Three MAJCOMs will merge into two

In a move that rivals the founding of the Air Force in 1947, three major commands will be combined into two as the Air Force continues to assess its requirements in terms of their contributions to global missions.

Air Force Secretary Donald B. Rice announced plans Sept. 17 to restructure the Tactical Air Command, Strategic Air Command and the Military Airlift Command into two new commands — one to provide worldwide airlift and tanker support and the other to project aerial firepower, where and when needed.

“Global Reach-Global Power” reflects a renaissance in airpower thinking that began at the end of the Cold War, triumphed in the gulf war, and matters more to the future each day,” Secretary Rice told a luncheon audience of 2,000 at the annual Air Force Association convention.

“It makes sense, from warfighting and management standpoints, to assess our requirements, programs, resource allocation, training, operations and organization in terms of what they contribute to global reach and global power missions,” Secretary Rice said.

Made public on the eve of the Air Force’s 44th anniversary, the restructuring of SAC, TAC and MAC is the most dramatic and sweeping change in the service’s history. “The restructure will strengthen the Air Force’s peacetime efficiency and wartime clout,” the secretary said.

The MAJCOM change comes as operations at the wing level are also being assessed. “One wing, one base and one boss” is the concept behind significant changes planned for wing-level operations as the Air Force continues its quest for economical, more practical ways of doing business, the Air Force chief of staff said Sept. 18.

Reese is four months into a reorganization test aimed at improving efficiency, thus providing the taxpayer with “more bang for the buck.”

The latest reshuffling of people and equipment is rooted in the Pentagon’s current defense budget request calling for a smaller military in the 1990s and beyond. Additionally, restructuring is needed to counter a changing international environment, especially the far-reaching reforms under way in the Soviet Union.

Aside from the major command restructuring, other changes in store for the Air Force include cutting headquarters staffs, eliminating air divisions, and overhauling of the way Air Force wings do business.

“We’re going to reduce headquarters everywhere. You can take that to the bank,” Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Merrill A. McPeak said at a press conference following the announcement.

“It’s started already. We are beginning to already move forces around in a way that is consistent with the secretary’s vision of creating a global reach command and a global power command,” McPeak said.

Although the two new commands have yet to be named, the Air Force is referring to them as the Air Mobility Command and the Air Combat Command. Air Mobility Command will be assigned global reach missions while deterrence, air superiority and global power taskings will be carried out by the Air Combat Command.

Another reason for changing the combatant commands is that many of them operate in theaters, not by function.

Overseas commanders will now command the assets they need to make airpower a unified whole within their theaters of operation. The commanders of Pacific Air Forces and U.S. Air Forces in Europe will command tankers, theater airlift, and reconnaissance aircraft that are stationed in their theaters, as well their traditional combat aircraft.

These commanders will have the resources they need for an air campaign, augmented as necessary by reinforcements from the continental United States. (Air Force News Service)

From my perspective

by Maj. Edmund Bloom
Reese staff judge advocate

Monday marked the observance of Constitution Week. This year, however, there is continuing observance of the drafting of the Constitution culminating in the 200th anniversary of the passage of the Bill of Rights this December.

These two events are inextricably woven together, even though the events are four years apart. That's because without the assurances of the first ten amendments to the Constitution — the Bill of Rights — placing a limitation on the bounds of governmental authority, the passage of the Constitution itself would have been in great jeopardy.

Sworn to defend

Each and every man and woman in the Armed Forces and all of our federal officials take an oath to uphold and defend the Constitution. Our loyalty is to a document, a way of life, rather than to an individual or royal sovereign.

We are the world's oldest continuing constitutional democracy. Yet the passage of the document that forms the basis of our government was not assured. Part of the reason can be seen in the current struggles in the Soviet Union.

There is an ongoing struggle in a federal system for power between the central government and the states. However, the most important concern can be seen from examining the language of the Bill of Rights and from reading the preamble to the Constitution — "We the People of the United States . . ." The concern is in protecting the rights of the individual from the unchecked power of the government.

That same concern exists even in the military environment. While we all attempt to live to a higher standard than the public at large, and while we are subject to military force and authority extending to the obligation to risk our lives in the defense of our country, we did not abandon the protections of the Constitution when we entered the military.

All attempts at drawing a line between government action and individual freedom require balancing the intrusion on the individual against the dangers of government inaction.

Reason for existence

As recent events in the Persian Gulf show, we must be prepared to react to worldwide threats with little or no warning. Our reason for existence is our readiness and our ability to fight on behalf of our country. This is why the military is authorized to do such things as conduct inspections of personal property, have a mandatory urinalysis program, or even order a servicemember to have a physical examination against his or her will. Our need for military preparedness in these areas is greater than the individual's right of avoidance. It is not that the free and democratic ideals of the military are different, but that the ultimate responsibility of the military member to protect those ideals is greater.

Military doesn't give up rights

However, our military does not abandon democratic protections. If a military member is accused of a crime, he has much the same protection as a civilian. The military had Article 31 rights long before the Supreme Court decided Miranda v. Arizona.

Unlike the civilian sector, the military makes an independent defense counsel available free of charge on every case — major or minor — in which punishment is contemplated.

The military also has automatic appellate review on every case in which severe punishment is adjudged, with direct appeal all the way to the Supreme Court.

There are many reasons why the military has lawyers, including protecting the government from liability, following the many mandates of Congress, interpreting higher command directives, and complying with international treaties and agreements. However, none of these is more important than ensuring that the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution is upheld: "No person shall . . . be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law . . ."

Our military has had judge advocates from the time of George Washington. The concern for protection of due process is so important that it is written into the law that the staff judge advocate is entitled to communicate with the staff judge advocate of any superior or subordinate command up to and including the judge advocate general.

Enduring strength

One of the enduring strengths of our democracy has been that the military has remained a part of the society it protects. The judge advocates of each of the services have contributed to that strength by maintaining a balance between the ideals and freedoms for which we fight and the need for military preparedness, thus keeping a military with democratic ideals for a democratic people.

From YOUR perspective

As wing commander, I need to hear things "from YOUR perspective." Your inputs and suggestions can help Reese remain the pacesetter in the command. If you see something good, call me. If you have a problem that you feel needs my attention, call me. First, however, consider using your chain of command.

You may remain anonymous if you wish, but those who leave their name and number can get a direct response to their call. Calls can be made to the Careline 24 hours a day at 3273.

Treatment in the clinic

My daughter was receiving treatment in the hospital clinic from a civilian doctor with the partnership program. He decided that she needed to go to Wilford Hall for treatment.

Why can't I be reimbursed for her treatment and cut orders?

Dependent medical care is provided free of charge. Government regulations prohibit reimbursement of travel costs to military members in connection with treatment of their dependents.

However, active-duty members may be granted permissive temporary duty to accompany their dependents to other military medical facilities for care.

'Eyeing' a problem

I've been trying to get an appointment for my son in the optometry clinic since May. When I call, I keep getting asked to call back.

The clinic has had a backlog throughout the summer, due in part to the patient "no show" rate and the number of children needing exams to go back to school.

Active-duty personnel and their family members have priority for care; active-duty members are seen within five duty days, their families within 14.

We strive to make all our clinics as accessible as possible, and we apologize for your delay. Anyone with a problem in the hospital can call the patient concerns monitor at 3581.

Don't get 'down in the mouth'

by Capt. (Dr.) Michael Najera
Reese Dental Clinic

For protection against airborne softballs and elbows to the chin, youngsters and adults need more than lightning reflexes — they need the protection of an athletic mouthguard.

Though traditionally associated with football, mouthguards can prevent injuries in a wide variety of sports. The Reese Dental Clinic recommends that players of all sports — particularly contact sports such as karate, boxing and basketball — wear mouth protectors at all times during training and competition.

Dental and sports medicine studies indicate that almost any vigorous activity can result in injuries to the teeth, lips, cheeks, tongue and jaws — not just sports involving body contact. Sudden falls and accidental collisions during many sports can lead to dental injuries. Activities requiring use of mouthguards include: basketball, bicycling, boxing, discus throwing, field hockey, football, gymnastics, handball, ice hockey, martial arts, racquetball, rugby, shot putting, skateboarding, skiing, skydiving, soccer, squash, surfing, volleyball, water polo, weightlifting and wrestling.

Of the three types of mouth protectors currently available, the custom-made protector, fabricated from a cast of the athlete's upper teeth and fitted by a dentist, is by far the best in terms of fit, comfort and ease of speech.

This is the type the dental clinic can make for you. An example of this type of mouthguard can be found in the fitness center.

The mouth-formed protector, made of a soft material that easily molds to the athlete's teeth, is less expensive than the custom-made protector but may not fit as well or last as long. The stock-mouth protector, the least expensive, is also the least satisfactory because little can be done to adjust the fit.

Even the least expensive mouthguard is better than none at all, however. Mouth protectors minimize sports injuries regardless of the type used.

So before you buy your youngster that new skateboard, invest in a mouthguard first.

Why wait?

by Jeffrey Wilbur
Reese education services officer

The other day, a master sergeant who will retire in the next few months said, "I really wish I had my bachelors degree. There was a job at the 'A-J' I'd be qualified for — except for the degree."

Over the years, he accumulated many semester hours in his job specialty, and could now have his degree if he had averaged as little as one class per year for the past twenty years. Instead, he put off even seriously investigating the investment of time and money needed — until now.

Now, he's busy taking CLEP and DANTES examinations (free for active-duty people) and getting all the information about available programs on and off base.

Not that I'm somehow indicating that it's "too late" for this sergeant — not at all. But wouldn't it be easier to face a 50-percent loss in base pay (along with the loss of BAS, BAQ, and so on) if you were ready to begin your second career?

At Reese we have some of the finest education programs available Air Force-wide. The number of people participating in these programs is one of the highest in Air Training Command — attesting to their perceived value by military members. We invite you to get a head start on your future. Stop by the Education Center or give us a call at 3634:

Don't be another "last minute" sergeant. Work on your goals, slowly but steadily, over the years. The transition to civilian life will be much easier if you are prepared.

Wing Tweet retired after 17,000 hours

(SSgt. Mike Breslin)

Capt. Mike Dupierer, 35th Flying Training Squadron, preflights a wing T-37 (inset) before flying the Tweet to Davis-Monthan AFB, Ariz.

A T-37B "Tweet" with over 17,000 flying hours and 32 years of service left a Reese runway for the last time.

"Normally our Tweets have a life of around 16,000 flying hours but through rebuilding and maintenance this one has exceeded that limit," said T. O. Hilly, maintenance control manager, of the retired T-37.

The Tweet, tail No. 57-2350, was flown to Aerospace Maintenance and Reorganization Center, Davis-Monthan AFB, Ariz., otherwise known as the "boneyard." It was piloted by Capt. Mike Dupierer, 64th Operations Support Squadron.

The transfer to Davis-Monthan doesn't necessarily signal the end of an aircraft's life.

"Once they arrive here, some of the aircraft parts are returned to the active inventory," said Jerry Fugere, AMRC productions management specialist. "The AMRC is much more than a plane cemetery. Some aircraft leave and serve missions for government agencies or other countries."

Second Lt. James Mose, 33rd FTS, flew the aircraft's last training mission Sept. 9.

The 1957 model came to Reese in 1960 and had been here ever since.

Top Flight on tap

Wing pilots, maintainers await word on team selection

Reese's participants for Top Flight II at Vance AFB, Okla., will be announced Tuesday.

The event, scheduled for Thursday through Oct. 4, tests UPT wings in areas directly related to their daily mission.

Participants are chosen randomly by the command shortly before the competition; the short notice and method of selection are designed to make Top Flights an accurate gauge of how well pilot training wings are doing their job on a daily basis.

Reese excelled at the first competition June 13-14 at Laughlin AFB, Texas, take two first places and one second.

Details on Top Flight II will appear in the Oct. 4-11 Roundups.

SPs participate in combat training

Thirteen members of the 64th Security Police Squadron traveled to the Texas National Guard's Camp Swift, Texas, to participate in a two-week ground combat skills training course, Sept. 8-20.

"The course, otherwise known as 'Patriot Warrior,' was very rough and intense," TSgt. Michael Gutierrez, team chief, said. "Training lasted 16-18 hours each day. There was some nights we would only get four or five hours of sleep after taking showers and doing laundry."

The course began with a one-week introduction on the theories of ground defense. The one-week introduction was taught here by Air Force reserve instructors from Camp Swift. The SPS squad was the first active-duty unit to complete "Patriot Warrior."

"We were a test group for Air Training Command in trying out this new course," Sergeant Gutierrez said. "A team from Keesler AFB, Miss., started the course at the beginning of Desert Storm and were recalled to Keesler, but we were the first to complete it."

Reservists usually attend the course, which used to be held at Ft. Dix, N. J. The active-duty Air Force implemented "Patriot Warrior" to see if it was more cost effective. The Army course lasted six weeks, in which training was done eight hours a day. The Air Force version is three weeks long and training is done 18 hours a day.

"I went to the course at Fort Dix and we pretty much did the same thing but in less time," Sgt. L. D. Harper said. "It served as a refresher course for the people that have gone to Fort Dix. Working with the reservists was a unique experience."

The wing members attending the camp spent most of their time in the field training in land navigation, military fighting in urban terrain, chemical warfare, live M-16 shooting and handling live grenades.

"We were learning how to survive during wartime and how to defend an air base from the ground," Sergeant Gutierrez said. "The Army always used to defend air bases in time of war until the early 1970's. When Army units were hurting, soldiers protecting bases would be moved — this left the air bases vulnerable on the ground. Today, a security policemen's primary mission is air base ground defense."

Other wing SPs attending were TSgts. Scott Thornton and Robert Modlin; SSgt. Craig Williams; Sgt. Lesley Rosser; SrAs. J. J. Clum and Shane Porter; A1Cs Kenneth Sellers, Thomas Baldwin, and Darren Beal; and Amns. Jason Coulter and Vibol Ros.

Construction to start on new fuels facility

A contract to build a new fuels office facility was awarded to Tech Builders Co. out of Amarillo, Texas, Sept. 20. The structure is scheduled to begin construction in October.

The $806,000 project is scheduled to be completed in September 1992. The 5,000-square-foot site will house the fuels control office, currently located in Bldg. 955.

"The old building will be torn down as soon as the fuels office operations are moved to the new one," MSgt. Robert Quincey, 64th Logistics Squadron fuels quality assurance evaluator, said. The building was condemned so we have to move the operations to another building."

Allied Management of Texas recently took over all fuels operations.

"The building will be big enough to house all the fuels contractor staff as well as the QAEs," Sergeant Roberts said.

The new fuels office will be adjacent to the old one, across from the 64th Civil Engineering Squadron on Hangarline Road. This will be the first construction at Reese by Tech Builders Co.

The fuels facility is the second project to get under way at Reese. The contractor operated and managed base supply store, better known as the "COMBS" warehouse, began construction Sept. 17.

Mission maker

This week's mission maker is Chaplain (Maj.) Millard Timmons, Reese Chapel Protestant chaplain. As an Air Force chaplain, he ministers to people of different faiths brought together in the Air Force.

"It's a challenge to minister to people of different faiths, but being in the Air Force tends to bring people closer together at work as well as in church," said Chaplain Timmons. "Sometimes it can be challenging and at the same time rewarding."

Chaplain Timmons joined the Air Force in August 1981 and has been stationed at Reese since June 1990. Before coming to Reese, Chaplain Timmons was stationed at March AFB, Calif., for three years.

"I joined the Air Force because the prospect of being a chaplain looked very interesting," he said. "The things we (chaplains) get involved with such as mobility are different from being a minister in the civilian world. For instance, I've flown with pilots during their flying missions and it has been exciting."

Chaplain Timmons enjoys playing golf, tennis and racquetball; and spending time with his wife, Cheryl, and his daughter, Lindsay, 12.

Civil engineering NCO closes out 26-year career

A senior master sergeant from the 64th Civil Engineering Squadron retires today after 26 years of service.

SMSgt. Julius Holley, production control chief, traded in his Air Force uniform for civilian clothes after working in CES and on the inspector general team.

"I enjoyed working on the IG team and going from base to base," Sergeant Holley said. "I was always interested in how different bases were doing business. There was always good times as well as bad times working with the IG team."

During his career, Sergeant Holley was stationed in Korea, Guam, Germany and Turkey. His continental tours included Loring AFB, Maine, and Carswell AFB, Texas.

Sergeant Holley has been stationed at Reese since August 1988.

The sergeant joined the Air Force after a visit by a recruiter when he was working in a meat packing plant. "The recruiter came by my house told me all the opportunities that were available to me in the Air Force," he said. "It didn't take much to convince me to join, and I think I made a wise decision."

He also commented that that every aspect of the Air Force is changing.

"With the Air Force downsizing, the chances of getting promoted will get tougher and will require people to do more studying when testing," he said. "Senior noncommissioned officers will have the toughest time getting promoted."

Sergeant Holley also reflected on the changes over the years since he has been in.

"The biggest change that I have seen is the responsibilities of senior NCOs," he said.

"Duties that belong to senior NCOs years ago now belonged to young officers that have recently joined the Air Force. For a young officer to have a successful shop, he or she needs the experience of the NCO who has been doing that job for the last 12 or 13 years."

Sergeant Holley and his wife, Virginia, plan to stay in the Lubbock area temporarily, but eventually return to East Texas.

"I've always loved ranching and as soon as I move back, I'll go back to cattle ranching," he said.

Commissary begins new era Tuesday

Numerous sales will usher in new Defense Commissary Agency

Tuesday marks the date when the Defense Commissary Agency debuts as the controlling agency for more than 400 of the military's commissaries, including Reese's.

To mark the historic occasion, an agency-wide inaugural sale — the "grandfather of all sales" — will be held throughout the month in the base commissary, according to the commissary agency office.

Army Maj. Gen. John P. Dreska, DeCA director, expressed his enthusiasm for the new organization and its kickoff sale.

"I'm proud to have been selected as the first director and am glad to take on the responsibility of protecting a non-pay compensation benefit which enhances the quality of life for military members and their families. Sales such as this one provide a valuable financial benefit for shoppers."

"We expect to have anywhere from 250-500 items on sale on our commissary shelves during the course of the month. This includes certain items that were selected for special display during this sale," said Lila Andermatt, Reese commissary office.

"Cents-off bargains will be available for every type of shopper. There'll be savings for those who are single, unaccompanied, on a special diet or want to purchase a family-size serving. The choice is theirs," she added.

Banners, flyers and other point-of-sale material will lead the way to savings and add to the festive atmosphere, said commissary officials.

OSS blanks MSS, 23-0

The intramural football league resumed action Monday after one week of delay caused by weather.

The 64th Operation Support Squadron improved its record to 4-1 after shutting out 64th Mission Support Squadron, 23-0.

The first half saw good defense by both teams, as neither managed to score a touchdown in the first quarter. In the second quarter, OSS had a chance to go up 20-0 but two touchdowns were called back due to penalties. OSS connected for one touchdown, but couldn't convert on the two-point conversion.

The MSS team started the second half with the ball. SrA. Robert Boyea threw an interception and the OSS team returned it to inside the 10-yard line. SSgt. Todd Cogdill threw a TD pass to Maj. John O'Malley and converted a two-point conversion to increase their lead to 14-0.

Sergeant Cogdill threw a 35-yard TD pass to A1C Avery McGee and converted a one-point conversion. The game came to an end when Airman Boyea was tagged for a safety, making the final score 23-0.

In the intramural league races, the 64th Logistics Squadron, 5-0,
