ATC's best Comm squadron member named as top maintainer

A member of the 64th Communications Squadron has been recognized as one of ATC's best maintainers, capturing the command-level Lt. Gen. Leo Marquez Outstanding Communications-Electronics Maintenance Personnel Award.

TSgt. Pilo Castillo, a ground radio equipment technician, works primarily on air traffic control radio equipment. In addition, the San Antonio native works with the military affiliate radio system, better known as "MARS," and the base public address system.

Logistics airman honored as tops in transportation

SrA. Dwight Almacen, 64th Logistics Squadron Transportation Flight was recently named 1991 outbound billing clerk. He handles outbound shipments of domestic and overseas shipments for military members and their dependents.

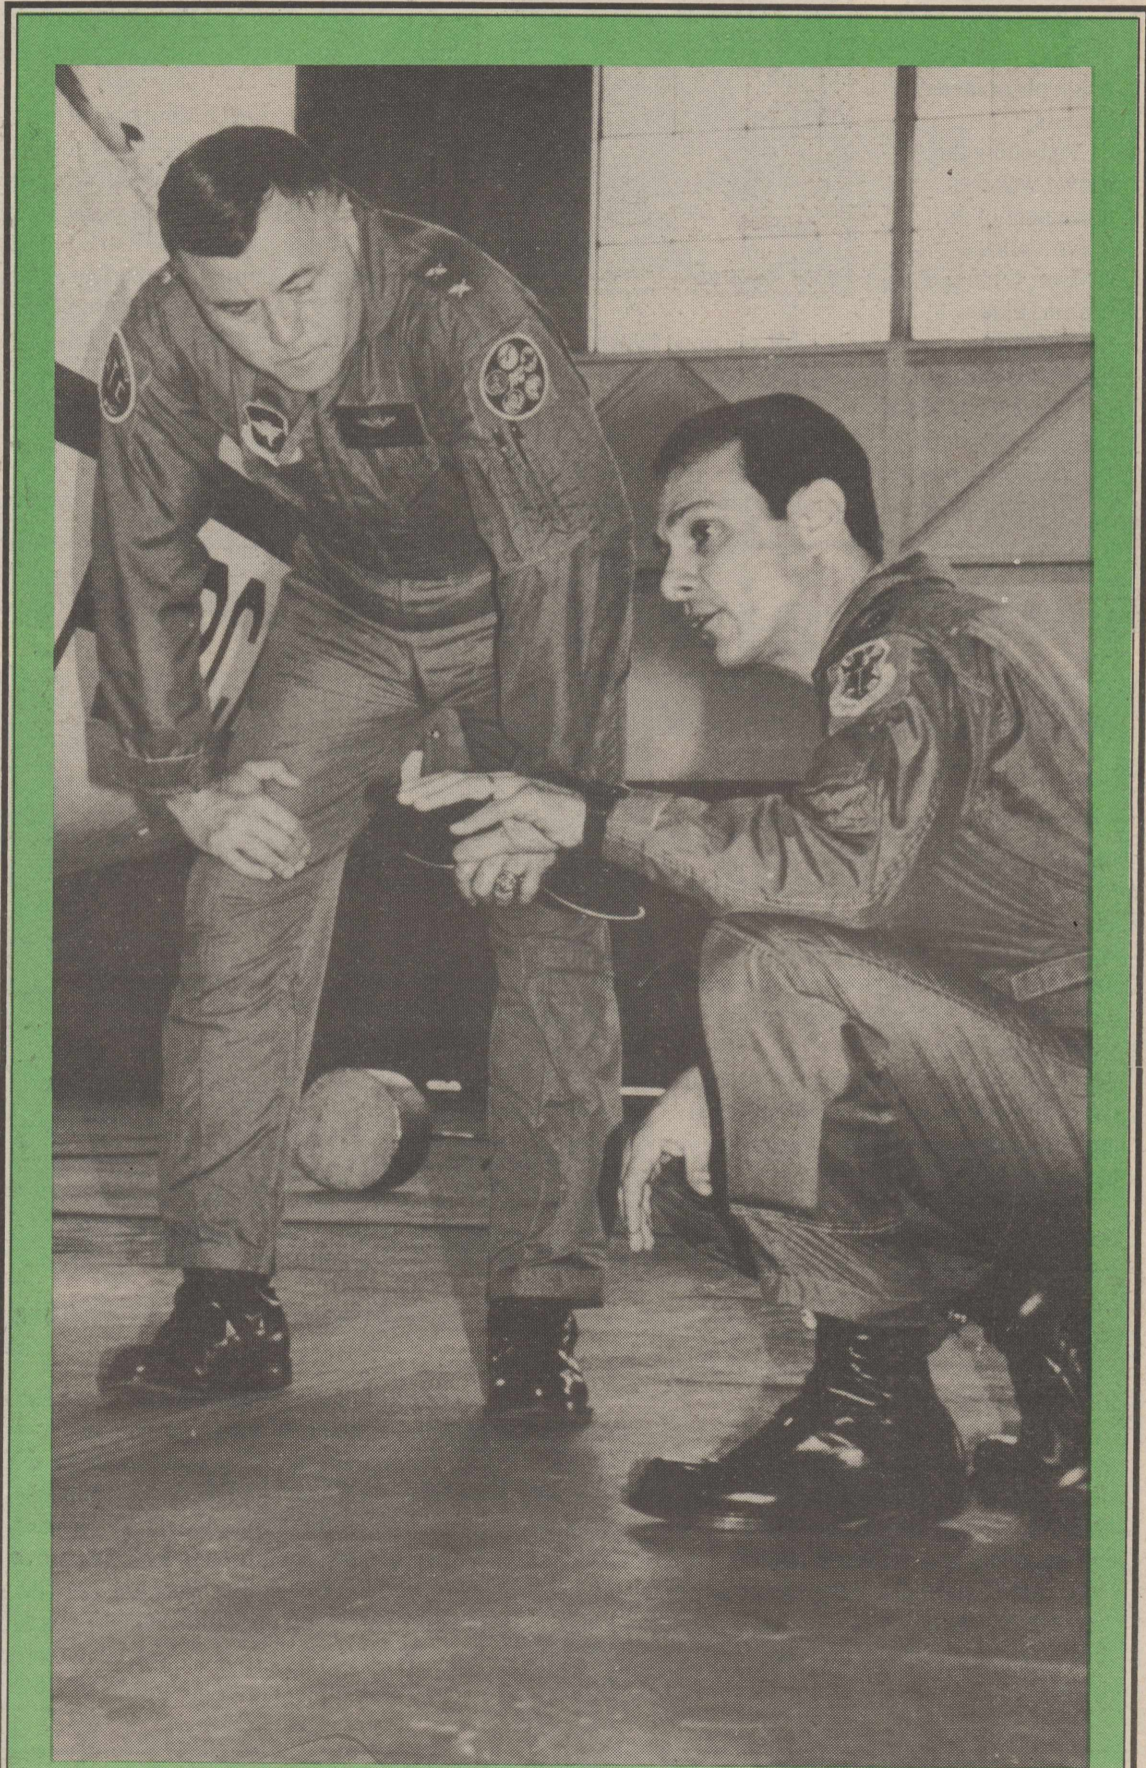

"I couldn't believe it when they said I won," said the native Filipino. "I just focus on doing the best job I can."

"Airman Almacen is an excep-

ATC outstanding transportation airman of the year.

Airman Almacen works as an "exceptional performer," said 1st Lt. David Patton, traffic management officer. "He is definitely one of the best ATC has to offer, and is a fine example of a young airman with a lot of potential."

Airman Almacen has been in Air Force almost three years, and is currently studying to test for his

ATC vice commander visits Reese

Maj. Gen. Eugene Habiger, ATC vice commander, is briefed on the T-1A Jayhawk Feb. 21 by Lt. Col. Mike Campano, commander of Det. 2, 3307th Test and Evaluation Squadron. During his visit, General Habiger was the guest speaker at Reese UPT Class 92-05's graduation ceremony, presented two ATC-level awards and toured several areas on base.

Sortie tracking

From my perspective

by Col. Bill Henny
64th FTW commander

What a month February has been!

The Air Force's newest jet, the T-1A Jayhawk, has claimed its long-awaited residence on base, and the ceremony marking its arrival was a phenomenal success.

Preceding the arrival was the retirement of our senior enlisted advisor, CMSgt. Coy Martin. I know I speak for the entire wing when I say good luck to Coy, his wife Bonnie and their family. You served us well, and you'll be missed.

Another valued wing member also retired recently. Pauline Reed, manager of the Reese Officers' Open Mess, wrapped up 40 years of faithful service, 11 of which were here at Reese. She too will be missed.

Top-notch effort

The chief's retirement, the T-1 arrival ceremony and Pauline Reed's retirement dinner went off flawlessly, and that's because of the super job everyone in the wing did. I've said it before and I'll say it again — the people of Reese are top notch and you all deserve a hand for the job you did on these events.

I want you to know that these efforts have not gone unnoticed. During his visit for the T-1 arrival ceremony, Lt. Gen. Joseph Ashy rated your effort as an 11 on a scale of 10. Now that's what I call setting the standard.

With these functions behind us, we had a chance for only a very quick breather. We can't rest on our laurels — many other challenges lie ahead, and I have no doubt that we will handle them with an equal amount of hard work and professionalism. The Black History Month banquet at 6 p.m. Saturday is a perfect example of such events. We're fortunate to have retired Gen. Bernard Randolph as our guest speaker, and I have no doubt he, like other visitors, will be impressed with the people in the wing and the job they do on the banquet.

Buzz of activity

With the official T-1 arrival complete, this means we're that much closer to beginning specialized undergraduate pilot training. The first class to go through SUPT, 93-12, will start phase one training in late June and should begin their new phase three T-1 syllabus in January 1993.

In the meantime, preparations continue to get us ready for the training change. Work on T-1 facilities like the contractor operated and maintained base supply (or "COMBS") warehouse, the new T-1 simulators and the new central support system on the flightline will share the spotlight with the instructor pilots and maintainers who will be training on the new aircraft.

That's not the only work going on. Other new facilities and construction, like our renovation of Hangarline Road, the new auto hobby shop and new traffic management and fuels facilities, are under way. Admittedly, this buzz of activity will cause some inconvenience, but the end results will leave us with one of the best installations in the military.

As we go through these changes, keep up the hard work and be as patient as possible. Your neighbor's job is probably just as hectic as yours.

Just remember that the quality of our work now will lead to the successful implementation of SUPT and a quality of life for Reese people down the road which will rank among the best in the Air Force.

Units aim to improve through fitness

by 2nd Lt. Kyle Voigt
staff writer

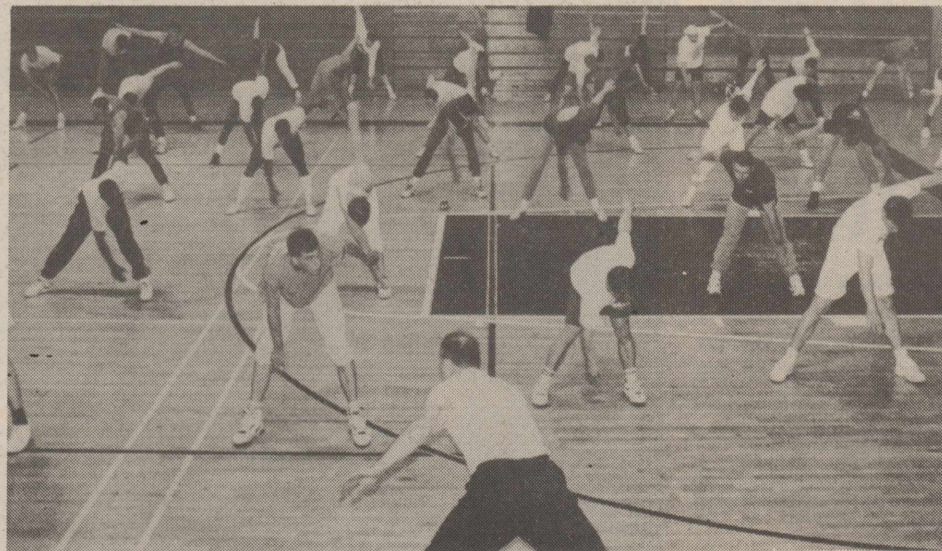

In order to provide a better service to their customer — the Air Force — several base organizations have initiated programs to improve their physical fitness. The programs cover a variety of fitness ideas, depending on the goals and needs of the organization. The reasons for better fitness are two-fold.

First, the military's ability to respond to a threat depends on its mental and physical conditioning, not just advanced technology and mass of force.

This was proven during Operation Desert Storm when servicemembers were subjected to 12-hour days and around-the-clock physical stress. This "field test" began to show the need for a higher standard of fitness than what was needed to pass the yearly timed run.

Secondly, physically fit people are healthier, more energetic and generally more positive about themselves. This, in turn, gives a better foundation with which to deal with job stress from day to day. Some of the organizations using the programs have found other benefits as well.

The 64th Civil Engineering Squadron began a group fitness program before a training deployment to Florida recently. Originally, it was designed to get the squadron in top shape for the deployment. But an additional benefit occurred since the program began, in the form of new motivation towards fitness and exercise.

(2nd Lt. Kyle Voigt)

"At first, people complained about the scheduling and the inconvenience," said TSgt. Joe Thompson, NCO in charge of the CES fitness program. "Since we've solved those problems, people really look forward to the sessions. Not only do they work out more than we require, they've set up additional activities such as our three-on-three 'Best of Beef' basketball tournament."

This self-improvement attitude facilitates the whole quality improvement process. People who start and continue a fitness program are likely to feel better about themselves and transmit a more positive attitude to their internal customers -- their colleagues -- and their external customers who seek their services.

Other groups have found similar benefits. The 64th Logistics Squadron conducts regular progress checks as part of their program. "With everyone more in tune with their own conditioning, it has improved the attitude toward fitness in the squadron," said 1st Lt. Patrick Perkins, project officer for the LS program.

The 64th Security Police Squadron uses a program developed by their first sergeant, MSgt. James Crissinger, which employs an array of exercises designed to improve strength, agility and endurance.

"As the primary ground force of the Air Force, it's imperative that the security police be physically prepared to perform day-to-day as well as wartime requirements," said Capt. Gerard Jolivette, SPS commander. "The other focus has been the camaraderie fostered by the group functions. We see people having more confidence in themselves and using a better team attitude because they share more than just their work."

Using programs such as these, the quality of life and quality of work can be improved for everyone in the Reese community. By pushing beyond what is required, better service can be achieved.

Sergeant Castillo

His work on the PA system played a role in his selection for the award, as Sergeant Castillo was among those who enabled the base to save $60,000 by installing the new PA system as a self-help project rather than contracting the job. Other factors in his selection included his work on several air traffic programs, including the installation of a new supervisor of flying position in the tower. The new SOF area was aimed at giving the front-line flying supervisor the "best tools and best view on base," according to officials in the 64th Operations Support Squadron.

Sergeant Castillo credits part of his success to the manning situation faced by him and his co-workers.

"We only have about half the manning we're supposed to have in the shop," the 11-year service veteran said. "Because of that, we all work with the attitude that we have to give an extra effort in everything we do to get the job done."

"Sergeant Castillo has excellent skills both as a leader and a technician," said CMSgt L.M. Kirkpatrick, CS chief of maintenance. "Every day, his dedication and professionalism demonstrates why he's an excellent choice for this award."

Fourteen cited during graduation ceremonies

Silver wings were on everyone's mind as 18 of the Air Force's newest pilots graduated from UPT Feb. 21 during a ceremony in the Simler Theater.

Class 92-05 was joined by their families, friends and colleagues as they entered the ranks of military aviators during the morning ceremony. The event marked the end of a rigorous, year-long training experience.

Several students were cited for their performance during the ceremony and later at the evening dinner-dance.

Capt. Kevin Kelly was selected as the top graduate, capturing the ATC commander's trophy. He was also cited as "top stick" (best in flying training) and as a distinguished graduate.

Second Lt. Andrew Gawryluk was also selected as a distinguished graduate. He also earned the academic award along with Capt. Hal Davis and 2nd Lt. Philippe Malebranche.

Captain Davis was cited for the leadership award, while 2nd Lt. Ian Frederick was given the award for citizenship. Ronald Allen was selected as the outstanding second lieutenant.

During the ceremonies, members of UPT Class 92-05 honored several permanent party members for their work with the class.

The outstanding academic instructor pilots were Capt. Bill Russell (T-37) and Capt. John Whitney (T-38), while flightline IP honors went to 1st Lt. Kenneth Crain (T-37) and 1st Lt. Roger Bishop (T-38).

Royce Jimenez (T-37) and Tony Oliver (T-38) of Lockheed were chosen as the outstanding crew chiefs, and Kenneth Peel was selected as the outstanding maintenance mission maker.

A1C Travis Kubly, Reese Accounting and Finance Branch, was chosen by the class as the outstanding mission maker.

During the ceremony, Col. Bill Henny, 64th FTW commander, said the graduates would remember their graduation day as "one of the highlights of your Air Force career." He added that even though he has attended many such ceremonies, each one is a very emotional experience.

Guest speaker for the ceremony was Maj. Gen. Eugene Habiger, ATC vice commander. General Habiger spoke about the many changes in the Air Force during this period and the many challenges that face the new military aviators.

"The training you have received here is much different than the UPT that I went through," the general said. "What has not changed is the important things that you learned from your instructors. Those lessons will be valuable to you wherever you go. Even with the present drawdown in the Air Force, you still have the most important job in our nation's defense."

Col. Bob Negley

64th FTW
Vice Commander

"One on one" is a periodic column designed to give wing readers an insight into topics of interest as seen by senior wing officials. This week's column is with Col. Bob Negley, 64th Flying Training Wing vice commander.

Aside from your inspector general duties, what are your responsibilities as the wing vice commander?

My primary duty is, of course, to support the wing commander. Under the reorganization, there are eight agencies on the wing commander's staff, so the span of control is broad and the commander does not have the time to be involved in all the details of these functions. The vice commander's role is to relieve some of the work load that goes with overseeing those agencies.

Since becoming the vice commander Jan. 1, what are some of the biggest challenges you've encountered?

The biggest so far is completing the reorganization and getting people oriented to the new structure, getting people familiarized with the coordination process in the new structure and getting the wing commander's staff organized.

Along with that are some of the special events like the T-1 arrival ceremony, the retirement of our senior enlisted advisor and several other wingwide functions held in February. What's impressed me most is the wing has pitched in and made these events first class.

What is your role as IG?

It's threefold. First of all, we monitor the self-inspection program. At wing level, we make sure the squadrons are doing a thorough job with the self-inspection program, finding the root causes for problems they discover and keeping the wing commander informed about major problems. We don't really go out and inspect the units — that's up to the units themselves, but we do assist in setting up a sound inspection system.

The second major area is complaints. We handle any type of call-in or walk-in problems people may have. We're able to resolve the majority of them without turning them into formal IG complaints by working out a resolution with the appropriate agency on base. If we can't resolve the problem, we'll have the individual write up a formal complaint and appoint an investigating officer. In some cases, the complaint may be up-channelled to the major command for investigation.

There are some complaints that fall outside the IG system. For example, if an individual wants to appeal a performance report, there is a regulation which provides the complainant with an avenue to gain relief. Air Force Regulation 123-11 lists the areas that fall outside the IG program and what agencies handle those complaints.

Of course, we always advocate using the chain of command first. A commander, first sergeant or supervisor can often resolve a problem before it reaches my level. However, if a person is uncomfortable doing that or they feel they can't get a satisfactory answer that way, then by all means they should contact me either by stopping by my office (Bldg. 800) or calling 3409.

The third area of IG involvement is fraud, waste and abuse. Everyone should be on the lookout for anything that we might be doing around base that results in a waste of resources. A lot of the problems with waste involve people just not thinking, as opposed to someone intentionally doing something wrong. Anyone who believes they have observed fraud, waste or abuse should call or stop by my office just as they would with an IG complaint. Remember, fraud, waste and abuse doesn't just apply to Air Force "blue-suiters" — civilians and contractors are also responsible for proper use of Air Force resources.

What protections exist for someone who goes to an IG?

A person can't be penalized for coming to the IG. In fact, if a commander or supervisor does try to take action against someone who uses the IG system, they (not the complainant) would be subject to disciplinary action.

What challenges do you see ahead for the wing?

This is going to be a year of change both organizationally and in the physical appearance of the base. The new wing organization as well as all the construction projects will provide some real challenges. We've already reorganized and we're going to see the wing get a facelift with many construction projects this year. The challenge to our people is to professionally institute the organizational changes and to be patient with the inconveniences that the construction projects may cause.

I believe we're now comfortable with the reorganization and everyone's reaction has been very positive. If people bear with us, I think that by the beginning of next year, most of the major construction will be complete and the quality of life for our people will be vastly improved.

Along with organizational and physical changes, several personnel programs may impact our people. Right now, the separation incentive programs (Voluntary Separation Incentive-Special Separation Benefits) will create big challenges in several support areas as some offices may have to go shorthanded for a while. This is part of the Air Force effort to downsize, and the process will probably last into 1993 before we see things start to settle down. I think the challenge here at Reese is for people is to work around any personnel shortages until the force stabilizes. We need to keep in mind the long-range goals of downsizing as we work through this transition period.

Voting advice offered

As primaries and caucuses begin taking place around the country, many wing members have questions about their rights and responsibilities as voters. The following questions and answers are provided by the wing voting officer to assist U.S. citizens with an important privilege:

Q: I am a Texas resident but have not voted in many years in my home state. How do I vote?

A: Generally, once you have registered to vote, there is no need to reregister so long as you continue to live in the same precinct and you haven't been dropped from the rolls. You can be dropped for not having a current address and therefore being unable to respond to jury duty.

If you are still on the rolls, you will receive a new voter registration certificate every two years regardless of whether you exercise the right to vote. If you have changed addresses within the county, you must inform the registrar's office of the change within 90 days.

If you have changed counties, you must reregister in the new county. Simply send in the absentee ballot request to the new locality you wish to vote in. If you can, inform the old locality that you have changed to the new area. They may still have you on their rolls. Remember, you can vote only once.

Q: I am from North Carolina and have maintained my North Carolina residency but now live in Lubbock. What state can I vote in?

A: For legal purposes, you are a resident of the state you lived in last prior to entering the service or the state you now claim (as reflected in your leave and earnings statement). Consult with a legal assistance attorney at Reese on to how to make the change in residency.

Q: I am from Florida, have changed states of residency and am registered in Lubbock, Texas. What are my responsibilities?

A: You should notify Florida that you have changed voting residency; they may still have you on their rolls. You should also change your drivers license and register your vehicle to the new state so all the ties to the old state have been cut.

If you have other questions or need voting assistance, call Maj. Gary Tucker, the wing project officer, at 3284 or contact your unit voting representative.

Equipment issue getting set for outdoor season

Equipment items available for rent.

(Sgt. Greg Spraggins)

With spring just around the corner, the MWR equipment issue staff has been gearing up for the start of a busy outdoor recreation season.

Over the past month, Richard Cunningham and his staff have been repairing engines and reorganizing displays and equipment.

The doors will re-open for business March 2. Hours of operation are Monday and Friday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Tuesday and Thursday 1 to 5 p.m., closed Wednesdays, weekends and holidays.

A recreational vehicle show and recycling display will be held March 14 between the base exchange and commissary from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Mr. Cunningham will be on hand to answer questions about equipment issue. A few of the items on display will include fishing boats, pop-up campers, tents and camping equipment.

A yard and garden display will feature a tiller, lawn mower and gardening items. For people with a green thumb, a sign-up sheet for free base garden plots will be available.

Equipment issue provides a recreational vehicle storage lot for campers, boats and trailers.

People planning a picnic or having overnight guests can check out folding cots, sleeping bags and chairs, outdoor games and barbecue grills.

Equipment issue has many more items for the family on the go. Call 3815 for more information.

Family day care program going strong

Caregivers gaining skills through license training

The business of family day care has become an integral part of military child development programs. The family day care program reduces waiting lists for child care, provides evening and weekend care and accommodates young infants and children with special needs.

The family day care program at Reese began in July 1990 in keeping with military regulations and federal law.

Gail Everts became Reese's first licensed provider Oct. 1, 1990. During the past 15 months, the program has expanded to include licensed providers like Henrietta Falco, Mary Ann Naylor and Paula Williams. Veronica Casher has completed the initial requirements and should be licensed soon. One other applicant is in the process of being licensed.

The licensing process includes screenings by security police, social actions, housing and family advocacy and quarters inspections by environmental health, safety, the fire department and the Reese Child Development Center. Training includes 12 hours in child development, cardiopulmonary resuscitation and first aid. Applicants must also obtain a food handler's card and a medical certificate as a part of the initial training. Before licensing is completed, applicants must present proof of liability insurance. For further information, contact Gloria Goff, family day care coordinator at 3541 or come by Bldg. 341.

(Sgt. Greg Spraggins)

Oil changes, used oil recycling offered at auto hobby shop

An oil change can cost you more than you think. Dumping used motor oil is an environmental hazard and illegal. The Reese Auto Hobby Shop offers you an alternative to a stiff fine. Bring your used motor oil to the shop and they will recycle it.

Through March, an oil change costs $11.50 (regularly $13.95) on Saturdays.

This special includes up to five quarts of Pennzoil and filter, if the filter is in stock.

New hours of operation at the hobby shop are Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., Sundays from noon to 5 p.m. and closed on holidays. For more information on monthly specials and repair services call 3142.

Be Earth-wise — recycle!

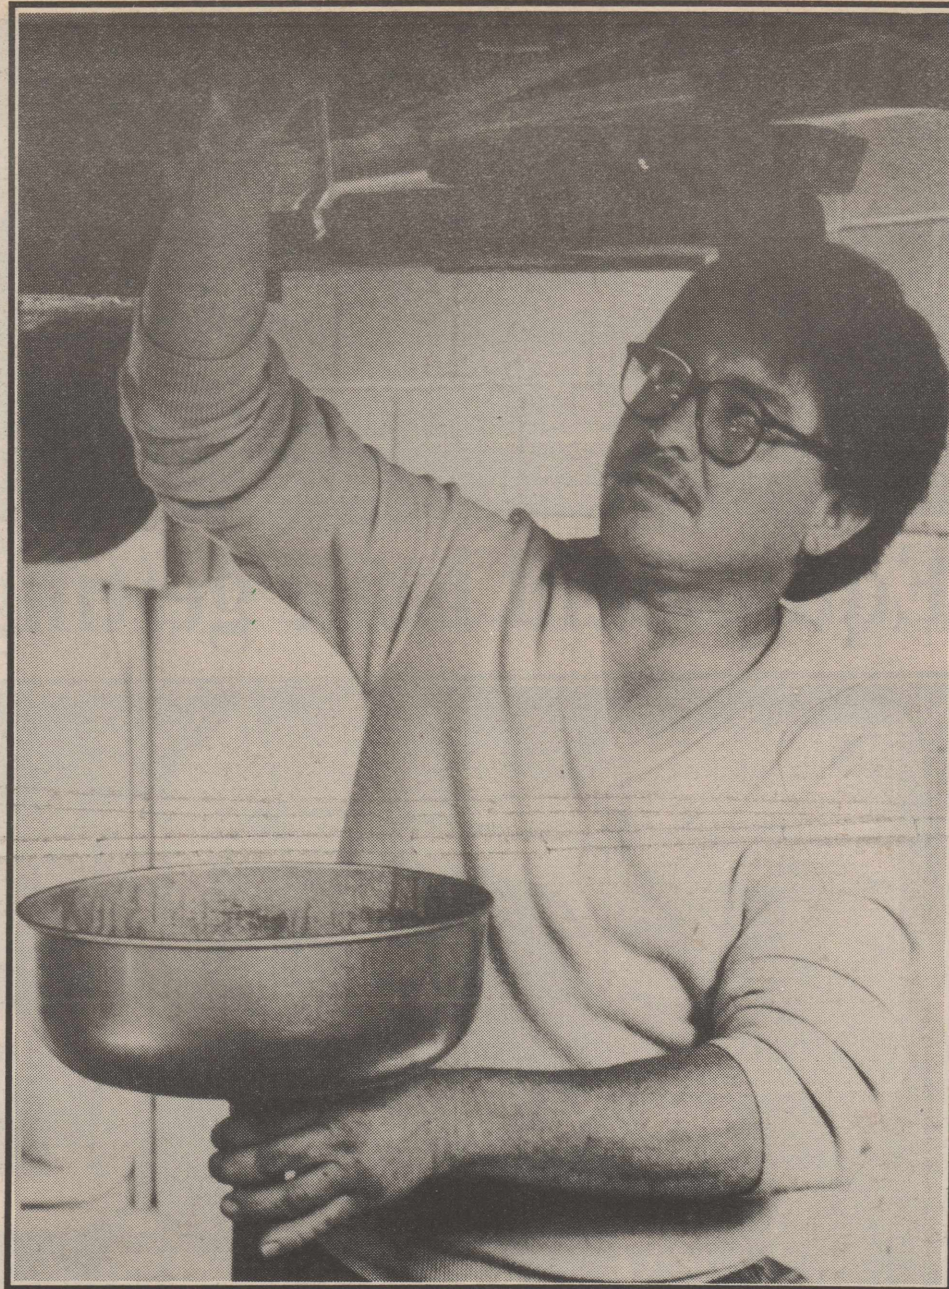

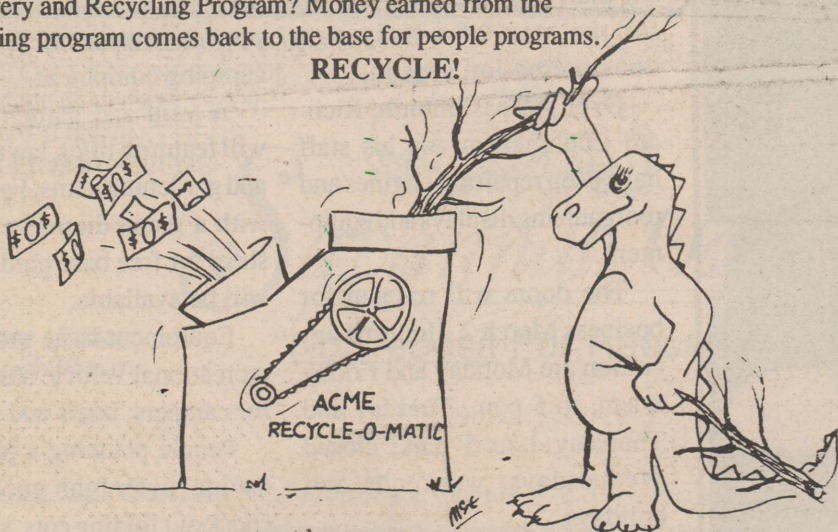

Learn more about our earth and recycling during special activities set for March 14 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. between the base exchange and commissary.

Items collected for the program include aluminum cans, glass, cardboard boxes, wooden pallets, metal, paper computer paper and lead acid car batteries.

Do you know what happens to monies earned through Reese's Resource, Recovery and Recycling Program? Money earned from the recycling program comes back to the base for people programs.

Top volunteer cited

"Lending a hand" has paid off for a wing NCO, as she has been named winner of the Reese "Helping Hand" Award for the past quarter.

SSgt. Elizabeth Burns of the Reese Area Defense Counsel's Office was cited for her volunteer work during the quarter. Her efforts included working with Lubbock Meals on Wheels, offering crisis counselling services through Trinity Church, volunteering for Camp Blue Yonder and helping with Special Olympics.

"I feel if I'm able to help someone, why not do it," Sergeant Burns said. "I try to treat people the way I would like to be treated, regardless of their situation."

"Sergeant Burns is a great example of someone who goes all out to help people," said Phil Thierry, director of the Reese Family Support Center, the agency that sponsors the award. "Her work benefits both the base and the Lubbock community."

Other nominees for the past quarter included Kathy Baker, 52nd Flying Training Squadron; SSgt. Derek Faison and Sgt. Michael Sisteck, 64th Operations Support Squadron; TSgt. Gustavo Hernandez, 64th Communications Squadron; Billy Jones, 64th Logistics Squadron; SSgt. Richard Lawrence, Alfred Chock and Margaret Lutz, 64th Medical Squadron; SSgt. Stewart Stanfield, 64th Security Police Squadron; Charlie Madgwick and Shirley Musil, 64th Services Squadron; Maria Davis, Josiane Goupie and Candace Uliano, Reese Family Services Center; and Belinda Slack, Air Force Sergeants Association Auxiliary.

Mr. Thierry said the first quarter nominations for helping hand awards are due to family support by May 1; nomination packets will be distributed in April. All active-duty members, retirees and civilian employees are eligible. For more information, call the center at 3305.

Helen Thai faced a challenge when she accepted a dual role at the Reese Family Support Center as the base volunteer resource program coordinator and as the center's administrative assistant.

As the volunteer coordinator, Mrs. Thai plans, establishes, implements, maintains, publicizes and coordinates on- and off-base volunteer needs and opportunities. As the administrative assistant, she is also responsible for carrying out day-to-day office duties.

Mrs. Thai enjoys working with her co-workers, especially the volunteers.

"I have a lot of respect and admiration for people who sacrifice their time and efforts to help others," said Mrs. Thai. "They carry out their volunteer services with pride and do not even want any rewards or publicity. This is very honorable because it comes from the heart."

Mrs. Thai received her bachelor degree in business administration from the University of South Florida. She plans to pursue a graduate degree in the near future.

Her personnel management career was interrupted when her husband, Capt. Paul Doan, 64th Medical Squadron, completed his medical internship at Travis AFB, Calif., and received an assignment to Reese. Looking on the bright side, she said that her well-rounded skills and experience in a variety of fields should give her an edge in the job markets in the future.

Mrs. Thai enjoys spending free time with her husband, and she also takes part in her church activities and worships.

Energy advice offered by 1st Lt. Lance Manion assistant energy conservation monitor

In the United States, the average family's wasted energy results in more than 11,200 pounds of pollutants being dumped into the atmosphere each year, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

The good news is that people can stop this pollution while simultaneously saving energy dollars. Below are several tips that can be applied throughout a house to help save energy and protect the environment.

□ Stop air leaks: Air leaks can rob a home of heat in the winter and cool air in the summer, thus driving up costs. Weather stripping and caulking are quick and easy solutions that can be used to seal most leaks, generally around doors and windows.

□ Cut hot water bills: The average family can pay over $400 a year for hot water. Three easy fixes can help trim up to $120, or 30 percent, off that figure.

— Add an insulation jacket to your hot water heater and the two feet of cold water pipe nearest the tank.

— Set the water heater temperature at 120-140 degrees (low to medium).

— Install low-flow shower heads and faucet aerators.

□ Buy efficient appliances: Old appliances are energy hogs. New appliances, especially refrigerators, can pay for themselves very quickly by helping to reduce your electric bills by up to $150.

Remember, people have an obligation to save our environment. One of the easiest ways of doing this is to conserve energy.

Reese bodybuilder 'Killen' the competition

by Sgt. Greg Spraggins
photo editor

Crash! Crash! Crash!

The weights never seem to stop, until it's competition time. For a Reese senior airman, weightlifting has become more than a hobby. It is the path to his goal — to be the national bodybuilding champion.

SrA. Rob Killen, a 24-year-old base fitness advisor, has already put Mr. South Texas and Mr. Lubbock titles under his belt and placed fifth in national intercollegiate competition last year. He is scheduled to compete in April for the Mr. Texas title in Dallas.

Airman Killen initially began weight training to gain strength and size for high school football in Hampton, Va., where he was a two-time all-state selection as line-backer. He first began training with the weights seriously at age 13 and joined his first club at 14. Airman Killen said he never considered bodybuilding competition until after he enlisted in the Air Force in 1987. After arriving at Reese, he continued to lift and entered his first bodybuilding contest in July 1988 at Shepherd AFB, Texas, when he was 19.

"I bombed out," he said. "I had a lot to learn about training and nutrition. So I worked at it, went back the next year, and was the runner-up. It just takes time."

It would seem to some that there are no negative aspects to bodybuilding, but Airman Killen said there are plenty of rough times to go with the good.

"Competition is tough," he said. "Bodybuilding competition is not something you just decide to do. It has to become your lifestyle."

Airman Killen said the toughest part about bodybuilding competition, without a doubt, is the rigorous precontest diet. He eats four to six meals daily, specifically focusing on certain amounts of protein and carbohydrates, and trains on weights two or three times each day.

In addition to the diet, he said that social life, friendships and relationships are sometimes strained while preparing for a contest because training, posing, tanning, dieting and other details have to be performed religiously to ensure top performance on contest day.

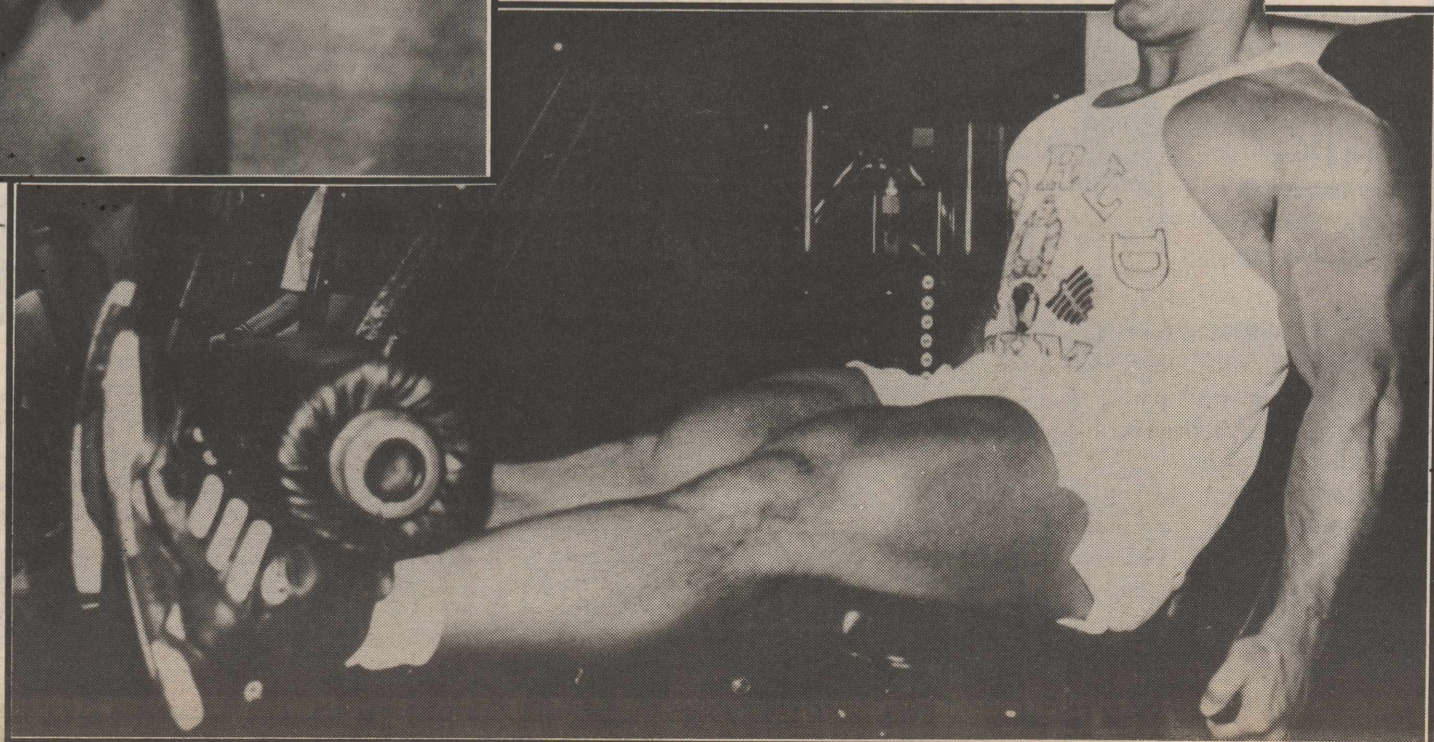

"Even though I'm on stage competing against other guys, I don't look at it like that," he said. "I'm competing against myself; and as long as I can improve a little for every show, then I consider myself successful." However, Airman Killen is the first to admit he doesn't like to finish in second place either. "The training is the easy part, at least most of the time," he said. "It builds character and discipline, and I try to let those traits carry over into other aspects of my life."

A reflection of that philosophy was evident when Airman Killen completed his bachelor's degree in fitness and recreation management at Wayland Baptist University in August. He is currently working on his master's degree.

(Sgt. Greg Spraggins)
