by Col. David R. Love 64th FTW commander

There is an old saying in the Air Force: "No place is better than the base you just came from.

I know that as Darlean and I move on to our next challenge at the Pentagon, that those words will be especially true.

We will always look back upon our time at Reese as the best days of our

Let me take this opportunity to express my gratitude for all of the effort each and every one of you has made during my tenure as commander.

Few organizations in the Air Force have faced the challenges that Reese has met over the past 14 months. From the implementation of specialized undergraduate pilot training to ... the recent Quality Air Force Assessment inspection, you have performed exceptionally well, showing your professionalism, your spirit, your pride and your commitment to defending the freedoms we enjoy.

I leave my post secure in the knowledge that Colonel Brady is assuming command of the best flying training wing in Air Education and Training Command. I am equally confident that you will continue to give Roger and Litha the same support you have given

Thank you all and God bless.

AETC -- AF's newest command

New education and training system gears for 21st century

by Gen. Henry Viccellio Jr. Commander

Air Education and Training Command

On July 1 our Air Force reached another milestone in the dynamic history it has forged since its creation in 1947: a new command was created with nearly 77,000 professionals serving in over 1,500 locations and operating 1,700 aircraft and related equipment.

It's my distinct pleasure and honor as the Air Education and Training Command's first commander to welcome these people — each of you — into AETC, our Air Force's newest command. The people aircraft and programs which have joined our team from Air Combat Command, Air Force Reserve, Air Mobility Command, Air National Guard, Air Training Command and Air University make us one of the Air Force's largest major commands with the responsibility for virtually all of our service's education and training programs for

In light of the evolving world environment and today's budgetary realities, our service needs to move away from a system which tasks our combat commands with the time and expense of training new members in their initial skills.

The education and training system which will now carry us into the 21st century must produce a more mission-capable product to meet the requirements of global reach and global power head on.

Your past efforts to lay a solid foundation for our new command have put us well on track toward this goal. Your expertise and attitude, together with our restructured programs, will produce "mission ready" Air Force members with the skill — and the will — to win in the face of today's — and tomorrow's — unpredictable challenges.

Welcome to AETC; I look forward to work-

Associate degree program enhances professional development and career

by TSgt. Debra L. Penton Chief, Public Affairs Community College of the Air Force

The Community College of the Air Force helps students connect talents and interests to professional development that enhances Air Force career opportunities.

The value of a CCAF Associate in Applied Science degree is sevenfold.

First, degree completion enhances the technical, managerial and leadership skills of enlisted members and improves their ability to perform their

In fact, more than seventy percent of Air Force supervisors say that CCAF graduates are better performers in the areas of work quality, work quantity, writing skills, professionalism, technical competence and overall job performance, than are non-graduates.

Second, CCAF provides incentive and encouragement to enlisted members to pursue further education. "The enlisted person's college" is a confidence builder. Eighty-four percent of Basic Military Training recruits say they plan to participate in CCAF, and many CCAF graduates go on to pursue their bachelor and master's degrees.

Third, gaining an education through CCAF is simply a healthy use of time, providing both the opportunity for professional and personal growth.

One measure of this positive influence can be found by looking at the enlisted force with an Unfavorable Information File.

Of the approximate 211,000 Air Force enlisted population with no degree, 3.5 percent have a UIF. Of the 55,000 Air Force enlisted members with a two-year degree or higher, only 1.5

percent have a UIF.

Fourth, CCAF is a very flexible program. Since CCAF is a multicampus college, it is located where enlisted people are stationed. CCAF provides easy access to higher education for the entire enlisted community and it is the largest accredited community college in the world. Currently, CCAF has 69 degree programs, 81 affiliated schools and has awarded more than 117,000

Fifth, a career relevant program, CCAF provides airmen the opportunity to earn an Associate in Applied Science degree directly related to their Air Force specialty.

Graduates are promoted much faster than non-graduates. Year after year, statistics show that enlisted promotion results are related to education

Looking at promotions to the top five enlisted grades: senior airmen, staff sergeants and technical sergeants with a degree generally have twice the promotion selection rate as non-graduates; master sergeants have three times the promotion rate; and senior master sergeants have a 90 percent better chance of promotion to chief.

Sixth, a CCAF associate degree is translatable. For graduates, this means their Air Force education and training translates into skill levels, semester hours and course descriptions understood by civilian colleges and potential employers.

CCAF degree offerings are accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, Commission on

The seventh value of the CCAF degree is marketability. The degree is a marketable credential for enlisted members upon separation or retirement.

AETC activates 19th Air Force

by SSgt. Buzz Ritchie 12th FTW Public Affairs

RANDOLPH AFB, Texas (AETCNS) — Twenty years after it was inactivated, 19th Air Force is riding a wave of changes sweeping today's Air Force and Air Education and Training Command into the 21st cen-

The activation of 19th Air Force places responsibility for all Air Force flying training under one umbrella.

"We have in one command a seamless training environment," said 19th Air Force Commander Maj. Gen. Everett H. Pratt Jr. "Our mission is to train aircrews and give war-fighting commands combat-ready people."

Nineteenth Air Force has operational control of 15 units that provide undergraduate and specialized undergraduate pilot and navigator training, survival training, introduction to fighter fundamentals training, specific initial skills training, upgrade and requalification aircraft training for combat crews and advanced training for helicopter pilots.

It was reactivated July 1 minutes after Air Training Command and Air University realigned to form the Air Education and Training Command. With its activation, 19th Air Force became a "crucial first step" in aircrew flying training, according to Gen. Henry Viccellio Jr., AETC commander.

General Pratt

As one of two new numbered Air Forces in AETC. 19th Air Force carries out the policies and taskings it receives from Headquarters AETC. "That's the way the objective numbered Air Force structure is designed," General Pratt explained. "We use the resources AETC provides to execute its policies and taskings." Second Air Force at Keesler is responsible for all Air Force technical training. Appropriately, 19th Air Force's commander is also a T-38 instructor pilot and flight examiner.

"The best way to see how well a flying training mission is being carried out is to fly," General Pratt said. Dressed in a flight suit in preparation for a full day of flying, he added he expects to log a lot of time "on the road."

"I'll be going out and giving evaluation flights in the T-38 at all our bases that have the T-38," he said. General Pratt will also travel to other bases within AETC that have flying training missions. "I'll be flying with all of our units to ensure we are in fact training combat-ready air-

The emergence of AETC and 19th Air Force is an exciting time, General Pratt added. "We've got some big challenges ahead of us, but I have no doubt we can meet those challenges because I think we're doing exactly the right thing for the Air Force. The end result will be a better trained, better qualified aircrew. "That's what it's all about."

Proud heritage sets foundation for 19th Air Force

'Suitcase' Air Force is reborn as key unit in AETC mission

RANDOLPH AFB, Texas (AETCNS) — As 19th Air Force begins overseeing flying training in the Air Force's newest command, its activation brings a distinguished past that dates to the Air Force of the mid-1950s.

Dormant for 20 years, 19th Air Force joined Air Education and Training Command July 1, minutes after AETC was officially designated via the realignment of Air Training Command and Air University.

Nineteenth Air Force was first The CASF was designed to be a established in 1955 at Foster AFB, highly mobile tactical force to suppress

Texas, as a command and planning element for deploying tactical forces of Tactical Air Command's Composite Air Strike Force. Ironically, its first commander had a familiar name - Maj. Gen. Henry Viccellio, father of AETC commander Gen. Henry Viccellio Jr. The elder Viccellio, who retired as a lieutenant general, twice commanded the 19th Air Force, first from July 1955 to July 1960 and again from July 1963 to June 1964

"brushfire" flareups and limited wars. The 19th Air Force staff became the CASF operational headquarters during deployments.

The 19th Air Force had no units or aircraft permanently assigned. However, it gathered whatever necessary resources from TAC.

For this reason 19th Air Force became known as the "Suitcase Air

With the closure of Foster AFB in 1958, the numbered air force packed its own suitcase and moved to Seymour

Johnson AFB, N.C.

During its tenure, the 19th Air Force participated in more than 100 deployments, five of which were historically significant. In 1958, it responded to crises in Lebanon and Formosa.

The unit participated in the Cuban Missile Crisis in 1962; intervened in the Dominican Republic in 1965; and assisted in the Pueblo Crisis in 1968.

Following the withdrawal of the U.S. forces from Southeast Asia in 1973, the Air Force began looking for ways to streamline its organizational structure.

As part of that effort, 19th Air Force was inactivated in 1973 and its functions were distributed among other tactical air forces.

Today, 19th Air Force oversees AETC's flying training mission, which includes a move to Specialized Undergraduate Pilot Training; Specialized Undergraduate Navigator Training; flight screening for prospective student pilots; initial fighter fundamentals training; upgrade and requalification aircraft training for combat crews; and advanced training for helicopter pilots.

Ironically, it's (19th Air Force's) first commander had a familiar name -- Maj. Gen. Henry Viccellio, father of AETC commander Gen. Henry Viccellio Jr.

President Clinton to nominate MIT professor for top AF post

WASHINGTON (AFNS) — President Clinton has announced his intention to nominate Dr. Sheila E. Widnall, an associate provost at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, to be secretary of the Air Force, White House officials said July 2.

If confirmed by the Senate, Widnall would be the first woman to head a branch of the U.S. armed forces.

"Sheila Widnall is a woman of high achievement — a respected scientist, a skilled administrator, and a dedicated citizen. I am confident that she will do an outstanding job of guiding the Air Force through this period of post-Cold Warchange," Clinton said.

Widnall, 54, was a member of the U.S. Air Force Academy's Board of Visitors from 1978-84 and was chairman of the board in 1980-82. She also served on advisory committees to the former Military Airlift Command at Scott AFB, Ill., and Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio.

A native of Tacoma, Wash., Widnall is known internationally for her work in fluid dynamics, particularly in the areas of aircraft turbulence and the spiraling airflows called vortices created by helicopters.

"... I am confident that she will do an outstanding job of guiding the Air Force through this period of post Cold War change."

President Bill Clinton

In addition to being an associate provost, Widnall is a professor of aeronautics and astronautics at MIT. She was the first MIT alumna appointed to the faculty in the school of engineering, and the first woman to chair the entire MIT faculty from 1979-80.

Widnall received both a bachelor's and master's degree in aeronautics and astronautics from MIT in 1961, and a doctor of science degree in 1964—the same year she joined the faculty as an assistant professor. She became an associate professor in 1970 and a professor in 1974. Widnall and her husband, William, also an aeronautical engineer, have two children and live in Lexington, Mass.

Pentagon pledges assistance for closure communities Emphasis placed on retraining, job assistance for veterans

WASHINGTON (AFNS)—
The Pentagon is reshaping the defense budget to fight a new threat: thousands of people out of work because of the drawdown and base closures.

In announcing a new strategy on defense reinvestment and conversion programs, Deputy Secretary of Defense William Perry said the goal is not just to cut the payroll, but to ease the transition for communities and those leaving the military.

He said the Pentagon has released $75 million to the Department of Labor for retraining and employment services and $73.5 million to the Department of Veterans Affairs to start a training program for veterans.

"The most immediate effects of the drawdown are being felt by military personnel leaving the armed services, civilians leaving DOD and workers in the private sector leaving defense contractors," Perry told the Senate Armed Services Committee last month.

To reduce the work force with as little disruption as possible, the Pentagon is relying on retirements, reduced accessions, attrition and voluntary measures, Perry said.

To minimize involuntary RIFs, the services are offering early retirement to selected people with between 15 and 19 years of service and continuing to offer voluntary separation incentive and special separation benefit programs.

In addition to these efforts, the Air Force continues to offer transition assistance programs to teach people how to successfully move from military to civilian life and how to tackle the job market.

Reese transition officials said a wide range of services are available at the Family Support Center, including spouse employment, financial assistance counseling and information referral services.

Perry said the fiscal 1994 budget includes $138 million for community adjustment and assistance programs to help defense reinvestment and conversion initiatives.

At the same time, President Clinton said the plan to cut the defense budget — by more than $88 billion over the next four years — will continue to be very hard on the people who work in defense.

"Even with all these aggressive efforts, the closing of a military base, as with any large employer, will inevitably be traumatic for the host community," said Clinton July 2 in announcing his views regarding the Defense Base Closure Commission recommendations

After conceeding that he could not promise that "every job will be saved," he acnnounced a $5 billion program to help people and communities transition from the loss of military employment.

Air Force to close two bases in Europe WASHINGTON (AFNS) — Operations will end at Soesterberg AB, Netherlands, and be reduced at Bitburg AB, Germany, as part of the latest round of overseas reductions.

Defense Secretary Les Aspin announced June 29 that 92 overseas U.S. military sites will be closed or scaled back in operation. He said the United States has reduced its overseas military sites by 50 percent since January 1990.

The latest effort, the largest in the last three years, shows "we are vigorously cutting unnecessary overhead overseas, and the locations underline the fact that we have truly entered a new, post-Cold War era," Aspin said.

Most of the units affected are Army, including those assigned to the Fulda Gap in Germany where American forces have served for more than 40 years. Fulda Gap was the traditional invasion route into south Germany.

Bitburg will be partially returned to the German government in 1995, according to the announcement. About 700 base personnel, most of them military, will be reassigned to Spangdahlem. Eighteen of Bitburg's 48 F-15C and D model aircraft—including the 12 currently at Aviano AB, Italy, supporting Deny Flight operations—also will be transferred to Spangdahlem. The remainder will go to other Air Force units.

The Air Force will retain family housing, the hospital and some other support facilities at Bitburg.

Soesterberg will end operations in September 1994 and the base will be returned to the Dutch government.

Some 1,446 military and 70 U.S. civilian personnel will be assigned to other Air Force units. The base's 18 F-15A and B model aircraft will be returned to the United States.

Father's Day is not for fathers only. It can also be a day for fathers-to-be, according to the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation. "On Father's Day, fathers-to-be can look forward to being fathers in the near future and can prepare themselves to be good fathers and good partners," said Alona Hagberg, Chairman of the Board. "By being supportive, fathers-to-be can help their partners have healthier babies."

The March of Dimes suggests that fathers-to-be can support their pregnant partners when they:

- Keep the channels of communications open. "It is important to talk with your partner about your feelings so you can understand and support each other now and after the baby arrives," says. Hagberg.
- Learn about pregnancy and childbirth. Read books and articles on the subject. Talk to other men who have been through the experience
- Accompany your partner to her prenatal checkups. If your schedule won't permit you to attend all checkups, then try to attend the most important ones. "These include the first appointment, the day the baby's heartbeat can be heard for the first time and whenever key prenatal tests are going to be performed," says Hagberg.
- Join your partner in efforts to eat healthy foods. Pregnancy is a time when the nutritional quality of a woman's food is especially important. You can encourage your partner to eat healthy if you make a point of passing up burgers and french fries as everyday foods.
- Avoid harmful substances and make sure she does the same. Having a healthy baby should be uppermost in your mind now. But alcohol, cigarettes and drugs could dangerously affect the health of your baby. "Second-hand" or "passive" smoke from a father is unhealthy for your partner and your unborn baby.
- Exercise with your partner. Find an activity both of you enjoy, as long as it is not too strenuous; and be sure your partner has her doctor's okay to participate.

After two years away from the cockpit, the first banked pilots to requalify at Reese are excited to say ...

They're back!

Two years ago the Air Force implemented the banked pilot program, promising those who took banked assignments that they would be brought back to the flightline within three

For 1st Lt. Dan Bringham and seven other banked pilots, the wait is over.

The eight lieutenants became the charter class of the Flying Training Squadron's Grad Flight last week, beginning a nine-week pilot requalification program.

Lieutenant Bringham was one of the first pilots to receive a banked assignment after graduation, earning his wings with Reese UPT Class 91-09.

"I thought it would be another year before I was able to fly again," said Lieutenant Bringham. "But here I am."

The lieutenant took advantage of his "banked" time, getting an Air Force Institute of Technology assignment that allowed him to complete his master's degree at the University of Arizona.

Scheduled for a C-5 assignment to Travis AFB, Calif., Lieutenant Bringham said he is anxious to get back into the cockpit and see how long it will take to "get it all back."

That hasn't been a problem for others who have gone through the requalification training at Randolph AFB and Laughlin AFB, Texas. 64th Operations Group officials said that all of the banked pilots successfully made it through ... the first requalification classes.

Capt. Brian McCullough, Grad Flight commander, said he and the other six instructors in the flight are excited about the program.

"We are starting a new program." said Captain McCullough. "It's the kind of challenge that is very good for the squadron. It expands our mission.'

The captain said that Reese will get a new class of approximately 6 banked pilots every three weeks."We will have 15-20 people in training here at one McCullough.

During the requalification training the pilots will fly 30 sorties, including two check rides. There will also be some simulator rides and extensive review of academics.

"I don't think we'll have much of a problem in the air," said 1st Lt. Steve McCarty. "Having to hit the books hard again will be the toughest part."

Captain McCullough added that while none of these banked pilots have been through specialized undergraduate pilot training, the requalification program is also dual tracked.

"At about the mid-way point of the program," explained the captain, "those who have a bomber/fighter assignment will concentrate on formation flying. Those headed for tanker/ airlift assignments will hone their navigational skills."

Other members of the first class are: 1st Lts.: Scott Spaulding, Ed Clary; Jim Crever, Andy Dennis, Kevin Kennedy and William Libby.
