From my perspective

by Lt. Col. Mark Edwards
Wing Safety Chief

With less than 30 days left in the "101 Critical Days of Summer," the Air Force has incurred 22 fatalities—six more than the summer of 1992. The nature of these fatalities varied, but the causes were basically the same—failure to think before acting. The following is a breakdown of 21 of these 22 tragedies:

□ Motor vehicle accidents: 14 fatalities occurred due to alcohol use, excessive speed, fatigue and failure to use seat belts—actions that continue to dominate accidents with private motor vehicles.

□ Sports and recreation: Five tragic drownings happened this summer from the following causes—alcohol use while swimming, individuals' attempts to exceed personal capabilities and failure to wear personal flotation devices.

□ On duty: Two Air Force fatalities also occurred this summer from carelessness on the job.

Four of the 22 fatalities happened to personnel assigned to AETC - two private motor vehicle accidents (Sheppard AFB, Texas, and Lowry AFB, Colo.) and one drowning at Tyndall AFB, Fla. The fourth tragedy (which was not in the aforementioned breakdown) was the electrocution of a Reese member, Capt. Cody Carr, while on leave at his parent's home. The electrocution occurred when Captain Carr attempted to erect a 33-foot citizens band antenna and the antenna came in contact with a 7,200-volt, overhead power line.

Each and everyone of us has sat through countless ground safety briefings over the course of our Air Force career. No doubt, many of you have looked upon these briefings as a mundane waste of your time. After all, we all are adults, and we don't need to be lectured about safety.

I'm sure the 22 Air Force members who died this summer had the same thoughts. It's too bad for them and the loved ones behind that they didn't listen....and think before they took their last fated act.

New AF secretary bids welcome, sets goals

by Sheila Widnall
Secretary of the Air Force

I am extremely proud to be secretary of the world's preeminent air force. I view this honor as an opportunity, not an achievement. As such, I will always seek to learn from you.

Your dedication in times of national peril, disaster, and humanitarian relief, whether on active duty, in the guard or reserve or in the civilian ranks, inspires me as I am called to serve you and this great nation.

My goal is to "build a quality air force for today and tomorrow." Quality for today translates into readiness - the ability to create, sustain and deploy highly mobile forces to project America's global reach and global power. Quality for tomorrow means always being prepared to meet our future national security objectives. Top-notch people and leading-edge technologies are keys to both.

Taking care of our people demands special attention at every leadership level - starting with me. My concern will be reflected in my personal attention to pay, promotions, training and retention, and by ensuring a high quality of life for you and your families. I owe it to you, the men and women who sacrifice so much for this nation every day, to always be your advocate.

The Air Force was built on the promise of technology. We must maintain our technological edge to fight and win in the future, but "business as usual" will no longer work as we develop, buy and sustain new technology. Our procurement dollars must be managed so that today's problems never jeopardize tomorrow's combat capability. Our toughest challenge will be to continue to absorb budget cuts wisely.

I also bring with me a fundamental belief in the need for integrity, both in human relations and in professional behavior. I have always been impressed with the Air Force's uncompromisingly high standards of integrity. We must maintain them. Integrity and the mutual trust and credibility it fosters are key to our continued success. I will accept nothing less from myself and from each of you.

In our fast changing world, your professionalism is one constant I know I can count on. In every association I've had with the Air Force, you have demonstrated the real meaning of public service. You made this the world's most respected Air Force, and I'll work with you to keep it that way.

School's in!

Frenship schools open Thursday and Lubbock schools open Aug. 23. Watch out for children and school buses. Control your speed in school zones.

Editor's note: "One on one" is a periodic Roundup column designed to give wing leaders and other Air Force officials the opportunity to express their views on the issues and events that affect Reese members.

This week, the Roundup goes "One on one" with Col. William Reynolds, 64th FTW vice commander.

As the vice commander, what are some of the challenges you foresee for the wing?

We've got a new team on board; lots of new squadron commanders. There also are lots of people in key positions who have been here a while. Developing a sense of teamwork is going to be a challenge, although I don't think it will be a difficult one.

Actually, I expect it to be fun. With all the new people, there will likely be lots of new ideas, and that will give us a real opportunity to bring out the best in everyone.

I think we've got some continuing challenges in the environmental arena. We're communicating with the (environmental) regulators, and that's the key to this whole business — communications.

It will require considerable resources to take care of some things that were done in the past, some things many years ago. Some of our biggest problems are the result of things that were done in the 1950s and earlier. I think environmental issues are going to be a real challenge, both from the managerial standpoint and the financial standpoint, as we work to remediate some of the sites we have now.

Getting the whole Reese team involved in protecting the environment is essential to a successful, sustained effort in this area.

You're also the wing inspector general. In a nutshell, what is your role as the IG?

Typically, the IG is an avenue for people to register complaints and get satisfaction for their problems. I see my role as that of a conduit people can turn to when they don't have other avenues.

So, I'll be a sounding board for people and help them resolve their problems. In some cases, it may be that their problems aren't within the jurisdiction of the IG system. If that happens, I'll point them in the right direction. And, of course, if it is something I can help with, I'll do it.

One on one

Col. William Reynolds 64th FTW Vice Commander

What are some examples of areas not covered under the IG system?

Civil matters, for instance. On those, I'll get people in touch with civil authorities, security police, legal counsel — whoever's appropriate. If it's a problem with a supervisor, or the individual can't go through the chain of command for personal reasons, I'll try to work that out of channels.

Those examples cover the two extremes. As the IG, I think my charter is to be flexible and ensure that matters are handled the best way possible.

A complete listing of the matters that the IG is restricted from handling is in Air Force Regulation 123-11.

Doesn't the IG system offer protections to the people who make use of it?

Absolutely. People may remain anonymous if they need to. There's also protection against reprisals. If you come to me with a problem about your supervisor, for example, he or she can't take any action against you.

I will protect complainants — that's my job.

What areas in the wing have caught your interest since your arrival here?

The professionalism, pride and dedication of the Reese family! I'm especially excited about our relationship with our neighbors in Lubbock and surrounding communities. We have some excellent programs established — such as the Host Family

Mike Parrish

Program — which I'm looking forward to being involved in further.

In the several months since the Quality Air Force Assessment, how has the wing been doing in responding to AETC regarding the problem areas discovered during the inspection?

We're doing well. There are still some outstanding items — some long-range fixes — that need to be taken care of. We're working on those, and as I said, it's going very well.

The key is we did well on the inspection, so there aren't a lot of big problems to correct.

There's been a lot of publicity lately about specialized UPT, what with Reese graduating the Air Force's first SUPT class two weeks ago. From your perspective, how is SUPT doing here?

We're in full swing; we have been for several months. I think everything is going well.

The most obvious aspect (of SUPT) is the T-1A. With any new system, there are going to be some bugs that have to be worked out — that's typical. We're seeing some of those things on the T-1A, but nothing serious.

We're working on procedures and we're working on the training syllabus, ensuring that we have the best training program we can, and these things will be going on for some time.

I'm excited about SUPT. We're doing what we need to do to make sure the "product" we turn out is ready to go into either an airlift-tanker environment or a bomber-fighter environment; the T-38 program has also been modified so that we can be more responsive to the bomber-fighter community.

Overall, we're on track. We have a lot of opportunities to make improvements, and we're working on them.

Anything to add?

I'm delighted to be here. As an operations commander, I didn't have the chance to see things from the broad perspective I have in this job.

Now I have a chance to see a lot of the support side of the house and get involved in the things that "make" the mission.

Two wing members picked for OTS

by SSgt. Mike Breslin
Editor

Two wing members have been selected for Officer Training School.

SSgt. Shashi Jairam, 64th Security Police Squadron, and SrA. Carlos Messer, 64th Operations Support Squadron, were among 92 people chosen by OTS Selection Board 94-02. Both of them have had their sights set on this goal for a long time.

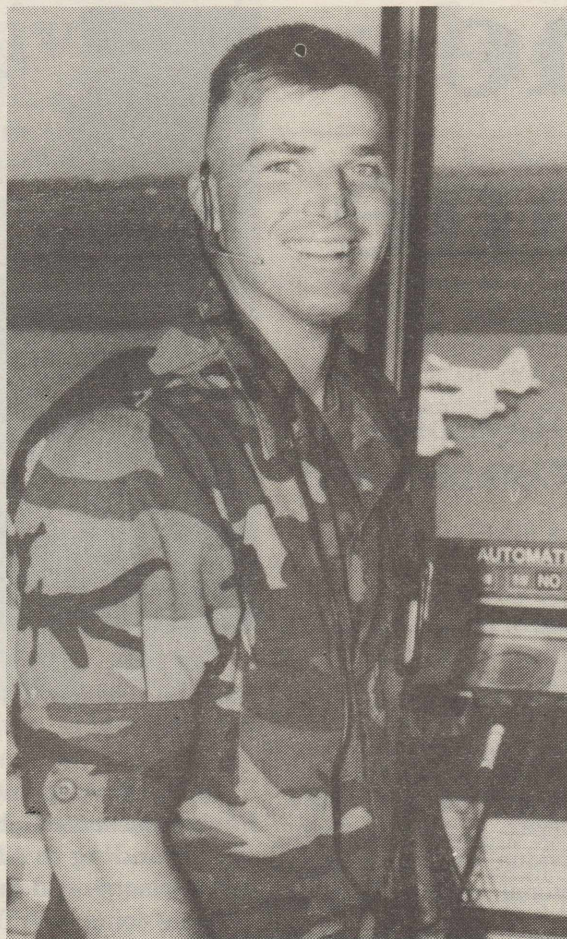

"That's why I originally came in," Airman Messer, 27, said of his desire for a commission.

When he enlisted two-and-a-half years ago, he already had his degree from Pan American University in his hometown of San Antonio. However, he had mixed feelings when he made his formal application.

"I was reluctant because the selection rate was pretty low — 10 to 11 percent," said the air traffic controller. "Luckily, the rate went up this time."

Unlike Airman Messer, Sergeant Jairam had to complete his degree after enlisting. Determined to earn his degree and apply for commissioning, the SP endured some setbacks along the way.

"I had to drop some classes

Airman Messer SSgt. Mike Breslin

Sergeant Jairam SSgt. Mike Breslin

because of TDYs," the 24-year-old said, noting that the longest was his six-month deployment during the Gulf War. "Once I came back from the Persian Gulf, I really started hitting it, taking three or four classes a semester.

"I finally got Bootstrap and was able to wrap it up," the Wayland Baptist University graduate said, referring to the Air Force education program that allows qualified enlisted members to go to school full time to finish their degree.

"I knew I had a good package; I had some really strong recommendations, but you still never know what they're looking for," the sergeant said, describing his attitude when he submitted his application. "I figured I had a 50-50 chance."

Both selectees had strong reactions to the news of the selection.

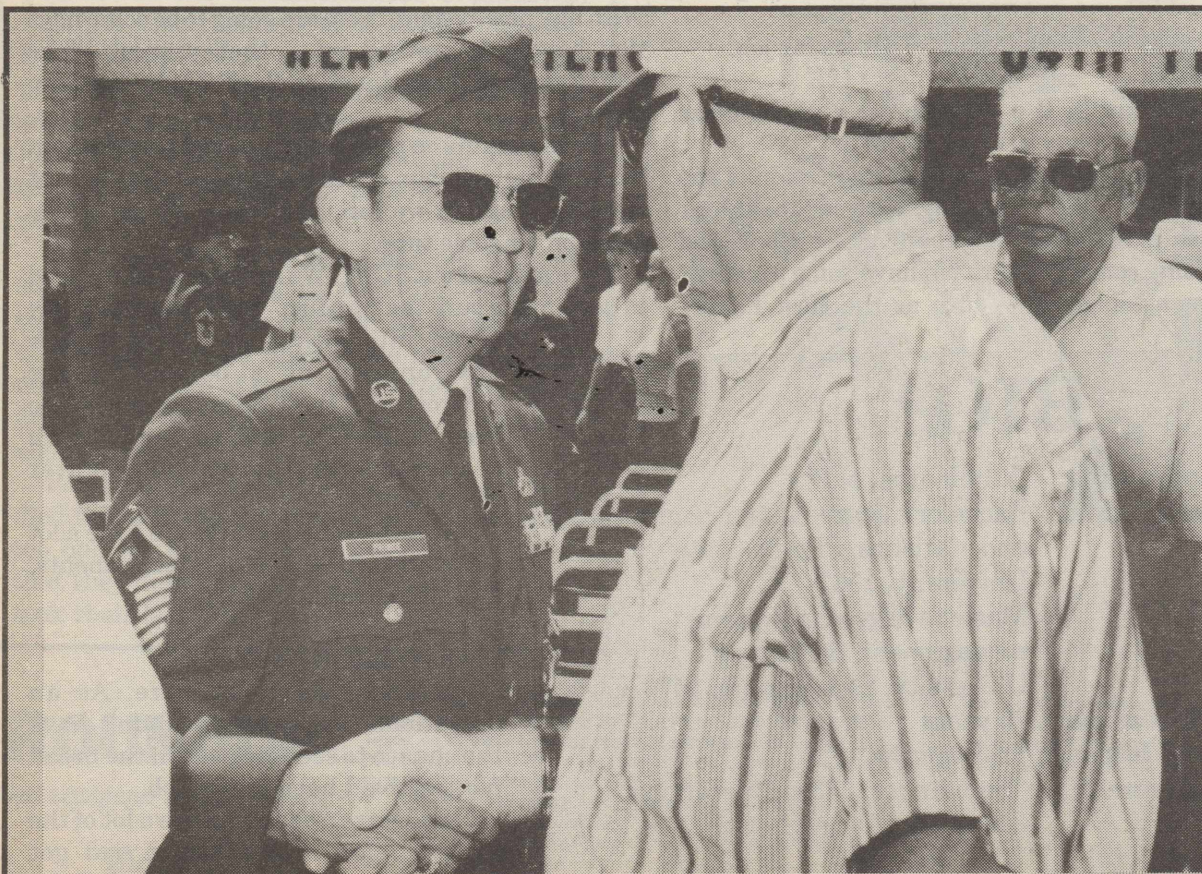

"I kind of doubted the news at first, but then my knees got weak as it settled in," said Sergeant Jairam, a four-and-a-half-year service veteran. "It was a few hours before it wore off and I started feeling like myself again."

Airman Messer got the word via a phone call while in San Antonio. He recalled with a laugh that he "jumped and leaped around a bit" at the news.

Though neither has been given a starting date for OTS yet, both know what they will be doing after graduation. Sergeant Jairam will remain an SP, while Airman Messer will fly the E-3 Airborne Warning and Control System, better known as the AWACS.

Despite their achievements, neither of the future officers are resting on their laurels. Already looking to the future, Airman Messer said he wants to finish his master's degree and be a career officer, while Sergeant Jairam said his "dream" is to attend law school.

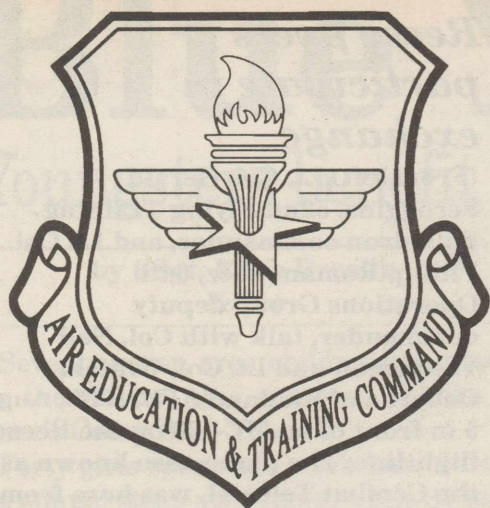

Airman Messer and his wife, Darlene, have two children — Joshua, 3, and newborn Jared. Sergeant Jairam is engaged to SrA. Laura Holt, 64th Flying Training Wing.

Sergeant Prince retires

SMSgt. Roy Prince, 64th Civil Engineering Squadron, is congratulated following his retirement ceremony Aug. 5 in front of wing headquarters. Sergeant Prince, CES first sergeant, served in the Air Force for 25 years. He served at Reese 11 years, spending most of that time as first sergeant for the 64th Mission Support Squadron and later CES.

Blue Yonder

Youngsters benefit from base, civic efforts

by SSgt. Mike Breslin
Editor

Seventy-seven area children are avoiding the "blues" this summer, thanks to Reese's Camp Blue Yonder.

Forty girls spent last week here during the annual sleep-over camp, while 37 boys wrap up their five-day session at Reese today. The camp is for 8- to 11-year-old, underprivileged children from Lubbock and is run by volunteer base counselors.

The children aren't the only ones who enjoy the camp.

"I'd definitely do it again," said Amn. Sandra Finney, 64th Logistics Squadron, a counselor for the girl's camp. Her favorite part was watching the kids "come out of their shells" when they went roller skating during the camp.

2nd Lt. J.R. Boddy of LS, a counselor with the boy's camp, said that one of his motivations was the enjoyment he gets from working with kids. He added that he has worked several camps before this one.

Of course, the children were the main beneficiaries of the activities. Jayson Florez, who turns 10 Sunday, said his favorite part was going to Texas Water Rampage and Joyland. Other campers, such as Richard Banda, 9, and Miguel Angel

Garcia, 10, shared that opinion, saying that was what they most looked forward to at the start of camp.

Nine-year-old Jaime Gonzalez, a participant at last year's camp, verified their expectations, saying it had been the best part of his experience last year.

While the camp is meant to be fun, it isn't all games. All the children receive physical exams at the start of the camp from 64th Medical Squadron personnel. In addition, camp activities include trips to the Lubbock Police and Fire Departments, a visit from base chapel personnel and an awards ceremony the last day.

This year's camp was a "big success" according to project officer 2nd Lt. David Trotta. He gave the credit to the nearly three dozen base people who volunteered as counselors, as well as base and civic organizations who made financial contributions to Camp Blue Yonder. These agencies included the Junior League of Lubbock, LS, Reese Protestant and Catholic Chaplain Funds, 64th Operations Support Squadron and Reese Officers Wives Club.

"The looks on the faces of these kids makes every bit of the effort worthwhile," Lieutenant Trotta said. "There's nothing like it. It seems like this is their best time of the year."

Quality Air Force

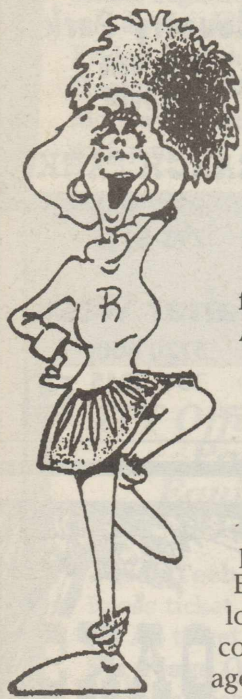

Is 99.9 percent Quality Good Enough?

In the U.S. it would mean —

- One hour of unsafe drinking water per month
- Two unsafe landings at O'Hare Airport per day
- 16,000 lost pieces of mail every hour
- 20,000 incorrect drug prescriptions each year
- 500 incorrect surgical operations performed each week
- 22,000 checks deducted from the wrong account each hour

'Don't tell' means don't tell

General McPeak clarifies new policy on homosexuals

WASHINGTON — Military members who reveal their homosexuality will be "headed for the door," the Air Force's senior leader told Congress late last month.

"Don't tell means don't tell," said Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Merrill A. McPeak, alluding to the president's new policy on homosexuals in the military which Defense Secretary Les Aspin dubbed "don't ask, don't tell, don't pursue."

The policy becomes effective Oct. 1.

General McPeak, the other service chiefs, Aspin and Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Colin Powell spent two days on Capitol Hill answering a barrage of questions about the new policy. The panel met the Senate Armed Services Committee July 20, and the House Subcommittee on Military Forces and Personnel the following day.

In three hours of questioning July 20, House members asked the panel to explain perceived inconsistencies and gray areas in the policy and how commanders determine whether to investigate an individual's alleged homosexuality.

General McPeak's answers July 21 were prompted by four hypothetical situations from the committee chairman, Rep. Ike Skelton (D-Mo.).

Skelton asked the panel how each, as a second lieutenant — or the service equivalent — would handle these scenarios:

□ A private walks into your office and says, "Lieutenant, I must tell you I am gay."

At Reese

Statistics at Reese bear out General McPeak's comments before Congress. According to officials in the Reese Legal Office, no one has been discharged because of homosexuality in the past two years here. In that same period, however, one person "headed for the door" because of drug use, while nine others were discharged because of their weight.

Wing members with questions on the new homosexual policy can call the legal office at 3505.

□ Another private walks into your office and says, "Lieutenant, I don't know, I may be gay."

□ You go to the 6:30 a.m. physical training session and all the troops yell, "Good morning lieutenant, we're all gay."

□ Every Friday night for two months, a private gets off the bus with his buddies in the adjoining town and walks into a gay bar. He is also seen nearly every day reading gay magazines stacked next to his bunk and he appears in a gay parade in a nearby city.

General McPeak began his response by saying the new policy "defines a homosexual statement as a type of homosexual conduct."

"The airman who comes to the orderly room and tells me he is homosexual is headed for the door. He's leaving the Air Force. Don't tell means don't tell." Pursuing the rebuttable presumption is the airman's problem, he said.

To the airman who doesn't know if he is homosexual, General McPeak said he would tell him to "come back when you've made up your mind."

"This is not 'don't tell,'" General McPeak said. "This is a guy coming in that's a little confused, who wants to talk things over, so we'll get him the help he needs."

In the third situation he said, "These guys are all going home because that is a statement about homosexuality which is as a type of conduct."

General McPeak said in his interpretation of the new policy, isolated instances of someone going to a gay bar, attending a gay parade or reading gay literature "do not give the commander the right set of indicators" for an investigation.

However, Skelton's fourth scenario presented a pattern of conduct that General McPeak said, in his judgment, was enough for a commander to launch an inquiry.

General McPeak then tried to put into context the size of the problem of homosexuals in the military, saying he may have "sounded a little like a hard-liner."

He said the Air Force discharged 10,000 people involuntarily in 1992. Of those, 115 involved homosexuality. About two-thirds of the 115 cases were for conduct that would still be subject to action, such as an investigation, under the new policy.

"We're talking about 40 to 45 cases of homosexual statements unassociated with any provable homosexual acts," General McPeak said. "My hunch is that most of those people wanted out of the Air Force, so they came in to their commander and said they were homosexual." He said under the new policy those people would still be out of the Air Force.

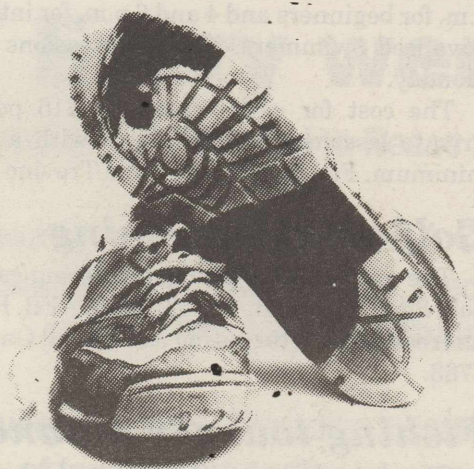

"What we're focused on here is that very small number where a person wanted to make a statement about homosexuality and wanted to stay in the Air Force. Each of these cases is worth considering at length because they're human cases and we should take them seriously. But this is not the biggest problem in the world."

He said the Air Force involuntarily discharged five times as many people for drug abuse and 10 times as many for being overweight last year as it did for homosexuality.

The Air Force also conducted approximately 6,000 investigations and only 35 involved homosexuality, General McPeak said.

"Administratively, the impact of this new policy is not going to be great on us. This is all within the limits of workability for a reasonably competent commander."

General McPeak said in a July 23 message to commanders, "Ensure that everyone under your command understands that as members of the greatest Air Force in the world, it is our duty and responsibility to carry out the new policy." (Air Force News Service)

Texas Tech discount tickets available through ITT office

All-American Hill sparks Tech's Red Raider attack

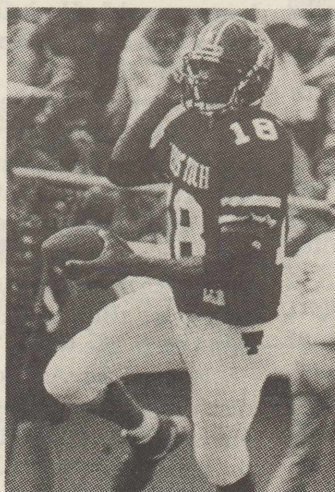

by MSgt. Ralph D. Monson
Wing Public Affairs

"Robert Hill takes the snap from center. He fakes to tailback Byron Morris. He's looking long for Lloyd Hill — touchdown Texas Tech."

Red Raider fans can expect to see that scenario played out a lot this season as Texas Tech hopes to parlay one of the nation's most explosive offenses and an improved defense into a post-season bowl berth.

In cooperation with the Texas Tech Athletic Department, Reese's Information, Ticket and Tour Office is once again offering discount tickets for all Red Raider home games.

The tickets, which are for seats in section 118, are $18 per

Tech All-American
Lloyd Hill

seat for all games except Texas A&M. Tickets for the Aggie game are $23.

These are excellent seats, located on the upper level between the 30- and 45-yard lines.

This year's home slate opens against Pacific on Sept. 4. Following road trips to Nebraska, Georgia and Baylor, the Raiders return home to face Texas A&M Oct. 2. Tech hosts North Carolina State Oct. 9 and Rice for homecoming Oct. 16.

Three of the last four games are on the road, starting with Texas Oct. 30. Texas Christian University comes to Lubbock for "Family Day" Nov. 6. Tech plays at Southern Methodist University Nov. 13 and ends the regular season against Houston at the new Alamo Dome in San Antonio Nov. 20.

Despite finishing 5-6 a year ago and a non-conference schedule that may be the toughest in the nation, there is plenty of optimism in the Raider camp.

Tech's offense ranked 17th nationally in 1992, rolling up 423 yards per game while averaging better than five yards per play.

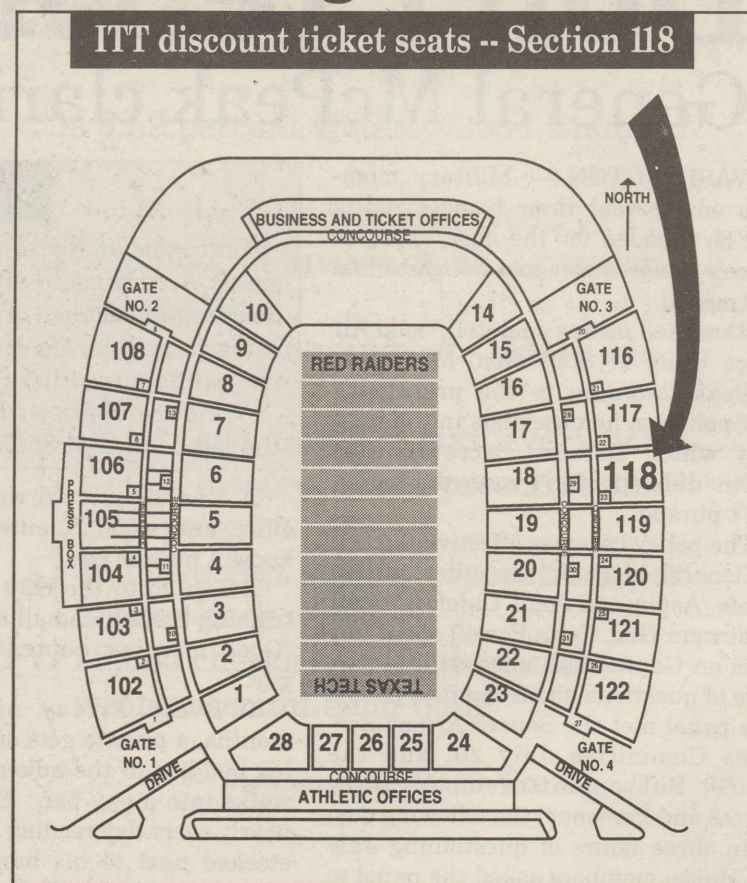

That statistic is even more impressive when you consider that the defense was so soft that the offense was only on the field 48 percent of the time.

The offense features All-American wide receiver Hill, who may be the best wideout to come out of college since Jerry Rice.

Hill averaged a touchdown every 6.3 times he touched the ball, while leading the nation with an average 114 yards per game as a junior.

Senior quarterback Robert Hill and Byron Morris, the nation's top returning rusher, will operate behind a veteran offensive line. Have no doubts, Tech will field a top-10 offensive unit.

The question mark is defense. If Tech has any hope of going to a bowl, the defense must step forward. Defensive coordinator Carlos Mainord is now a secondary coach with the Chicago Bears and Tech head coach Spike Dykes has personally taken over the defense.

A switch to a much more aggressive 4-4 defense could be the cure Tech needs.

Defensive end Shawn Jackson, held and double teamed most of last season, should regain his all conference status this year. Tech is faster at nearly every position.

Individual game tickets will remain on sale at ITT until 6 p.m. Tuesday prior to that game. For additional information, call 3787.
