New command stands up

RANDOLPH AFB, Texas — Air Education and Training Command became the newest and oldest Air Force major command Thursday when Gen. Merrill A. McPeak unfurled and passed the command's flag to Gen. Henry Viccellio Jr. in a ceremony here.

General Viccellio, the AETC commander, told an audience of about 2,000 that the emergence of AETC is a "response to world change and shaped through vision and modern management principles."

A key factor in the restructuring is the folding in of ATC — which celebrates its 50th anniversary this month — and Air University, bringing together nearly all aspects of Air Force training and education.

General McPeak cites new command

by Gen. Merrill McPeak
Air Force Chief of Staff

For the past two years, we've been building a new Air Force. We started by reorganizing the combatant commands. We then consolidated our acquisition and logistics functions — all part of "The Year of Organization." Yesterday's activation of Air Education and Training Command caps "The Year of Training," the second stage of building the world's most respected air and space force.

Training is the key to a quality Air Force, the essence of everything we do. Our ability to perform the mission is directly related to the quality of training we provide our people. Merging Air Training Command and Air University into a single major command is more than a name change; it reflects a complete change in our training culture.

You've read about the initiatives that resulted from "The Year of Training." We're scheduling skill training and professional military education at appropriate career points to better prepare our people for increased responsibilities. We're balancing the roles of our formal, correspondence and on-the-job training programs. We've given AETC the responsibility for large weapon system combat crew training, allowing the warfighting commands to focus on preparing for combat.

Throughout this process our objective was clear — to set the world's standard for training. We've faced the reality that our Air Force will get smaller. Air Education and Training Command will help us make it better. (Air Force News Service)

Command moves into future with name change

The sign in the background serves as a sign of the changes in the command, as SrA. Thomas Baldwin of the 64th Security Police Squadron works the main gate. Air Training Command became Air Education and Training Command Thursday, marking the beginning of a new era in the Air Force. For more on AETC, see Page 5.

America's leaders send greetings

by Bill Clinton
President

Two hundred seventeen years ago our founding fathers' words rang throughout the world as they declared our nation's independence. These words were backed by the strong actions of the men and women of our armed forces, who served as proudly and courageously then as they serve today.

As members of the armed forces, you can be proud of the results of your efforts, which can be seen around the globe. From conducting military operations to providing humanitarian assistance to daily training maneuvers, you are a shining model of American values — dedication, responsibility, and willingness to sacrifice. Wherever you are stationed, you can be proud that you are a part of the U.S. armed forces.

Americans have great faith in our military. I know they join me in wishing you and your families a joyous and safe Independence Day. (Air Force News Service)

by Les Aspin
Secretary of Defense

On July 4 we celebrate a great act of courage. On that date in 1776, the colonies proclaimed their belief in individual rights and declared their independence from England.

At that time, the Continental Army had been in existence for more than a year. From the earliest days of the American Revolution, Americans have been willing to serve their country. Their valor helped to secure freedom for this nation and for millions of people around the world. Many of those Americans made the supreme sacrifice in defense of liberty. That is a history we should not forget.

You, the members of today's armed forces, carry on that tradition of service to the nation. Around the world — in the air, at sea, and on land — you are doing work that is essential for the defense of our freedom.

As we celebrate our independence, you can take special pride in your service to the nation. I join all Americans in wishing you a safe and happy Independence Day. (Air Force News Service)

by Michael Donley
Secretary of the Air Force

Two-hundred and 17 years ago, 56 men signed a document absolving all allegiance to, or dependence on, the British Crown.

That document was the Declaration of Independence. On July 4, we will celebrate the signing of that declaration and the subsequent birth of our nation. We have a right to celebrate.

We've evolved from 13 colonies to 50 states; from several thousand minutemen to the most powerful military in the world. We've done it not for fame and glory, but to preserve those certain inalienable rights secured more than 200 years ago — "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

For the past 46 years, the Air Force has played a decisive role in preserving these rights and, although we are decreasing in size, we will continue to do so in the future.

As we commemorate this Day of Independence, let us reflect with pride upon our past, with special appreciation for those men and women who won our freedom and preserved it for our generation. Let us also use this occasion to proudly remember the special trust the American people and free people around the world place in today's United States Air Force. You are the protectors of our noble heritage, and I am honored to serve with you in the cause of liberty. (Air Force News Service)

by Gen. Henry Viccellio Jr.
AETC Commander

Over the last few years, we've witnessed some stark results of our democracy's enduring qualities. Lacking our Declaration of Independence's ideals of quality plus rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, bankrupt attempts at sovereignty, such as communism, have crumbled.

The results for us have included new alliances with former foes, in many ways building toward an emerging global "team" — even the new command we created on July 1 is partially an outgrowth of these changes.

In the midst of a dynamic world and changing military, one thing remains constant: we have an enduring commitment to the people of our great country who expect and trust in us to defend our nation and its values. We can do no less than meet those expectations.

As you celebrate our country's birthday with traditional fireworks and festivities this Sunday, reflect on the ideas upon which our nation was founded. From the group of our courageous and determined ancestors who stood up to tyranny 217 years ago and declared us a free and sovereign nation, we've inherited a great republic committed to preserving freedom.

Independence Day is a great opportunity to commemorate our freedom — enjoy your celebrations and have a safe and happy Fourth of July!

Quality Air Force

by Col. Roger A. Brady
Hq. AETC Director of Personnel

"You can't see the forest for the trees." We've all heard this cliché that describes many of us who get wrapped up in details and fail to understand the "big picture," or in Air Force terms, "the mission."

However, many times the "trees" (processes) are overlooked simply because they've always seemed to be there, unchanged, yet contributing (or not) to the growth of the forest. Often processes tend to become entrenched and remain unchanged despite current organizational environment or mission needs.

Processes must be continually assessed to ensure the end products meet customers' expectations — a goal of paramount importance. Secondly, a continual assessment must ensure the processes involved are absolutely necessary, non-duplicative, and contribute to the quality of the product.

In January 1992, the ATC Quality Council initiated Headquarters ATC "Quality Improvement Prototypes." This list of recommendations for further study by process action teams contained two specific areas for the directorate of personnel.

One simply stated, "Streamline military decorations processing." With this opportunity statement set, a team was formed to study and evaluate military decorations processing. Most importantly, we provided the team the empowerment and resources needed to carry out their recommendations.

The PAT consisted of a team leader, a facilitator and five participating members. They represented three headquarters ATC directorates: personnel, operations and logistics; and the 12th Flying Training Wing Mission Support Squadron, Randolph AFB, Texas. Civilians and military people participated.

The team leader encouraged an open environment to foster the free flow of ideas. One method used by the PAT was to record ideas presented at one week's meeting and wait until the next meeting to discuss their individual merits or lack thereof. By adopting this method, the team members avoided the "knee-jerk" acceptance or rejection of ideas.

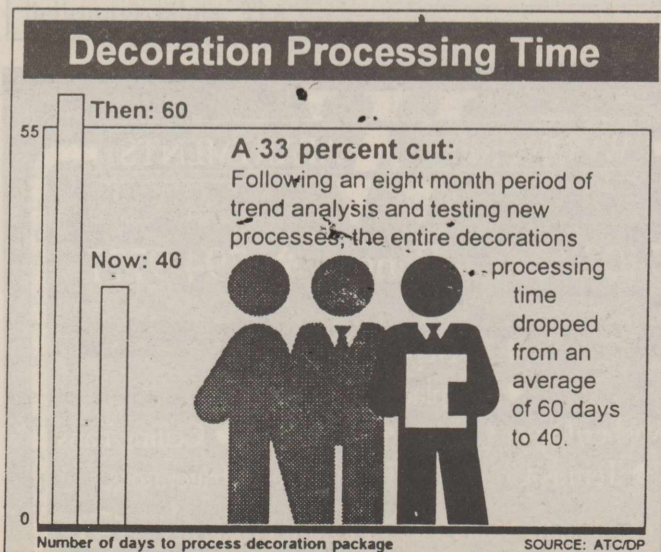

The facilitator, although from the personnel directorate, stayed strictly outside of the "meat and potatoes" of the PAT's discussions. Instead, he monitored various aspects of team activities. He helped the team leader ensure the project remained on track, strived to keep meetings within an hour and helped keep the environment of the meetings open but within the format.

One of the lessons learned by the team was the importance and values of the "non-personnelists" team members. In essence, these people are our own customers of the decoration processing system and, in the final analysis, their needs are the most important. Their satisfaction is the key indicator of what is, or isn't, a quality product.

Over an eight-month period of trend analysis and testing, the team emerged with the following results:

- Eliminated three time-consuming steps in the flowchart of decoration processing actions resulting in a 33-percent reduction in military decorations processing time.

- Deleted the requirement for a narrative justification for retirement decorations — another big time consumer. What previously took three and one-half man-hours now takes 45 minutes. This is a 79-percent reduction in the man-hours required to produce retirement decorations.

The bottom line: the entire decorations processing time dropped from an average of 60 days to 40 days.

This team's success story demonstrates the efficiencies that can be attained with a commitment toward quality improvement and a willingness to listen to the customer. To further enhance and ensure the success of the overall mission of an organization, continuous evaluations or assessments of how the organization functions internally must take place.

Missions change, working environments change, leaders change, budgets change; yet too often our internal processes are left unchanged and worse, unchallenged. "That's how we've always done it," can no longer justify organizational inefficiencies and wasteful and expensive working habits.

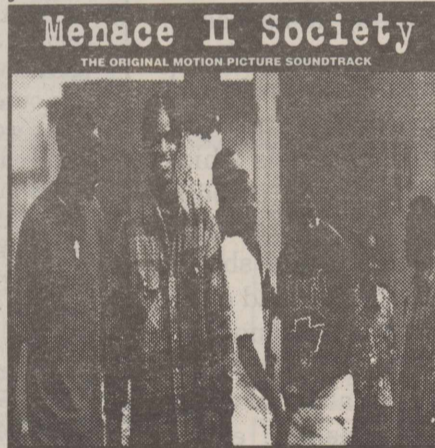

Take notice of the "trees." Be critical of them, nurture them, then step back on a regular basis and make sure you're still growing a forest.

Colonel McRee (right) accepts command of OPG from Col. David Love, 64th FTW commander.

Colonel McRee assumes group lead

Former deputy serving as interim commander

Lt. Col. Julius "Bo" McRee assumed command of the 64th Operations Group Monday during a ceremony in front of Reese Base Operations.

Colonel McRee replaced Col. F. Randall Starbuck, who is making a permanent-change-of-station move to Italy. Colonel McRee will serve as commander until September, when Col. Frank Geisler is scheduled to take over.

Colonel McRee is a 1973 graduate of Florida State University, where he earned his commission through the ROTC program. He earned his wings in 1977 at Williams AFB, Ariz., following a tour as a munitions maintenance officer.

Some of his later assignments include instructor pilot duty at Williams; a tour as a pilot instructor trainer, standardization/evaluation member, and part of the Hq. AETC Personnel Directorate, Randolph AFB, Texas; legislative liaison duty at Hq. Air Force; and command of the 35th Flying Training Squadron here.

Colonel McRee is a command pilot with more than 2,400 hours in the T-37, T-38 and T-1A. His military decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal with two oak leaf clusters and Air Force Commendation Medal with one oak leaf cluster.

The colonel is married to the former Virginia McCoy of Ruleville, Miss.

Fire department offers holiday caution

by MSgt. Luis Lynch
Reese Fire Department

The ideals of democracy and patriotism will be foremost in the hearts of Americans July 4, as we mark 217 years of independence.

On the first anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, there was an adjournment of Congress, a ceremonial dinner, bell ringing and fireworks. When the skies darken this July 4th and we prepare to celebrate, let us not forget fire safety. The Reese Fire Department would like to remind our community of some important fire safety precautions to observe during this holiday.

Fireworks, with all their glittering colors, beautifully displayed patterns and explosive sounds, also are a serious fire hazard when used carelessly. Fireworks are not toys — leave them for the professionals. They should be used only by individuals qualified and experienced in handling them.

Even sparklers are dangerous. They burn with such extreme heat that they can burn anything that comes in contact with them. Parents should heed this reminder since children are often observed playing with fireworks.

If you're planning a barbecue, keep in mind the placement of your grill. Grills should be kept clear of buildings and overhangs and away from combustible materials which may be ignited by flying embers. Remember, charcoal lighter fluid is a flammable liquid and should be used carefully. Never add charcoal lighter fluid to a burning fire.

Before leaving the barbecue, soak the hot charcoal with water to ensure all flames are extinguished. If you use a propane gas grill, have a match lighted and in position before turning on the gas. A malfunctioning propane grill should be repaired by a professional before use.

Don't let fire ruin your holiday.

Camping calls for care

by MSgt. Luis Lynch
Reese Fire Department

With the Reese community welcoming July and August and the expectation of fun-filled camping trips and outdoor cooking, the fire department would like to provide you with some outdoor safety information.

No matter what activity you have in mind, your first concern should be the suitability of the equipment you're going to use. Your equipment should provide the maximum amount of safety affordable, such as a fire-resistant tent.

If fuel is needed for any powered equipment, it should be transported in approved containers ("UL" or "FM") and placed in the trunk of your vehicle to protect it from any outside ignition sources. If traveling a long distance, ensure that you frequently ventilate the trunk of your vehicle to let out unwanted vapors.

Searching for the right location to set up your campsite is just as important. Avoid dry areas for camping or barbecuing. The dried vegetation can easily be ignited by embers from the barbecue or even a discarded cigarette.

Campfires have become a tradition during outings, and they pose one of the greatest threats to nature. Ensure your campfire is at least 15 feet away from your tent or any combustible material. Most importantly, ensure your fire is out before leaving. Do this by drenching the fire with water and then covering it with sand or dirt. The same practice applies to the charcoal used for barbecues.

In addition, the fire department highly recommends you take a portable fire extinguisher along on your camping trips. Having and knowing how to use a portable fire extinguisher can prevent a fire-related accident from becoming a total disaster. The fire department provides fire extinguisher training on request; call 6339 or 3686.

AETC stands up!

General McPeak, the Air Force chief of staff, said Air Training Command's legacy demanded "a thoughtful approach" when changes were being considered. "That's why we gave an entire year to a review of Air Force education and training." He called the stand up of AETC the "beginning of a new era... that features a stronger, more potent command — a move that keeps us ahead of changes; makes change work for us."

Headquartered at Maxwell AFB, Ala., AU conducts professional military, graduate and professional continuing education for officers, enlisted and civilians. "When we combine the legacy of Air University, whose roots reach back to the 1930s, we add the leadership, the understanding of the profession of arms and the doctrinal knowledge our technically trained people need to perform their mission," General Viccellio said.

Part of Thursday's ceremony was the reactivation of the 19th Air Force, headquartered here, which is responsible for all Air Force flying training. The new numbered air force will have operational control of 15 units that provide undergraduate and specialized undergraduate pilot and navigator training, survival training, introduction to fighter fundamentals training, specific initial skills training, upgrade and requalification aircraft training for combat crews and advanced training for helicopter pilots. The 64th FTW at Reese is one of the units under 19th AF.

This numbered Air Force operates more than 1,700 aircraft. General Viccellio called 19th Air Force the "crucial first step in our Air Force being able to provide air power and carry out our vision of global reach — global power."

Also activated Thursday was the 2nd Air Force, headquartered at Keesler AFB, Miss., which oversees Air Force technical training. This includes basic military training, all technical training and space and missile training.

After recruiting and providing initial military training to all enlisted and most officers, the general said through the 2nd Air Force, AETC will "guide them through training programs that provide them initial skills, an understanding of what the Air Force has to offer and a thorough appreciation of policies, philosophies and doctrine — in short, what the Air Force expects of them."

Additionally, other units now come under the AETC umbrella. AETC is responsible for the Air Force Recruiting Service, Defense Language Institute English Language Center, Inter-American Air Forces Academy and Wilford Hall Medical Center.

Three Air National Guard fighter training units are also gained under the new command.

General Viccellio said AETC's focus is to produce a highly trained and educated airman, ready upon reporting to his or her first assignment to accomplish the Air Force mission anywhere in the world. For enlisted members, General Viccellio said the changes in education and training mean a defined career path. He called it a "road map by which they can shape their expectations and focus their visions, which simply didn't exist previously. For everyone, this means we'll have what's needed to teach people what to 'do' — through training — and how to 'think' — through education."

AETC is prompting five major directions in the new approach to training: providing comprehensive initial skills training; ensuring standardization in training; revamping continuation training for the enlisted force; ensuring training and education programs better complement each other; and changing Air Force people's viewpoints about AETC and its mission.

General Viccellio said this realignment of training and education ensures AETC will "reach out and touch" every Air Force person, "grooming them for duties with the rest of the Air Force."

At the stand down of ATC, the Air Force chief of staff presented the command with its fourth Air Force Organization Excellence Award for the period Jan. 1, 1992 to June 30, 1993. AETC carries the lineage and traditions of the 50-year-old Air Training Command. (AETC News Service)

52nd FTS holds change of command

Lt. Col. Gerald Scroggins (right) accepts command of the 52nd Flying Training Squadron from Col. F. Randall Starbuck June 25 during a ceremony in the Reese Officers' Open Mess. Colonel Scroggins replaced Lt. Col. Clay McFarland, who is going to Maxwell AFB, Ala., to attend the Air War College. Colonel Scroggins will serve as interim 52nd FTS commander until he is replaced by Lt. Col. John Mazurowski; the date for that change of command has not been scheduled.

Reese shines in evaluation

Reese shined during the recent visit from the Air Education and Training Command Facility Excellence Evaluation Team, garnering several laurels from the team.

The team visited Reese June 21 through 24, conducting an outbrief the final day in the Simler Theater. The seven-person team evaluated how well Reese maintains its facilities and plans for future needs. The team also looked at how well each installation uses self-help as a force multiplier.

The team praised Reese, saying the pride that wing members took in their facilities was "obvious." During the outbrief, they singled out certain wing members for praise. One group was the Reese Pride Team, which had been formed last year to perform outdoor beautification projects on base.

In addition, several wing members were cited for outstanding maintenance of their dormitory rooms. They were Sgt.

Teri Morecraft, 64th Operations Support Squadron; A1C Michelle Lachance, OSS; A1C Cecelia Rodriguez, 64th Mission Support Squadron; and Amn. Christie Baker, 64th Logistics Squadron.

Officials in the 64th Civil Engineering Squadron said the announcement of the winner of the AETC Facility Excellence Award will be sometime in the fall, as the team will visit other command bases over the coming months.

COPY CAT

Reproducing computer software may not be as harmless as you think

No, it's not OK to copy your office software. Software is protected by federal copyright law, which says that you can't make such additional copies without the permission of the copyright holder.

By protecting the investment of computer software companies in software development, the copyright law serves the cause of promoting broad public availability of new, creative and innovative products. Without the protection given by our copyright laws, programmers and others would be unable to produce the valuable programs that have become so important in our daily lives.

Q. That makes sense, but what do I get out of purchasing my own software?

A. When you purchase authorized copies of software programs you receive user guides and tutorials, quick reference cards, the opportunity to purchase upgrades, and technical support from the software publishers. For most software programs, you can read about user benefits in the registration brochure or upgrade flyer in the product box.

Q. What exactly does the law say about copying software?

A. The law says that anyone who purchases a copy of software has the right to load that copy onto a single computer and to make another copy "for archival purposes only." It is illegal to use that software on more than one computer or to make or distribute copies of that software for any other purpose unless specific permission has been obtained from the copyright owner. If you pirate software, you may face not only a civil suit for damages and other relief, but criminal liability as well, including fines and jail terms of up to one year.

Q. So I'm never allowed to copy software for any other reason?

A. That's correct. Other than copying the software you purchase onto a single computer and making another copy for archival purposes only, the copyright law prohibits you from making additional copies of the software for any other reason unless you obtain the permission of the software company.

Q. At my office, we pass disks around all the time. We all assume that this must be OK since it was the squadron that purchased the software in the first place.

A. Many employees don't realize that the military is bound by the copyright laws, just like everyone else. Such conduct exposes the military (and possibly the persons involved) to liability for copyright infringement. Consequently, the military, concerned about their liability, have written policies against such "softlifting." Employees may face disciplinary action if they make extra copies of the office software for use at home or on additional computers within the office. A good rule to remember is that there must be one authorized copy of a software product for every computer upon which it is run.

Q. Do the same rules apply to bulletin boards and user groups? I always thought that the reason they got together was to share software.

A. Yes. Bulletin boards and user groups are bound by the copyright law just as individuals and corporations. However, to the extent they offer shareware or public domain software, this is a perfectly acceptable practice. Similarly, some software companies offer bulletin boards and user groups special demonstration versions of their products, which in some instances may be copies. In any event, it is the responsibility of the bulletin board operator or user group to respect copyright law and to ensure that it is not used as a vehicle for unauthorized copying or distribution.

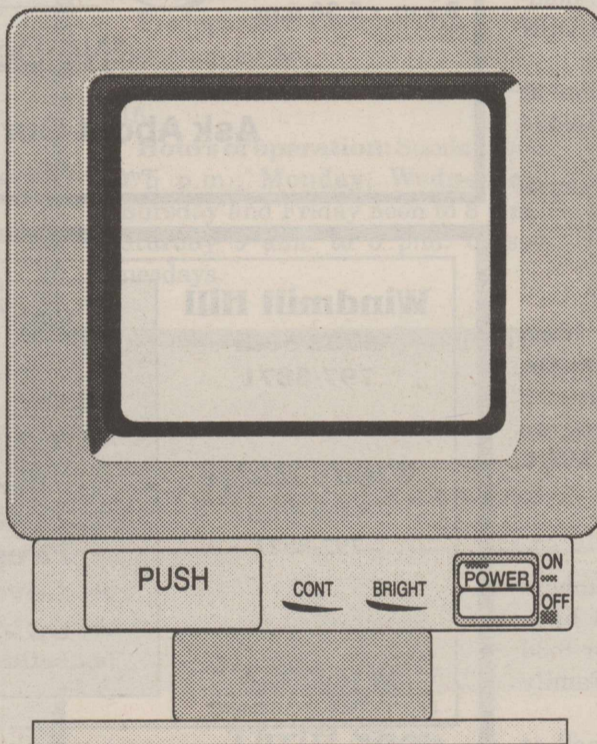

Q. What about schools and professional training organizations?

A. The same copyright responsibilities that apply to individuals and the military apply to schools and professional training organizations. No one is exempt from the copyright law.

Q. I'll bet most of the people who copy software don't even know that they're breaking the law.

A. Because the software industry is relatively new, and because copying software is so easy, many people are either unaware of the laws governing software use or choose to ignore them. It is the responsibility of each and every software user to understand and adhere to copyright law. Ignorance of the law is no excuse. Help spread the word that users should be "software legal."

Be cool!

Tips given for a cool, conservative summer

by Maj. Joseph H. Vivori
64th Mission Support Squadron

Summer is here and three words immediately come to mind— hot, dusty and dry. If this summer follows the same pattern of the last 10,000 years we will see heat in excess of 100 degrees, hot blasts of wind blowing dust in our eyes and very little precipitation.

So where do we take refuge from the heat and the dust? Well if you can find a decent-sized tree, you can sit under it, or you can go to the base pool to cool off, or you can sit in an air-conditioned building.

Most of us will probably spend the majority of our time either in our air-conditioned offices or houses. Unfortunately, air-conditioning uses energy. In fact, cooling your house in the summertime consumes more energy than heating it in the wintertime.

Now don't get me wrong. I'm not one of these advocates for primitive living. I like air-conditioning. When I've been out cutting my grass in the sweltering heat I love to come into a cool house. Science and technology have allowed us to live longer and more comfortably than at any other time in human history. I enjoy those technological gains that mankind has made. So you will not find a proponent here to turn off the air and suffer through the heat.

What I do propose, though, is the smart use of technology like an air-conditioner. I believe we can enjoy our creature comforts while conserving energy by using it smartly.

Did you know that for every degree you turn your thermostat up, you save around 3 percent of your annual cooling costs. And if no one is home during the day you set your thermostat up 5 degrees, you can save about 10 percent annually. Ten percent may seem small, but the dollar value adds up quickly. If everyone does it, thousands of kilowatts of electricity can be saved.

Another way to help keep your house cool and save energy is through proper shading of windows. Exterior shading devices, such as solar screens, are both attractive and convenient and are twice as effective as interior shading devices because they prevent the heat from actually entering your home.

In addition, the types of clothing you wear can make a big difference in how comfortable you are indoors and outdoors. A good rule of thumb during the summertime is to wear loose, lightweight clothing with short sleeves. Clothing made from absorbent fibers like cotton, linen, silk and rayon absorb moisture through evaporation to help keep you cool. Open-weave and open-knit fabrics allow for better ventilation, and white and light colors reflect the sun's rays, so wearing these colors make you cooler.

Remember, put a sensible setting on your thermostat when you are at home and turn it up a few notches when you're not; exterior shading, like solar screens, look great and help keep the heat out; and proper clothing goes a long way toward making you feel comfortable.

If everyone does a little it really adds up to a lot. Enjoy a cool and energy conscious summer.
