Judy Bellenger, 3305.

Five earn E-8 stripes

Four Reese master sergeants have been selected for senior master sergeant, announced the Consolidate Base Personnel Office yesterday.

Selectees are: Julus H. Hollie, 64th Civil Engineering Squadron; Marvin C. Brewer and Roy G. Prince assigned to the 3500th Mission Support Squadron; and Michael T. Galvin, assigned to the 1958th Communications Squadron.

There were 77 Reese master sergeants eligible for promotion, which gives Reese a 5.2 percent selection rate.

Air Training Command had 2,044 master sergeants eligible. One hundred seventy eight were selected for a 7.78 percent selection rate.

Air Force wide, 25,733 master sergeants were eligible, with 2,255 selected for a 8.76 percent selection rate.

Last year, 1,290 of an eligible 22,934 Air Force members were selected during cycle 1989S8 for a selection rate of 5.6 percent.

AF Top NCO: getting the word to the flightline

By Sgt. Maj. Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

When James C. Binnicker's tenure as the ninth chief master sergeant of the Air Force is over, he wants to leave this legacy:

"Whatever I decided to do was done with the troops in mind;

"Whatever we did was good for the Air Force and not for a particular group or individual;

"Integrity was the byword;

"Credibility was real; and

"I had a genuine concern."

In explaining his duties and responsibilities, Binnicker said, "For the record, it's written down that you advise the chief of staff on enlisted matters. After 31 years, I've got an opinion on everything, and I could sit right here in this office and give advice, without ever traveling or talking to another person. That wouldn't be fair to the chief of staff of the Air Force, nor to the troops because his (the chief of staff's) decision could be influenced by my opinion. So what I bring to this position is not only 31 years of experience, but the opinions, attitudes and feelings of the enlisted people around the world."

Communications Gap

Binnicker wasn't armed with a list of changes he wanted to make when he took the reins of his position in 1986. But there is something that still disturbs him—a communication gap between headquarters and the troops. With a disappointed tone, Binnicker said, "We can't seem to get the word to the troops on the flight line. Once you explain something that has caused people to be upset, they say, 'Oh, now I understand,' and walk away wondering why somebody else didn't explain it before."

Keeping the troops and their families informed about what the leadership in Washington, D.C., is doing on their behalf is one of his greatest challenges as he sees it.

"In general, we've got an outstanding system, and we take very good care of our people," noted Binnicker. "I've been trying to ensure that our system works at 100 percent peak efficiency. Whether it's on a small isolated mountaintop or a large base in Texas, our people should find similar standards of living wherever they might be."

Need for More Housing

Binnicker is adamant about the need for better housing for married and single airmen. "The tragic thing is, young troops are getting married just to get out of the dormitories," he said. "Single people should have the kind of quarters

"Today, we have the highest quality Air Force we've ever had," said Binnicker. "And we've got to keep it."

that would make them want to stay in. We've spent millions of dollars improving our barracks, and they're absolutely beautiful—state of the art. But there are still two people living in a 180-square-foot room.

"Going into the 21st century, quality of life is a must. We must provide better quarters for our single troops living in the barracks. We can't continue putting two people in a 180-square-foot room and ask them to share a bathroom with other people, either down the hall or next door."

His concern encompasses married airmen, too, particularly younger enlisted personnel. "We have married E-1s, E-2s and E-3s who can't get into our quarters (on base)," said the Orangeburg, S.C., native. "I'm not saying change the policy. That would kick the senior folks out in favor of the junior folks. But I would like to see some kind of small efficiency-style apartments, condos, townhouses, cottages or whatever designed for that age group of married people.

"They need quarters badly," he emphasized. "As long as we let married people come into the military or let them get married in that age bracket, we should take care of them."

Improvements in quality-of-life issues always top the agenda when Binnicker and his counterparts from the other services testify before congressional committees. He tells Congress that retention is so good in the Air Force that it has created promotion problems. But it will not remain that way if benefits are eroded.

Retention is Good, But...

In elaborating on retention, Binnicker said, "We have some job specialties that we've historically had problems with. They're the high-tech, high-demand jobs—aviatics and engineer-type positions—where expensive training is required. People in those jobs tend to go out quickly. We can't compete with industry."

The presidential commission on military compensation study that Binnicker participated in found that people with higher education are less likely to be motivated by bonuses to stay in the military. "Bonuses will help them make the decision to stay, but you've got to provide quality-of-life programs that make it more conducive to stay in," Binnicker explained. "If a person is happy with his job, responsibilities and quality of life, we'll be more successful in keeping him."

"Today, we have the highest quality Air Force we've ever had," said Binnicker. "And we've got to keep it."

Medical Care Problems

Binnicker goes to wherever troops are stationed worldwide to keep them abreast of policies and discuss their concerns. "The kinds of issues that come up most are living conditions and a lack of medical care in some areas where they're forced to use CHAMPUS (Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services), which is a costly process for young people," he said. "Medical care is a burning issue. We've got the greatest doctors in the world; it's just that in a lot of cases, you can't get to them. And there are not enough of them."

Bush calls for defense spending freeze

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Information Service

President George Bush presented his fiscal 1990 and 1991 budget to Congress and asked that defense spending be limited to fiscal 1989 levels plus inflation.

This will mean a defense budget in fiscal 1990 of $299.3 billion, down from the $305.6 billion request made by the Reagan administration. The fiscal 1989 estimate of military spending is $289.8 billion.

According to Dan McIntyre, wing comptroller, the estimated FY-90 budget for Reese is approximately $36 million.

The proposed freeze will be for one year, with increases proposed in fiscal 1991, 1992 and 1993. Bush said that he would not sacrifice

American preparedness or compromise strength.

"We have been fortunate in these last eight years," he told Congress. "America is a stronger nation than it was in 1980.

"Morale in our armed forces is restored. Our resolve has been shown. Our readiness has been improved. And we are at peace.

"There can no longer be any doubt that peace has been made secure through strength," he continued. "When America is stronger, the world is safer."

Officials at the Pentagon said that within 60 days, the secretary of defense will provide details on specific programs to be cut to meet the fiscal 1990 and 1991 budget limits. A spokesman said DoD fully supports the president's budget request and will work to ensure the cuts are made without endangering America's defense posture.

In light of the defense freeze, Bush said he is asking the National Security Council staff to review defense policies "to ensure that our capabilities and resources meet our commitments and strategies."

Bush also asked Congress for multiyear procurement authority, a two-year budget cycle and legislation that will enable DoD to implement the Packard Commission recommendations.

Other proposals in the president's budget include:

- A 2 percent pay raise for civilians and 3.8 percent for the military.
- A one-year freeze in cost-of-living allowances for civil service and military retirees.

Defense as a Share of Federal Outlays

• More money for cleanup at the Energy Department's nuclear weapons plants.

The proposed federal budget is $1.16 trillion. The changes proposed by Bush will enable his administration to meet deficit reduction targets

Budget cuts are dangerous, warns Welch

Reduced budgets in the next few years will severely constrain future Air Force capability, the service's senior leaders told Congress Feb. 28.

Today's Air Force, however, "is better manned, equipped and prepared than at any time in history," Chief of Staff Gen. Larry Welch and Acting Secretary James McGovern told the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense.

The two noted that funding in the first half of the decade allowed the Air Force to "redress shortfalls in readiness, sustainability and force structure that developed during the 1970s."

They stressed that budget reductions in the last four years, and the prospect of future cuts, "have forced us to scale back, stretch out and cancel many programs."

"The cumulative effect of these reductions and the markedly reduced budget levels for fiscal years 1990 and 1991, if continued, will severely constrain future capability. The result will be greater risk in deterring aggression around the globe," they noted.

General Welch and Secretary McGovern said the service has opted for a reduced force structure that maintains capabilities "to avoid the hollow force structure of the 1970s."

The two leaders said the Air Force's top priority is to recruit, train, motivate and retain quality people. Other priorities include modernization of strategic and tactical forces, maintaining high levels of readiness and sustainability, increased airlift, and space operations.

"We recognize that high-quality people are needed to exploit the capabilities of this high technology," General Welch and Secretary McGovern said.

"People make the difference between success and failure, and this is why we place the highest priority on recruiting, retaining and motivating young people," they said, adding that people represent the "foundation of our warfighting capability and serve as the key factor in our deterrence equation."

The two asked Congress to approve the proposed 3.6 percent military pay increase for fiscal year 1990 as a part of a competitive compensation package. They also sought support for adequate government quarters allowances or full entitlement to variable housing allowances, appropriate permanent-change-of-station reimbursements and quality health care.

"Without such basic entitlements, we will see a decline in the success of our recruiting efforts in the competitive marketplace," General Welch and Secretary McGovern told the lawmakers.

They noted that there is a serious decline in pilot retention rates, from a high of 78 percent in fiscal year 1983 to 43 percent at the end of fiscal 1988.

"Last year we lost nearly 800 more pilots than we produced, and the pilot retention forecast for fiscal year 1989 falls well short of the 63 percent retention rate we need to maintain a healthy, experienced force," they said.

The new aviator continuation pay bonus, the two leaders said, is a near-term fix. They urged Congress to adjust aviation career incentive pay to "restore the purchasing power lost since it was last raised in 1981."

The two leaders also proposed:

- Rail-garrison basing for the Peacekeeper intercontinental ballistic missile.

- Deployment of the B-2 penetrating bomber and transition of the B-52H force to a standoff cruise missile role.

- Procurement of the C-17 cargo aircraft.

- Continuing development of the advanced tactical fighter and further production of the advanced medium-range air-to-air missile.

- Additional procurement of the multi-role F-16 and development of a follow-on to the A-10 close support aircraft.

- Full exploitation of space-based capabilities within the constraints of technology, policy and cost-effectiveness. (AFNS)

Officials outline cordon rules

With upcoming exercises, Reese members are reminded that during a simulated emergency situation or real situation base officials will cordon off certain areas. These areas are cordoned off for a reason. If a member passes through the cordon, they could be in extreme danger and possibly hinder rescue operations. Also, the area is secured prior to investigation to preserve any needed information.

When driving up to a cordon area, do not pass unless authorized by the Security Police. If the Security Police or cordon guard gives directions, follow them immediately.

In addition, if a Reese member or civilian comes up to a cordon area, they may be asked to give assistance or act as a temporary cordon guard.

For more information, call SMSgt. Darrell Johnson, 3612.

ROTC cadets at Texas Tech participate in Air Force pilot screening program

Nearly 200 Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps cadets will be given a chance to earn private pilot's licenses in a new program designed to screen pilot candidates.

The Private Pilot License Screening Program, scheduled to begin June 1, will determine whether cadets have the necessary flying aptitude to successfully complete undergraduate pilot training.

Fifty AFROTC detachments have been chosen to participate in the program. AFROTC Detachment 820 cadets at Texas Tech University are eligible for this program.

AFROTC has a goal of 850 pilot candidates for 1990. Since the Flight Screening Program at Hondo, Texas, is capable of screening a maximum of 500 cadets each summer, a contract for an additional screening site would be required.

The new screening program eliminates this need and at the same time provides additional flying time, culminating in a private pilot's license at virtually the same cost per cadet.

The program consists of a private pilot license course of instruction, including ground school.

Flight schools near AFROTC units will provide a maximum of 48.2 hours of flight training, which will include a maximum of 25 hours of dual instruction, at least 20 hours of solo flight lessons, and up to 3.2 hours for completing the Federal Aviation Administration final checkride.

In addition, the local contractor will provide associated flight training materials, books and checklists.

According to Lt. Col. Tom Shaughnessy, chief of the plans and programs division at ROTC, "Statistics indicate that cadets with private pilots licenses have a higher success rate at UPT."

For more information, contact Terry Boksen at AFROTC/PA, AUTOVON 875-2825.

TAC Day

Reese gets look at combat aircraft

Reese student pilots and instructors interested in an assignment with Tactical Air Command will get a chance to see what TAC is all about here today.

TAC day is held annually to familiarize the Reese community, especially students and instructor pilots, with the aircraft and mission of TAC.

TAC aircraft and crews will arrive at Reese between 8 a.m. and noon today.

The TAC pilots will brief Reese Undergraduate Pilot Training students and their spouses in the base theater at 2 p.m. Instructors interested in TAC assignments may also attend.

Following the briefing, various TAC aircraft will be on static display from 3 to 5 p.m.

Eleven TAC aircraft will be on static display here today and tomorrow.

For a complete list see the static display schedule on page 17 of the special open house section.

In addition, there will be an aerial demonstration of the F-15 during tomorrow's open house.

All Reese personnel are invited to visit the static displays.

F-15 Featured

MWR sponsors monthly military heritage quiz

Morale, Welfare and Recreation launches its monthly history quiz this week, offering an MWR recreation award booklet to the most knowledgeable respondent.

Once each month the Roundup will publish a list of ten multiple-choice, military history questions. In case of a tie, there will also be a tiebreaker question.

The MWR booklet winners receive contains coupons good for a variety of MWR activities, including bowling, golf, swimming and child care. It also has coupons for recreational supply and the auto hobby shop. Overall, the booklet is good for more than $25 worth of activities.

The contest is open to all people associated with Reese.

To enter, Reese people may either fill in the blanks on the quiz form or simply write down the answers on a plain sheet of paper and send through distribution to: the Roundup, Public Affairs, Stop 9, or drop entries off at the Public Affairs office in Bldg. 800.

All entries for this week's quiz must be in by 3 p.m., March 28. The answers and winner will be announced in the March 31 issue of the Roundup.

The monthly quiz is being sponsored by MWR in order to promote understanding of America's military heritage.

OMS makes charge, closes on leaders

The 64th Organizational Maintenance Squadron swept all three of its matches last week to raise its record to 4-1 and stay within striking distance of unbeaten American Division leader — 64th Field Maintenance Squadron.

In the National circuit, the 3500th Mission Support Squadron upset the 63th Student Squadron, 15-11 and 15-8, to keep contact with the unbeaten 35th Flying Training Squadron-A.

OMS opened the week with a 15-0 and 15-10 win over the 35th FTS-B and followed with a 14-6 and 15-6 defeat of Resource Management. OMS closed out the week by rallying past the Civil Engineers, 11-9, 11-15 and 13-11.

In other league matches: the 64th Security Police beat RM, 8-15, 15-0 and 15-6; Sturon downed Services, 15-11 and 15-12; the 35th FTS-A stopped Hospital A, 15-8 and 15-12; Hospital-B lost to Hospital-A, 12-14, 15-4 and 15-9; the 54th FTS-B forfeited to FMS; and the 35th FTS-A bested MSS, 15-7 and 15-7.

In games Tuesday night, Hospital-B beat the 1958th Communications Squadron, 13-8 and 15-10, and Services lost to the 54th FTS-A, 9-5 and 15-6.

The standings through Tuesday night are:

American Division
FM	4 - 0
OMS	4 - 1
Hospital-B	2 - 3
RM	1 - 2
35th FTS-B	1 - 2
54th FTS-B	1 - 2
Sturon	1 - 2
Services	0 - 3

National
35th FTS-A	4 - 0
MSS	3 - 1
54th FTS-A	2 - 1
Hospital-A	2 - 2
SP	2 - 2
Comm	1 - 3
CE	1 - 3
