Reese team tackles Top Flight III

(Sgt. Greg Spraggins)

The prebrief began with the all-important time hack. For this mission, time synchronization plays a crucial role.

Leaving the holding area, the commander signals the flight to proceed from the "jump point" towards the "target." He gauges his time carefully over various landmarks to ensure the flight is on the mark. Finally, the hour-plus flight approaches its end as the airfield comes into view several miles away.

"Reese flight, push it up," radios the lead aircraft, realizing the flight will need more airspeed to combat the unforecast headwind they are facing.

"Two."

"Three."

"Four," reply the other three pilots.

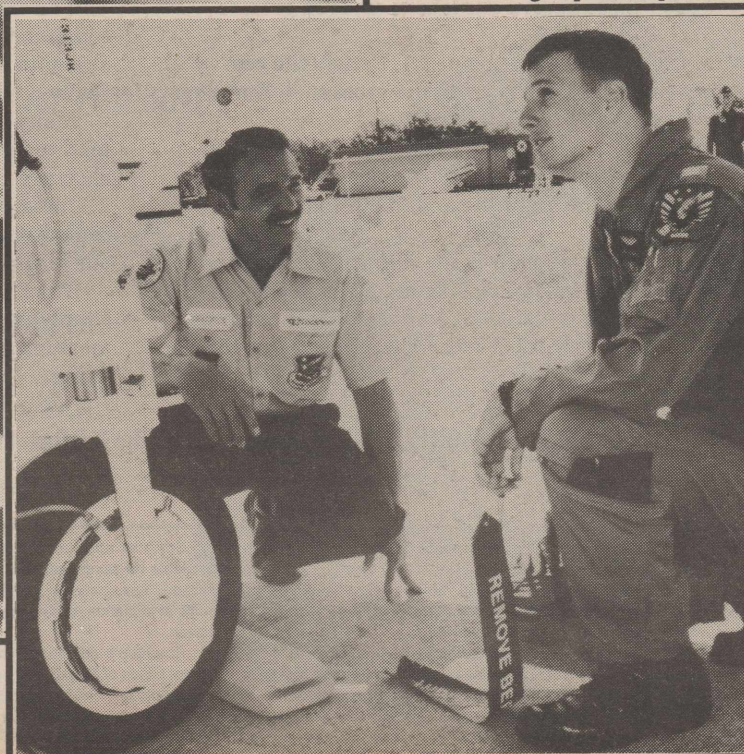

No, this is not a re-creation from Desert Storm. It is a simulation of the time-on-target test several Reese members are participating in as part of Air Training Command's Top Flight III at Randolph AFB, Texas, this week.

The two-day competition tests the command's pilot training wings in both flying and maintenance capability. The Reese team consists of two four-man teams of instructors and two five-man maintenance teams.

Col. Bob Negley, wing vice commander, was on hand Tuesday morning to encourage the competitors to do their best. "This event is a one-time snapshot," he said. "It's a chance for the UPT wings to gauge their effectiveness in a no-threat, no-pressure environment."

Representing Reese at the current competition are "D" flight of the 35th Flying Training Squadron, "F" flight of the 54th FTS, and T-37 and T-38 crew chiefs from Lockheed.

While most of the maintainers were chosen some time in advance, the eight instructor pilots were

From my perspective

by Lt. Gen. Billy Boles

Air Force deputy chief of staff for personnel

In assessing the results of the voluntary separation incentive and special separation benefit offering that closed April 15, the Air Force had to come to grips with the unfortunate reality that voluntary separations from the initial eligible pool of officers and enlisted members fell short of the target.

On the enlisted side, we came close, with over 21,000 applications — 88 percent of the 24,000 goal. On the officer side, it was a different story, with applications approaching only half of the 7,500 target.

From the beginning, Air Force leadership has worked to achieve necessary force reductions through voluntary loss measures to the maximum possible extent. A reduction in force has been strictly the option of last resort. The hard question faced by leadership April 15 was whether we reached the point of picking up that bitter pill. As in the case of most hard questions, the answer was yes and no.

Given the significant shortfall on the officer side, as well as the lead times required for RIF board scheduling, notification and so forth, it was obvious that we could wait no longer to announce preparations for an officer RIF board in July.

However, those lead time requirements also afforded us a window of opportunity to minimize RIF requirements through an expanded VSI-SSB offering between the end of April and the end of May.

On the enlisted side, we estimate that, if the response is as favorable as it was in the original offer, this expanded offer should get us to the end-strength reduction target.

Based on discussions with Air Force people around the world over the last several months, we anticipate a range of reactions to the recent VSI-SSB-RIF announcement.

For many new VSI-SSB eligibles, it is the opportunity they have been waiting for. Each person who accepts the offer reduces the number of involuntary separations which may be required.

For those most vulnerable to a RIF or those who believed the Air Force would never have to conduct a RIF, the RIF board announcement comes as a jolt. I can tell you this announcement never would have been made if we had any other choice. The new VSI-SSB offer provides a last opportunity to avoid our mutual worst case scenario.

However, if the response in this expanded VSI-SSB isn't equal to or greater than the response to the first offering, we will not be able to avoid an officer RIF.

The coming months will require hard decisions from Air Force people and their leaders. As we work our way through this difficult period, the secretary of the Air Force and chief of staff are personally involved and committed to exploring all possible alternatives with the best interests of Air Force members in mind. ### Quality Air Force

by 2nd Lt. Keith McIlvoy
QAF assistant

What can quality improvement do for me as a flyer?

This seems to be the question that we flyers have been asking ourselves as we are being exposed to more and more people extolling the virtues of that program we call "QI" or "TQM." The answer to that question may surprise you. As a flyer, quality improvement is already at work in many of our daily tasks and its potential is virtually unlimited.

Why then is there this sudden push to attend awareness classes and implement QI in our squadrons, if we are already using QI? The answer is that while we unconsciously use QI in our everyday jobs, by learning and placing a greater emphasis on the basic concepts behind it, we can take things one step further and improve our jobs to an even greater magnitude.

Quality improvement is based on four themes. 1. Satisfy the customer. 2. Manage by fact (measure). 3. Focus on the process. 4. Empower the people.

These four themes are used in QI to continually improve whatever process we are focusing on. There are numerous examples of each of these four basics at work out on the flightline and in our individual flights every day.

One example of satisfying our customer is the training IPs provide to their students. This satisfies two customers, one internal and the other external. The internal customer is the student who is trying to progress through UPT. The external customer is the gaining command to which the students will eventually be assigned.

We manage by fact (measure) every day. After each sortie, grades are given for each of the accomplished maneuvers. These grades are not arbitrary but are defined by definite parameters (for example, an 'excellent' fix-to-fix must be within certain measurable tolerances). Students are also measured on academic tests, emergency procedures quizzes and checkrides, as well as other performance areas.

The third theme of QI is focus on the process. As pilots we focus on the process every flight. We prebrief the sortie so we know how it should progress. We focus on airspeeds, departures and specific maneuver parameters of the items we wish to accomplish. Afterward, we evaluate mistakes and examine ways the flight could have been improved. Safety meetings and professional enhancement program briefings are two more examples of how fliers focus on the process. These programs have been developed to improve the safety of our flying.

The empowerment of people is displayed on the flightline by flight commanders running their flights, IPs teaching flying techniques to their students and students performing solo flights. We can see then, that QI really does play a major role in our everyday activities.

Many of us tend to put down QI as a program that will never work. We tend to focus on the larger problems over which we have no control—the shortage of flying hours or the availability of assignments, for example.

Instead, we should divert our attention toward the things we can control, whether it's our approaches, our aircraft systems knowledge or our teaching techniques.

Thus, we should not look at QI as an additional duty. Instead it is simply taking the same things we already do and applying them in a more organized manner so that we may continually improve our job—flying.

named only Tuesday, as part of the competition rules. In addition, eight specific aircraft were designated to compete. The pilot and aircraft selections were made randomly at command headquarters.

Capt. J.R. McDonald, project officer for the Reese Top Flight team, said, "The teams are selected right before the competition so no one has time for any prolonged or special preparation. This prevents any one team from gaining a particular advantage before the event."

In addition to the time-on-target test, the instructors will fly two composite training sorties and two formation sorties. ATC evaluators will measure their abilities as if they were on actual student sorties. The maintenance teams will be tested on their performance during the preflight, launch, recovery and refueling of aircraft, forms documentation and on their knowledge of their particular maintenance field.

Additionally, ATC maintenance personnel will evaluate the appearance of the eight aircraft.

According to Lt. Col. Stan Gorenc, 54th FTS commander, the competition "builds the esprit de corps of a wing by bringing together everyone from the operators to the maintainers."

"Our flight from the the 35th FTS (F flight) won the whole thing at the last competition," said Lt. Col. Rick Robinson, 35th FTS commander. "The flight that was chosen this time (D flight) is just as capable and outstanding as last year's group. When I went in to tell them they'd been picked, they let out a loud yell — they were really excited."

Competitions were clearly enthusiastic during preparations for departure, predicting they would return with even more awards than the last Top Flight teams. However, that excitement did not cloud the reality of the challenge that faced them.

"We're well prepared," said the D flight commander, Capt. Dave Sumrell. "We're all going to throw out our best shot. If it's enough to win, that's great. If not, we'll all be a lot better for having competed."

Colonel Negley was quick to mention that although the flying and maintenance tests were no-threat, the crud title "is the one thing you'd better come home with." The Reese team will be defending its crud title for the second straight time and is undefeated in Top Flight crud competition.

Results of Top Flight III will be announced tonight, and details will appear in next week's Roundup.

Reese NCO top command instructor

When SSgt. Karen Montague was fairly new in the service, she didn't think the standards in the Air Force applied to her. She thought that "the system was against her."

That changed when she attended NCO Leadership School at Lackland AFB, Texas, in 1985.

"It made me look at the military differently," the former traffic management specialist said. "I started to realize that the system wasn't set up the way I thought."

That change of attitude is evident today. Now a professional military education instructor at Reese, she recently captured the Air Training Command PME Instructor of the Year Award for the second time in three years.

The attitude that Sergeant Montague (now SSgt. Kunigunda June, thanks to a recent name change) developed during and after NCOLS is something she tries to pass on to her students.

"I try to teach them to take pride in being in the military profession," the Buffalo, N.Y., native said. "Sometimes they come in with the same attitude I had because, like me, they don't understand the military. I try to make them see how they play an important role."

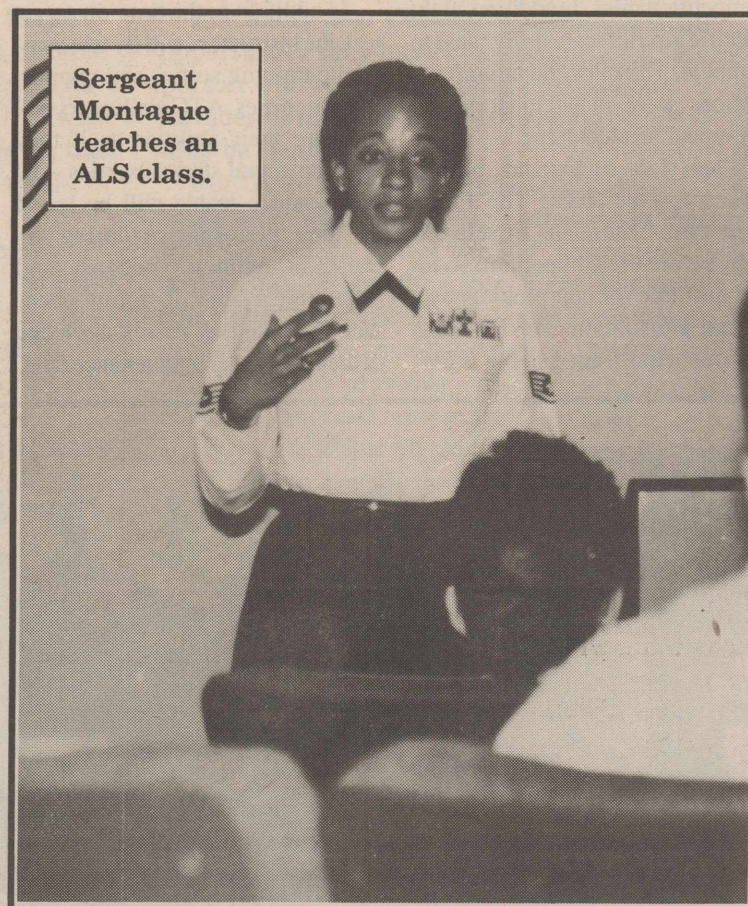

While that presents a challenge for her, she said the most rewarding aspect of her job is when a student comes back after graduating and tells the PME staff about the impact the course and the instructors had on them.

Her success as an instructor didn't come without effort. The 12-year service veteran had to overcome a lifelong problem to be in the career field.

"I had a real fear of public speaking," she explained. "This job forced me to get over it," since she conducts daily class lectures for the students."

Aside from her efforts on the job, she credited her off-duty education and community work as factors in her selection for the award. Her supervisor said her attitude in the classroom was another factor.

"She cares about each individual student," said TSgt. Derald Jones, Reese Airman Leadership School program manager. "She also likes her job, and that's evident when she teaches."

Sergeant Montague teaches an ALS class.

New aircraft will replace T-41 trainer

The T-41 Mescalero

WRIGHT-PATTERSON AFB, Ohio — The Air Force has selected the team of Slingsby Aviation Limited of Great Britain and Northrop Worldwide Aircraft Services Inc. of Oklahoma for a new "enhanced flight screener" aircraft to replace the aging Cessna T-41 trainer.

The Air Force plans to buy 113 of the commercial off-the-shelf enhanced flight screeners, a variant of the Slingsby Firefly aircraft. Face value of the contract awarded April 29 is $54.8 million, Aeronautical Systems Division officials said.

Contract specifications call for an acrobatic, piston-driven aircraft with side-by-side seating, dual stick controls and a normal cruise speed of 178 mph.

Air Training Command and the Air Force Academy currently use the T-41

Mescalero, a military version of the Cessna 172, to screen prospective pilots for specialized UPT.

Improved screening will eliminate earlier those not suited to Air Force flying and save the Air Force more than $1 million annually with each 1 percent reduction in attrition.

Delivery of the first enhanced flight screener is scheduled to take place in January at Hondo, Texas, with ATC receiving a total of 57 aircraft. The Air Force Academy will receive the first of 56 aircraft in August 1993.

Student pilots are to begin training in the new aircraft in October 1993, Maj. Denny Grady, ATC program manager, said. Final delivery is scheduled for August 1995. (Air Force News Service)

New fire chief arrives

CMSgt. Joe Johnson has only been at Reese for a couple of weeks, but he is already in a position to feel some heat.

The Alabama native is the new base fire chief, having shipped in from RAF Upper Heyford, England. Speaking about the fire protection mission, the 26-year service veteran said the biggest part of fire prevention is combating complacency.

"That's what causes accidents and fires," he said. "People think that it's something that only happens to someone else."

"Because of the (fire) inspection system in the Air Force, people don't see fires but maybe once every several years. So they don't think about."

The chief said he is pleased to be at Reese.

"The people here are very friendly, including the people downtown," Chief Johnson said. "The guys in the station have been really helpful too." He added that it was nice to be back in the states and that he hoped to stay at Reese for a while.

Thunderbirds coming here

The Thunderbirds will be the featured attraction at the Reese's May 24 open house.

The team will be in its ninth different type of demonstration jet, the F-16C Fighting Falcon, for the show. Since August 1982, the Thunderbirds flew the A-model of the Fighting Falcon. The squadron was also the last active-duty unit to make the transition.

The open house will also feature the Army Golden Knights parachute demonstration team and numerous aircraft displays.

The T-1A Jayhawk, the Air Force's newest jet will be among the displays according to Capt. Judy Burk, Reese chief of public affairs. (Some material courtesy of Thunderbird Public Affairs)

(Sgt. Greg Spraggina)

Checking out the Jayhawk

SSgt. Terry Gray, Det. 2, 3307th Test and Evaluation Squadron, looks over the electrical system on one of Reese's T-1As. Sergeant Gray and other Det. 2 personnel are responsible for the operational test and evaluation of the aircraft within a pilot training environment. The team will be at Reese through September.

On the local scene, an inside article carried a sad note of how Lubbock native 2nd Lt. George Edwards was killed in a plane crash in Alexandria, Va., just one month after receiving his commission.

Volunteers of the year selected

Reese's top volunteers of the year were honored during an April 29, social in the Reese Officers' Open Mess.

The four honorees were given "Angel Volunteer" awards for their service to the base and community over the past 12 months. The winners, by category, were:

□ SMSgt. Gary Bodensteiner, 64th Logistics Squadron, earned the youth activities award. Some of his work benefitted Camp Blue Yonder, the Reese Christmas Classic Basketball Tournament and Big Brothers of Lubbock, among other programs.

He spent more than 200 hours in these efforts.

□ MSgt. Joe Slack, 64th Medical Squadron, was cited in the community services category. He worked with a number of enlisted programs, Special Olympics, Toys for Tots, the Lubbock State School and the annual cancer survivors picnic, to name a few.

His volunteer work for the year totalled more than 600 hours.

□ Cheryl Harsley, Reese Family Services Center, won in the family support category. Working in the center, which is manned completely by volunteers, Ms. Harsley worked over 600 hours and implemented several "innovative changes" that center officials credited for streamlining family service operations.

□ Lydia Larson, 64th Contracting Squadron, was honored for her work involving religious activities. Some of her work was geared toward the "Youth for Understanding" and "International Friends" programs as well as the Gloria Dei Lutheran Church.

Her volunteer contributions totalled more than 1,700 hours.

"All the winners, as well as all the other nominees, are examples of how the volunteer spirit can benefit a community," said Helen Thai, base volunteer resource program coordinator. "They all deserve recognition for their work."

Phil Thierry, director of the Reese Family Support Center, thanked family services for providing hors d'oeuvres at the volunteer social, as well as other people and agencies that helped with the event.

They included MWR, the Officers Club, Reese Federal Credit Union, Reese Enlisted Wives Club, audiovisual, public affairs, arts and crafts and Juanita Beedy of the library.

Notes

Mandatory briefings set

Mandatory "101 Critical Days of Summer" briefings are set for 10 a.m. Wednesday and 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. Thursday in the Simler Theater.

Accounting closes

The Reese Accounting and Finance Office will close today at noon in conjunction with the 64th Mission Support Squadron "sports day."

Accounting officials ask that wing members schedule their finance business accordingly.

Drag racing planned

Kids will have a chance to legally drag race their cars at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Idalou Race Track as part of the "Race a Cop Against Drugs" program.

64th Security Police Squadron officials said the program is designed to get kids interested in something besides drugs. Reese SPs will take part in the event. For details, call SSgt. Kathrine Meyers at 3946.

CGOC social scheduled

The wing company grade instructor pilot and support officer of the quarter will be announced during a social at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in the formal lounge in the Reese Officers' Open Mess.

Everyone on base is welcome; free hors d'oeuvres will be served.

Job opportunity exists

The Lubbock Police Department is accepting applications for police officers through May 29. Applications can be picked up at the City of Lubbock Personnel Department, 1625 13th Street, Room 104, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays

For details, call the Reese Family Support Center at 6688 or 6494.

AF band in Moscow parade

An historic first will occur in Moscow's Red Square Saturday when the Air Force Reserve command band, a U.S. armed forces color guard and a group of Medal of Honor recipients join with Russian counterparts to march in the annual Peace Victory Parade commemorating the end of World War II.

The 65-member Air Force Reserve command band from Robins AFB, Ga., performed on Russian television Thursday, in the Kremlin today and will march in the parade Saturday.

A special color guard from the Military District of Washington will depict the U.S. armed services of the period by wearing historically accurate World War II uniforms in the parade, the Department of Defense said.

Highway work continues

Work on War Highway between the main gate and the hospital gate is expected to continue through June 1 according to contracting officials. Drivers should plan alternate routes during that time.

National Police Week on tap

National Police Week is Monday through May 15, with National Police Memorial Day May 15.

The week, which was originally established by President John F. Kennedy, will feature local events sponsored by the 64th Security Police Squadron. Times and details of these events will be publicized throughout the week on the base marquee and through flyers distributed on base.

Dying boy seeks help

The U.S. Customs Service is helping a terminally ill boy get into the "Guinness Book of World Records." Craig Shergold is hoping to collect more business cards than anyone ever has.

People who want to help should drop their cards off with Dennis Bennett, UNC Aviation Services, Bldg. 930. He can be reached at 6502.

Also, anyone can send a card to: U.S. Customs Service, 909 S.E. 1st Ave., Room 710, Miami, Fla., 33131, Attention: Chuck Meaders.

Spouse day upcoming

Military Spouse Day will be observed May 19 with a special program starting with coffee and doughnuts at 8:45 a.m. in Reese Manor.

That will be followed by benefits briefing at 9 a.m., simulator rides at 10, a light lunch at noon, style show at 1 p.m. and discount golf at the High Plains Golf Course, also at 1 p.m.

In addition, the Reese Main Exchange and Commissary will offer specials that day.

R.S.V.P.s for the event are due to the Reese Family Support Center, 6494, by May 18.

UPT graduation May 21

Reese UPT Class 92-09 graduates May 21, and everyone on base is welcome at the 10 a.m. ceremony in the Simler Theater. Dress is uniform of the day.

The class dinner-dance will be at 6:30 p.m. in the Reese Officers' Open Mess, and anyone who wants to attend should call 6460 by 4 p.m. Thursday. Uniform for the dinner-dance is mess dress.

Vehicle sale set

A sealed bid vehicle sale of a fully loaded 1979 Ford Thunderbird is set for Tuesday and Wednesday at Bldg. 1142. Viewing and bid acceptance will be from 1 to 5 p.m., and a minimum bid of $700 is required.

For details, call Chuck Fallin at 6617 or 3262.

Child safety class planned

A program on safety and injury prevention for children will be held from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m. Thursday in the Reese Family Support Center. To R.S.V.P. or for details, call 6494.

SPs recover items

The following items have been found by the 64th Security Police Squadron: one sweat shirt, one football, one pair of boots and one key.

Anyone who thinks any of these items belongs to them should call 3999.

Leadership school graduates

Reese Airman Leadership School Class 92-B will graduate during a luncheon ceremony at 11:30 a.m. May 21 in the Reese Enlisted Open Mess.

Cost is $5; dress is duty uniform. R.S.V.P.s are due May 18 to 3147.

Billeting needs employees

Billeting officials are looking for housekeepers to work from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. week days, with some weekend and holiday work.

For details call civilian personnel at 6435 or billeting at 3155.

Tips offered to prevent abuse

Military installations, local communities and children's groups work together to combat child abuse. Prevention is the most effective part of the program, said JanaLee Sponberg, an analyst with the Department of Defense Family Policy, Support and Services Office. The themes for activities this year are "Partners in Prevention" and "Winning Ways for Military Families."

There are more than 1.5 million dependent children in the military. About 20,000 of those children were involved in cases of child abuse in 1990, Ms. Sponberg said. Almost one-half of these were substantiated.

Prevention is easy; listen to your children, nurture them, tell them about strangers and what to do if someone bothers them, she added.

A few other easy-to-follow child safety tips include:

- Take time to listen to your children.
- Know who your children's friends are.
- Take a few minutes out when stress levels get high.
- Use words that help, not hurt.
- Teach your children how to answer the telephone if they are home alone.
- Teach your children not to talk to, nor accept anything from, strangers.
- Teach your children about secrets and that some secrets need to be told.
- Do not place your child's name on clothing.
- Do not let your children play alone on a playground or go to a public place — like a rest room — alone. (American Forces Information Service)

At Reese

Child abuse isn't something that happens to other people. It can happen everywhere, and Reese parents are just as susceptible to this problem as others.

"The daily stresses that people have to deal with are often greater in a military family," said 1st Lt. Abbie Luck-Shafer, base family advocacy officer. "Most parents want to do the right thing by their families, they just don't always know how."

The lieutenant said the family advocacy program exists in part to prevent maltreatment in the home and can help parents cope with child-raising problems. Teaching parents some of the alternatives to physical punishment is one example.

"It's the Air Force's job to help prevent child abuse," said the lieutenant. "It's also against the law if you don't report cases of child abuse or maltreatment."

For more details on child safety and abuse prevention, call 3739.

Sergeant Johnson

(2nd Lt. Kyle Voigt)

Quality performer

TSgt. David Johnson spends his work day looking at records — dental records.

Sergeant Johnson, as NCO in charge of dental records and reception at the 64th Medical Squadron dental clinic, oversees 1,300 military dental records.

"I like the Air Force way of life, especially the people associated with it," said Sergeant Johnson. "I enjoy doing my part in maintaining readiness by ensuring Air Force members have good oral health."

The 11-year service member is a recent cross-trainee into the dental field. The prior electronic warfare systems technician saw assignments in Florida and South Carolina prior to his assignment at Reese 10 months ago.

Sergeant Johnson is currently attending South Plains College to earn credits toward his Community College of the Air Force degree. Overall, he has accumulated more than 100 college credits.

"Sergeant Johnson is the best enlisted member in the dental corp I've ever worked with," said Lt. Col. Edward Wright, 64th Medical Squadron commander. "His dedication, intelligence and follow-through make him an asset to any organization. I'm estatic to have someone of his calibre working in our clinic."

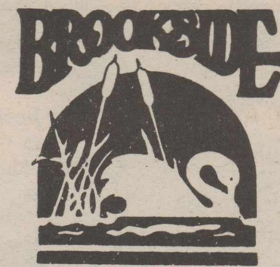

In his spare time, the Swanville, Minn., native enjoys woodworking and fishing. His goal is to make senior master sergeant in the next eight years.

(MSgt. Richard Boom)

Base assists local weatherman

Weatherman Ron Roberts of KAMC-TV 28 inspects the Reese observation site with SSgt. Robert Kraetsch and A1C Tricia Baker of the base weather station. He recently visited Reese to obtain weather observations for his study on urban heat island effect at Lubbock, a project he conducted to complete his masters degree at Texas Tech University.
