

Senior officer moves planned at Reese

Colonel Reynolds

Two of the top spots in the 64th FTW will change hands this summer as Wing Vice Commander Col. Bob Negley retires and 64th Operations Group Commander Col. F. Randall Starbuck departs for a new assignment.

Colonel Negley is scheduled to retire Aug. 1, wrapping up 28 years of military service. His current tour at Reese began in April 1991. Colonel Starbuck has been here since September 1992. He is scheduled for an assignment in Italy, reporting in July.

Colonel Negley will be replaced by Col. William Reynolds, currently the commander of the 323rd Operations Group at Mather AFB, Calif. Colonel Reynolds is a 24-year veteran and a command pilot with more than 3,000 hours in the T-37, T-38, F-4, O-2 and F-16 aircraft.

He is a Florida State University graduate and he earned his wings at Laredo AFB, Texas.

Colonel Starbuck will be replaced by Col. Frank Geisler, the deputy commander of the 58th Operations Group at Luke AFB, Ariz. Colonel Geisler has been in the Air Force 21 years. He is also a command pilot, with more than 3,000 hours in the F-4, F-5, YF-110 and F-15A/C/E aircraft.

Colonel Geisler is a graduate of the University of Florida and he earned his wings at Reese.

Dates for retirement and change-of-command ceremonies have yet to be announced.

First female student gets fighter

by SSgt. Mike Breslin
editor

In a manner of speaking, things have come full circle for 2nd Lt. Maria Randolph. A member of Reese UPT Class 93-10, she became the first female student in the Air Force to receive a fighter aircraft straight out of training during assignment night May 7.

It's somewhat ironic that the historic event took place in the same place where the lieutenant's interest in being a pilot "took flight."

"I visited Reese in the summer of '89 when I was in ROTC," said the Michigan State University graduate. "I got a T-37 orientation ride while I was here, and that's when I really became interested in flying."

Lieutenant Randolph, a Virginia native, chose an F-15 assignment at Tyndall AFB, Fla. She was the first to choose among her classmates and third overall in the command.

During each assignment "drop," as they are called, the four training bases in ATC link up on a conference call and active-duty students pick aircraft based on their ranking in class and the base's spot in the rotation for that drop. National guardsmen, reservists and foreign students do not participate. With the third pick overall, the 24-year-old lieutenant knew she could have one of the four available F-15s if she desired.

Now that she has it, it still has not completely settled in.

She said she is "still partially in disbelief." However, her fellow flyers in the 54th FTS "H" Flight have little doubt that she'll succeed in F-15s.

"Lieutenant Randolph has been a strong performer in T-38s," said Capt. Edward Brockhaus, flight commander. "I'm sure she'll apply herself in follow-on training in the same outstanding manner she's applied herself while in UPT."

"Everyone has been really supportive," said Lieutenant Randolph, who graduates June 11. "All the pilots I've spoken to who have F-15 experience have had nothing but good things to say. I'm looking forward to it."

Armed Forces Day messages

by Bill Clinton
president

Armed Forces Day is a time to celebrate the special bond between this nation and its men and women in uniform. That bond was formed when the first patriots left their homes to fight for independence and was strengthened in the years that followed during America's battles to preserve that freedom. The bond remains strong today and reaches to each servicemember deployed around the world.

America and the world have changed, but your mission has not. You are asked to defend this nation and its values. Your role is vital in protecting American interests and in creating a world environment in which freedom and democracy can endure.

Americans look to today's armed forces and see an institution that performs its duty successfully. They see dedicated men and women training hard. They see Americans in uniform helping others when disaster strikes at home and providing humanitarian relief in all parts of the world. They see what is best in America.

You can be proud of your vigilance in defense of our country's freedom, and you can count on the support of the American people. On behalf of your fellow citizens, I thank you for your valuable service to our nation. (Air Force News Service)

by Michael Donley
secretary of the Air Force

America will honor you and members of other services on Armed Forces Day — Saturday — for your continued commitment to freedom in an uncertain and evolving world.

Whether it be feeding a starving nation in dry and dusty Africa, air-dropping much needed food and medicine in war-torn Bosnia, or conducting peace-keeping operations in Europe and Southwest Asia, you have proven capable of responding to whatever crises erupt. As times and missions change, you continue to be as dedicated and competent as ever.

Please accept my thanks for your teamwork during these dynamic times. Even in this fast-changing world, you've proven some things don't change — like the pride and professionalism of America's men and women in blue.

I'm proud to serve my country with people like you. (Air Force News Service)

by Gen. Henry Viccellio Jr.
ATC commander

In May 1950, President Harry Truman signed the proclamation creating Armed Forces Day. The signing was significant then, since it came less than three years after the creation of our Air Force and the Defense Department, and because it merged three separate days of celebration — one each for the Army, Navy/Marines, and Air Force — into one joint commemoration which recognizes all of our nation's military. The reason for the proclamation creating Armed Forces Day was driven home just one month after it was signed — the Korean War erupted, and once again all of our country's forces were thrust into a far-off arena to defend our national interests.

Just as the proclamation was significant for its attention to "jointness" in 1950, it is even more so today as our forces draw down in the wake of communism's collapse. More and more, we are training jointly, exercising jointly, working jointly, and ready to fight jointly . . . as Desert Storm so clearly revealed. It is only appropriate that we celebrate this day jointly, recognizing the dedication and sacrifices — past and present — of our entire United States armed forces.

As we acknowledge the honor paid us on May 15, let us reaffirm our commitment to our nation and its military forces, and to the oath we have each taken to serve them both.

Air Force vision: "Air Force people building the world's most respected air and space force . . . global power and reach for America."

Quality Air Force

by Capt. Val Bigger
64th Operations Support Squadron

We all regularly make jokes about the high-tech world we live in. What was a $2,000 computer system five years ago is now not much more than a boat anchor. Equipment upgrades are occurring at a phenomenal rate, and this really struck home 12 months ago in the Operations Group Learning Center. What had been ATC's best locally-produced audiovisual flight training videos during the last inspection cycle became the worst in the command, all because of technology upgrades.

For the Air Force to maintain its "world's greatest Air Force" status, quality training products are essential. Once our basic problem was recognized, we resolved to identify the scope of the problem and find solutions.

The first step in our problem-solving process was to build a team of experts from throughout the base. After extensive consultation with both the operations and support group commanders, a core team of individuals — consisting of telecommunication and flying training experts — was assembled; they took the initial steps to resolve the problem.

What were the problems, real and perceived? Who were the customers? What was the desired end product? What agency appeared to have the answers? These were the kinds of questions being asked. The basic end product was easily defined: upgraded training products. So the team began to focus on one key area: how to get the high-tech equipment necessary to begin production of these high quality training videos.

The goal established, the team undertook a massive research effort, both to determine what equipment was needed and where the money would come from. Eventually 60,000 unfunded dollars were spent purchasing computers, software, stereo equipment and video recorders. At the same time, a massive self-help project began. A new multi-purpose production room was built; a tele-prompter was designed and built from scratch; limited facility space was reallocated for better utilization. This provided the hardware and facility space necessary to do the job, but not the technical expert to put it all together.

That's when the personnel system went to work finding the right person for the job in managing all this high-tech gadgetry. Once identified, this individual went to work developing scripts and building production schedules designed to produce our new training videos.

The real test, had we hit the mark, was two-fold. First, our customers, the instructors and student pilots, evaluated the initial products as being far superior to the older videos they replaced. Second, the IG came in, reviewed the work, and rated the work as "Outstanding."

The process is not over. More videos are being produced weekly, the material is constantly being upgraded and continuously being evaluated by our customers, the student pilots, and ultimately the "world's greatest Air Force."

Reese doctor 'flies high' in ATC

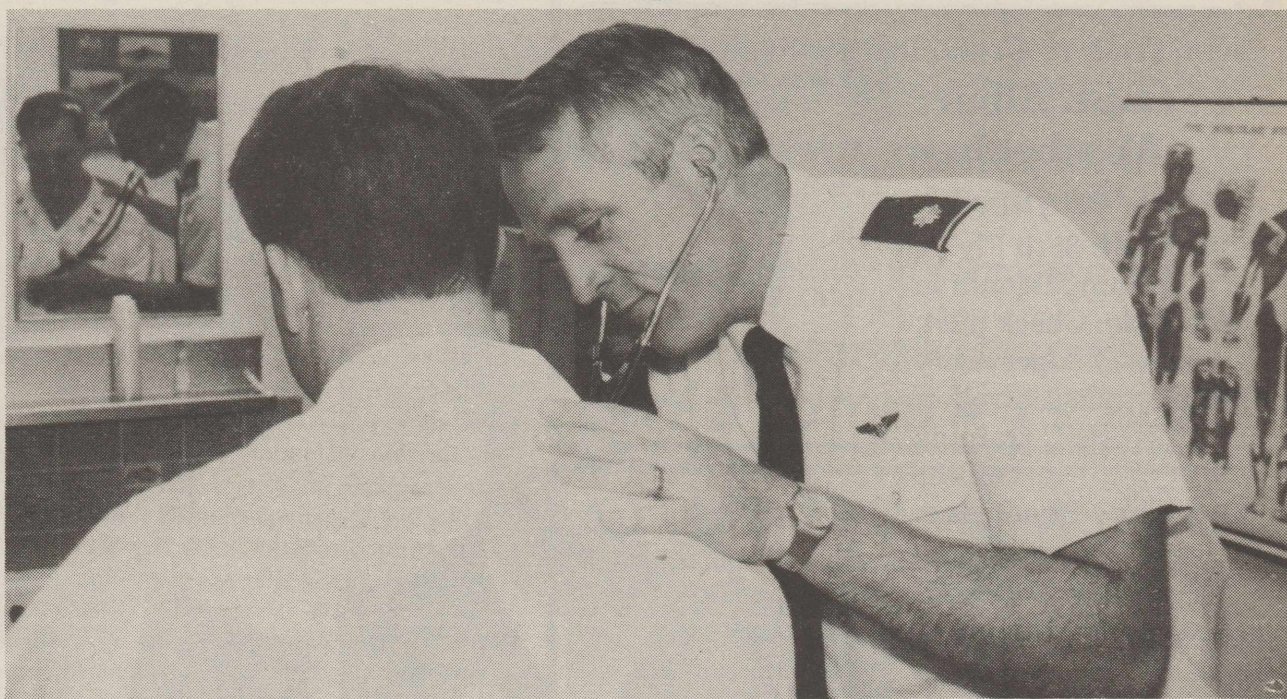

A doctor in the 64th Medical Squadron is "flying high" following recognition from ATC as being the best in his field.

Maj. (Dr.) David Armstrong was recently named flight surgeon of the year for the command. His selection was due in no small part to what squadron officials described as "turnaround in both quality and morale" in the hospital thanks to his "dramatic" caliber of leadership.

Major Armstrong came to Reese 16 months ago, having worked in both private civilian practice and as a flight surgeon on KC-135s and B-52s at Barksdale AFB, La. He then flew as a flight surgeon throughout U.S. Air Forces in Europe for four years before coming to Reese. His performance here as chief of aeromedical services led to his selection as chief of hospital services.

A seven-year service veteran, the major's efforts were credited with allowing the hospital to continue its support of the wing mission undiminished despite "massive" cutbacks in funding.

One initiative of Major Armstrong's that benefitted the hospital was a dialogue he started first with other bases in the area, then with the medical schools at some of the universities in the region. This "crossfeed" of information actually enabled one flyer to cut almost five weeks from the recovery time for surgery he had, thanks to a technique discovered during this exchange of information.

Major Armstrong, a Michigan native, said he was excited about the award, calling flight medicine his "first love."

"With a great aeromedical team, being picked reflects the outstanding, hard-working men and women of the 64th Medical Squadron."

Hospital details new rules for filling prescriptions

by Capt. Mark Lewandowski
64th Medical Squadron

Active-duty personnel treated at a local civilian hospital emergency room and given a written drug prescription must be seen the next day in the primary care clinic. Enough medication will be given to the member by the civilian ER until the primary care clinic reopens. Active duty members may not fill a civilian prescription from a local civilian source.

Non-active-duty members treated at a civilian hospital

(St. Mary of the Plains, Methodist Hospital or Highland Medical Center) emergency room and given a written drug prescription may fill it from a civilian pharmacy under CHAMPUS.

However, the member will be liable for the deductible and cost share.

They also may choose to obtain the medication from the base pharmacy. To fill a civilian ER prescription at the base pharmacy on the weekend or holiday, an appointment must be made (3245) with a medical provider. To fill a civilian ER prescription during a weekday, present the written prescription at the base pharmacy.

The prescription will be filled if it is available. If not available, the member may choose to fill the prescription at a civilian pharmacy under CHAMPUS or make an appointment to be seen at the primary care clinic. Enough medication will be given to the member by the civilian ER until the primary care clinic reopens.

The following pharmacies accept CHAMPUS: L & H Pharmacy, Walmart Stores, K-Mart Stores, United Supermarkets, Eckerd Drugs and Caprock Drugs.

ECAMP

Environmental appraisal aims to keep Reese clean, help members by 1st Lt. Al Lense and 2nd Lt. Brian Snider

64th Civil Engineering Squadron

Most people try to be responsible for the environment to some degree, but at the end of this month the entire base will be involved.

The base is committed to protecting the health of its personnel, their family members and the environment around them. This is currently being done through a base wide environmental appraisal, otherwise known as the Environmental Compliance Assessment and Management Program or "ECAMP."

The primary objective of ECAMP is to find and address environmental problems that could impact our mission, jeopardize our health or erode the public's confidence in the Air Force as an environmental pacesetter. The 1993 ECAMP will be conducted at Reese May 24 through 28.

The purpose of the ECAMP is to allow Reese to evaluate itself on the basis of federal, state and Air Force regulations. Results of this assessment will allow Reese to correct areas of weakness internally before outside agencies such as the Environmental Protection Agency or Texas Water Commission become involved. Though this may appear on the surface as another IG-type inspection, it is nothing of the sort. The purpose of the evaluation is not to find problem areas and bring the law down on those who caused the problem.

Instead, the team will be looking for areas of non-compliance, whatever the cause, with the sole purpose of fixing them in an expeditious manner. In order to accomplish this goal successfully, the ECAMP team will need the cooperation of everyone on base in order to identify any problem areas. Those being assessed are encouraged to ask any questions or voice any concerns they have about existing laws which may have an environmental impact. Wing members should remember the ECAMP assessor is there to help them do things the way the law says.

This year's ECAMP team chief is Lt. Col. Frank Shealy. The team will be comprised of personnel from the environmental flight, bioenvironmental engineering, Lockheed, civil engineering, fire department, supply, transportation and fuels maintenance. The assessment will target the following areas: air emissions, hazardous materials, water quality, solid and hazardous waste, petroleum oils and lubricants, pesticides, natural resources and noise management.

Is an ECAMP successful if it finds nothing wrong? Probably not, because there are bound to be some problems. Is it successful if it finds a lot wrong? Since Reese's environmental compliance has been good in the past, this probably will not be the case. But with the environment becoming more and more important every day, it is necessary to maintain our efforts to comply on a continual basis. To make Reese an environmental leader will require the work of everyone on base. One way wing members can contribute is to help the ECAMP team to their job this year.

From YOUR perspective

(Editor's note: The following is Wing Commander Col. David Love's policy regarding the Careline.)

As wing commander, I need to hear things from your perspective. Your inputs and suggestions can help Reese remain the pacesetter in the command. If you see something good, call me. If you have a problem that you feel needs my attention, call me. First, however, consider using your chain of command.

You may remain anonymous if you wish; all problems that are called in anonymously will be investigated and corrected if need be, but they will not be printed in the Roundup. Individuals who leave their name and number can get a direct response, and calls that are of base-wide interest will be printed in the Roundup.

Calls can be made to the Careline 24 hours a day at 3273.

Painting in housing

Our park (in Reese Village) was overlooked when painting was going on. It got the primary white coat but no other. Could you check into this for me?

Housing maintenance is responsible for maintenance of the playgrounds in Reese Village. The work is routinely scheduled in May and September.

The playground in question has received a primer and white finish coat; however, the application of accent colors was postponed due to winter temperatures and the heavy workload. The accent colors will be applied as soon as possible, but no later than the latter part of May.

Concerned about medical care

I'm concerned about the article I saw recently in the base paper about the emergency room closing and the facilities that will be available after 6 p.m.

I don't feel the questions (in the article) were answered appropriately. The story did not list where people could get care after hours, what facilities are participating in CHAMPUS or what part of the bill would have to be paid if we have to go downtown.

Reese issues should be addressed more clearly.

Following your call, an article was printed in the Roundup that answers all your questions and more. In fact, the article ran for two consecutive weeks to ensure that the "word got out."

Needs help with glasses

I ordered eyeglasses from the optometry clinic four months ago. Since then, people who order glasses two months after I did have received them.

I called the clinic three times and the only response is that my glasses are on order. Could you help me with this delay?

All spectacle orders are normally done by computer, but due to transmission problems in the past several months, all orders of late have been by mail. The clinic is currently checking their records for any lost orders, and tracers are being placed on any discrepancies.

As you know, your glasses arrived shortly after your call and are ready for pick-up.

Several base agencies talked to the youth about their respective missions. The fire department presentation included spraying water from the fire engine. Other agencies on hand included the civil engineering electrical shop, and the security police.

CE shop lights up Reese ball fields

New lamps conserve energy, provide more illumination

Play ball!
Thanks to the 64th Civil Engineering Squadron, local community ball teams can now play ball safely at night. Just recently, a team of base civil engineers completely revamped the lighting systems to the Reese ball fields. With a little initiative and ingenuity from SSgt. Rudy Almonte, NCO in charge of exterior electric in the infrastructure section, his team of electricians completely redesigned and upgraded both the Little League baseball and women's softball fields.

They replaced 16 utility poles with new aluminum fixtures and installed 46 high intensity discharge light fixtures with new and more efficient 1,500 watt halide lamps. These new fixtures improved area lighting, and helped reduce electrical demand to the base power system.

Additionally, eight old, inefficient transformers were replaced with state-of-the-art new ones. Because of this team's efforts, CES also expects to see significant savings. For example, for every hour of use, the Air Force will save eight dollars. This may not sound like much, but when three games are played each night, four nights a week for 10 weeks, that figures to be a savings of $1,280 each season.

Another significant achievement was to mesh these new lighting systems into the existing overhead primary and secondary electrical distribution. The result: no more ricochet foul balls!

With help from fellow engineers in our heavy repair section, the fields now have underground wiring.

There are no overhead cables to get in the batter's way. Batters can swing for the fence, fielders can catch those long fly balls, and Reese members can enjoy playing ball in the hours of darkness.
