ATC selects T-1A pioneer as nominee for AFA award

One of the officers directly responsible for helping Reese transition to the Specialized Undergraduate Pilot Training Program has been selected as the Air Training Command nominee for the Air Force Association's H.H. Arnold Award.

Maj. John D. O'Malley, 52nd Flying Training Squadron operations officer, was recognized for his contributions in planning and preparing for the initiation of the Air Force's newest training aircraft — the T-1A Jayhawk.

The award is presented annually for the "most significant contribution by a military member for national defense."

"His work to integrate the T-1A into the flight training program has been nothing short of outstanding," said Col. Randy Starbuck, 64th Operations Group commander. "It is through his (Major O'Malley's) efforts that the 52nd FTS is today a well integrated element of this wing."

Major O'Malley was instrumental in helping the wing develop the T-1A training program from scratch.

"He has personally touched every facet of the T-1A operation and inserted quality into every area he has touched," added Lt. Col. Clay McFarland, 52nd FTS commander. "Major O'Malley has set the standard of excellence in flying skills, general knowledge and instructional skills."

As operations officer for the T-1A squadron, Major O'Malley was credited with ensuring the preparation of the unit's initial cadre of 23 instructors, and the safe completion of more than 1,000 T-1A sorties and more than 2,800 flying hours. The 52nd FTS will fly its first student sortie next week.

Major O'Malley will now compete for Air Force level honors.

Air Force announces O-3, O-4 SERB

Board may select up to 30 percent

The Air Force will conduct selective early retirement boards May 3 for approximately 900 captains and 1,200 majors, and could select up to 30 percent of those eligible, according to Reese personnel officials.

Future end-strength requirements have made SERBs necessary to increase Air Force officer losses in fiscal 1994, officials said. SERBs are one aspect of a comprehensive effort to manage drawdowns.

Although the Air Force continues to look for ways to avoid, or at least reduce, the impact of the selective early retirement boards, current plans call for SERBs through 1995.

A board met Jan. 20 to consider more than 3,000 lieutenant colonels with 20 or more years of service for early retirement.

Under the current game plan, the mandatory retirement date for the May 3 boards will be no later than Jan. 1, 1994.

Separate boards will be held for each grade. Following an analysis of force structure requirements, the specific number of selectees will be determined, not to exceed 30 percent in each grade.

Eligible are both regular and Reserve captains and majors with military service dates of Nov. 30, 1973, or earlier and commissioned service dates of Nov. 30, 1985, or earlier.

Officers on a promotion list prior to the board date, and those with approved retirement dates in fiscal 1993 or 1994, will not be considered.

Eligible officers will receive a special brief for review about 60 days before the board convenes. They can write a letter to the board at any time calling attention to any matter they believe the board should consider.

The board will also consider retention recommendation forms for each officer.

All retirements will be listed as voluntary unless the officer requests otherwise.

SERB retirements are considered involuntary, and officers selected for retirement by the board may be eligible for some transition benefits, officials said.

Actual retirement dates of the selected officers will be at their discretion, but can be no later than the first day of the seventh month after the board results are approved.

Recycle:

Product labels key to sorting items

Editor's note: The following article was submitted by the Reese Energy Steering Group.

In late July the Federal Trade Commission issued national guidelines for environmental claims on products, including operating definitions of what is recyclable and what is not. Here are some of these operating definitions.

In general, the guidelines stress that labeling should be clear and not deceptive. This includes stating whether claims apply to products, packaging, or just a portion of either. Furthermore claims should not overstate environmental benefits of products, expressly or by implication.

Base housing residents are reminded that the Resource, Recovery, Recycling Program will pick up recyclable items from their front porch every Tuesday beginning at 9 a.m. Recyclable items are to be separated into the following categories for pickup: cans, glass, newspapers, cardboard and tin cans. Recycling bags are available in Bldg. 2107. For more information call 3815.

According to the FTC, recyclable products or packaging must be able to be collected, separated or otherwise recovered from the solid waste stream for use in the form of raw materials in the manufacture of a new product. For instance, aluminum cans are recyclable.

Refillable packages should be labeled as refillable only if a system is provided for either the collection and return of the package for refill or the later refill of the package by consumers with a product sold as a refill. Several fabric softeners have gone to refillable packaging.

The degradable, biodegradable or photodegradable product label claims should be substantiated by competent and reliable scientific evidence that the entire product or package will completely break down and return to nature. That is, they will decompose into elements found in nature within a reasonable amount of time after customary disposal. Remember that the FTC required garbage bag manufacturers to remove the biodegradable label from garbage bag packaging because the bags did not degrade in landfills.

Finally, ozone safe and ozone friendly products cannot contain an ozone-depleting substance. You'll notice these labels on aerosol products like hairspray.

If you would like a copy of the terms and definitions mentioned in this article, plus a few others, call the Energy Hotline at 1-800-643-SAVE and ask for the recycling definitions.

SP programs take bite out of crime

Editor's note: The following was submitted by the 64th Security Police Squadron.

Traditionally, Air Force bases have been relatively free of serious crime. In recent years, unfortunately, crime has become more common on our installations, affecting both quality of life and mission capability. In order to keep the rate of crime at Reese as low as possible, the Security Police have assumed an aggressive proactive role in anticipating and preventing crime. The following programs were developed to protect the people and property of the Reese community. You are urged to take advantage of these services and get involved in crime prevention efforts.

Operation Identification Program or "OP ID," allows owners of high value, theft-attractive or highly pilferable property to mark their items to help establish ownership if they are lost or stolen. OP ID is effective in deterring burglaries and larcenies by providing investigative leads that increase the chance of recovery of stolen property and solving the crime. The security police offer, upon request, engravers and property records for marking and recording valuable items. Participants are given OP ID stickers to be placed in a conspicuous location as a deterrent also.

Home Vacation Check Program: Security Police can help military family housing residents guard their homes and vehicles while the residents are on vacation. A few days before you leave, drop by and let us know. We will furnish you with a checklist to help you have a safe trip and will make checks of your home and vehicles while you're away.

Project Ride Along: For those interested in law enforcement or who are just curious about the security police, we offer the opportunity to ride along with our patrols as an observer. Anyone 10 or older is eligible, but parental consent is required for minors. Again, just drop by the security police and set up a time to join us. This is an excellent opportunity for anyone, including supervisors, first sergeants and even commanders to observe firsthand how we perform our law enforcement duties.

These are only a few of the many crime prevention services we can provide. But we can't do it alone. We need your help. We challenge you to become involved in our efforts to develop community policing and take advantage of these services. Contact the crime prevention program manager at 3946, and help "take a bite out of crime."

QAFA tips

Tuesday: Programs and problems.

Can you knowledgeable talk about regulations, OIs, and so forth? Who are your various program monitors and their back-ups?

Wednesday: Training follow-up.

Ensure all required training is now scheduled. Watch for TDY/leave conflicts with the inspection.

Thursday: Continuity folders.

Are they current and accurate? Would it carry your fill-in if you are absent?

Friday: Publications review.

Empowerment at root of QAF success

Only action gives value to good ideas

by Col. Mike Welsh
Lowry AFB Inspector General

In my Quality Air Force seminars, I work hard at establishing a good rapport with the audience. Usually I'm only moderately successful during the first hour or so as I go over the historical development of QAF, the Air Force policy and the importance of a positive vision as we improve the processes through which we conduct business.

It's not until I begin to talk about empowerment that I see the incidence of auditorium whiplash decrease dramatically.

It's almost as if I had picked the scab off an old wound and the shock brings the cynics out of their lethargy, while those who were already interested begin to listen with a new intensity.

By this time, I've already laid out the seminar ground rules and encouraged people to respond. So I'm waiting for that low outside fastball when it comes and I know I have to at least foul it off in order to maintain credibility.

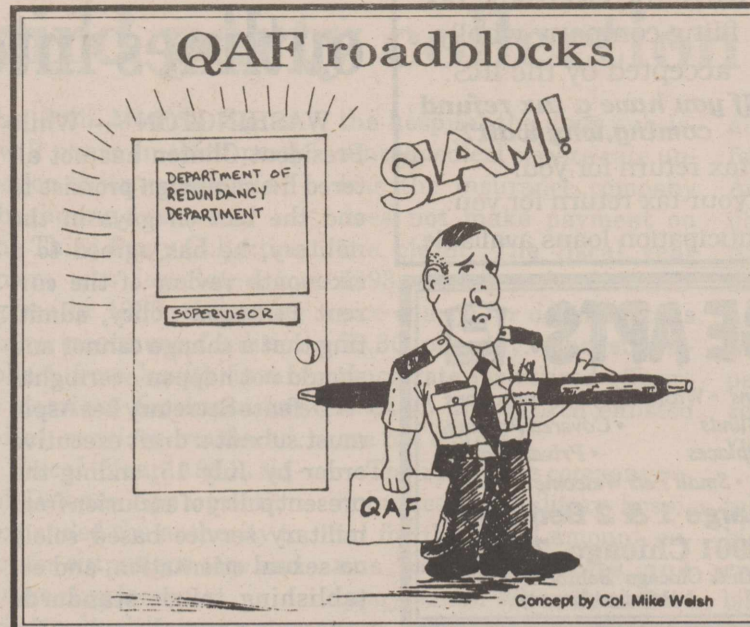

Last week, it happened twice. While the incidents cited were different, they both had common causes and results.

In one case, a survey had been taken to identify potential improvements, the answers collated, and recommendations made — but nothing had been done.

In another case, a process action team had worked hard to improve a process but there was resistance to making changes.

The result in both cases was predictable: disappointment, hurt feelings, a sense of futility, etc. I don't remember what my answer was, but as is so often the case, I thought of what I should have said later.

Essentially the correct answer would have been, "What did you expect?" Surely no one could go into this without realizing that fundamental change would involve a struggle. It has taken decades to build the bureaucracy we live with now, the walls aren't going to come tumbling down just because you take a survey or make a recommendation. Having a good idea is just the beginning. You're going to have to develop a sense of urgency about change, and you're going to have to work hard to sell your solution. If you don't know how to make it happen, first read Clausewitz' "On War," and then read "Sun Tzu: The Art of War." What they both advise is fundamental: if a frontal attack doesn't work, try the indirect approach.

To me, the issue of empowerment is a sort of chicken-and-egg question. Can a person or group be empowered, or is empowerment something you have to bring to the job with you. As we all know, there is a small minority of people who will never be empowered. They won't accept responsibility and if they're training in the morning, they need a refresher course after lunch. Fortunately, we have very few of these timid souls in the Air Force.

At the opposite end of the scale, there are the best of our people, the natural warriors, who are self-empowered. They are the ones who see a challenge as an opportunity, who always seem to end up in leadership roles.

In the middle, there is a broad range of people who are situationally empowered. They're not exactly sunshine do-gooders, but they sometimes need permission before they will lead the charge.

I'm not advocating anarchy, but I'm telling you that if you're going to be a winner, you're going to have to gird your loins and prepare for the fray. On that scale between natural warriors and timid souls, where do you fall?

President directs six-month review, outlines interim homosexual policy

WASHINGTON — While President Clinton has not altered his campaign promise to end the ban on gays in the military, he has agreed to a six-month review of the current Pentagon policy, admitting that a change cannot and should not happen overnight.

Defense Secretary Les Aspin must submit a draft executive order by July 15, ending the present policy of exclusion from military service based solely on sexual orientation, and establishing tough standards concerning sexual conduct for all military members.

The study of the practical problems involved in a revision of policy will be submitted with the draft order. It will give the administration a "practical, realistic approach consistent with the high standards of combat effectiveness and unit cohesion that our armed services must maintain," Clinton said.

"The issue is not whether there should be homosexuals in the military," Clinton said in a White House press conference Jan. 29. "Everyone concedes that there are.

"The issue is whether men and women who can and have served with real distinction should be excluded from military service solely on the basis of their status."

Clinton says no and believes Americans who want to serve their country should be able to unless their conduct disqualifies them from doing so.

While admitting military life is different, with a unique code of conduct and code of justice, Clinton believes individuals willing to accept the restrictions on behavior should be allowed to serve their country.

Current Department of Defense policy concerning homosexuals in the military will be in effect at least through July 15, with some new guidance, White House officials said.

The guidance calls for removing any questions concerning sexual orientation from future versions of entry applications. In the meantime, the questions will not be asked.

Through July 15, the Justice Department will seek continuances in pending court cases involving reinstatement. And administrative separation under current DOD policies based on status alone will be stayed pending completion of the review.

The final discharging cases based only on status will be suspended until the president has an opportunity to review and act upon Aspin's final recommendations.

In the meantime, an individual whose discharge has been suspended by the attorney general will be separated from active duty and placed in standby reserve until the secretary's final report and the president's final action.

Clinton said the real area of disagreement is "should someone be able to serve in uniform if they say they are homosexual but do nothing which violates the code of conduct or undermines unit cohesion or morale, apart from the statement."

"I haven't given up on my real goals," he said. Citing the Joint Chiefs agreeing it's time to take the sexual orientation question off the enlistment form, Clinton said the decision is "a dramatic step forward."

"I feel comfortable about the way we have done this and I'm going to maintain the commitment that I have."

Clinton said he had always planned to allow time to develop policies to deal with the practical problems involved in changing policy.

But he still embraces the principle that the ban must be lifted and does not expect to change his position.

According to reports from the last 10 years, the United States spent $500 million in tax dollars to separate nearly 16,500 homosexuals from the service, Clinton said. He added that the nation has also dealt with complaints of sexual abuse and heterosexual abuse, largely against women, in far greater volumes.

"But during this period we plainly have had the best educated, best trained, most cohesive military force in the history of the United States. Anybody in the Joint Chiefs will tell you that. It's a narrow issue, whether a person, with no other disqualifying conduct, can simply say he or she is homosexual and stay in the service.

"I certainly think in the next six months, as people start to work it through and talk it through, a lot of the legitimate, practical issues will be raised and dealt with in a more rational environment that is less charged. That is certainly what I hope happens," Clinton said. (Air Force News Service)

64th MEDSQ set to implement third party collection program

The 64th Medical Squadron will phase in third party collection at its various facilities beginning next week.

The Third Party Collection program was legislated by Congress in 1986, obligating military treatment facilities to collect from health insurance carriers for inpatient hospital services rendered. The Fiscal Year 1991 National Defense Appropriation Act expanded the authority to collect for outpatient care and medicare supplements.

Private health insurance policies (excluding income maintenance policies and CHAMPUS) are to be billed; hence, the term "third party." DOD medical treatment facilities can only collect for services covered by the patient's insurance plan and then only to the extent the terms and conditions of the plan allow.

The patient will not pay the hospital the daily subsistence/medical service rate unless the insurance company does not make payment on the claim. The fiscal year 1993 subsistence/medical service charge for dependents is $9.30 per day. The subsistence rate for retired officers is $4.75 and retired enlisted are not charged.

The insurance company reimburses the military hospital for the billed amount minus any deductibles and copayments. When the insurance company pays nothing to Reese Hospital, a bill will be mailed to the patient. The patient will have 30 days in which to pay for only the subsistence/medical services charges.

Congress expanded the scope of the Third Party Collection Program to include collection for outpatient visits, medicare supplement policies, automobile liability and no-fault automobile insurance. Active duty automobile and no-fault automobile insurance policies are also billable. The amount billed for outpatient health care is the DOD full reimbursement rate for outpatient services. The fiscal year 1993 rate is $100.00 per visit.

At present, outpatient dental care is not billed. Certain high cost drugs, radiology and civilian referral services are billed separately. The Air Force start date to bill for outpatient health care, medicare supplements, automobile liability and no-fault automobile insurance was Oct. 1, 1992.

The Third Party Collection Program allows the military treatment facilities to recover some of their operating costs. More details on this program are available by calling Herminia Hemmitt, 3231.

Tops in Ops

64th Operations Group honors superior performers

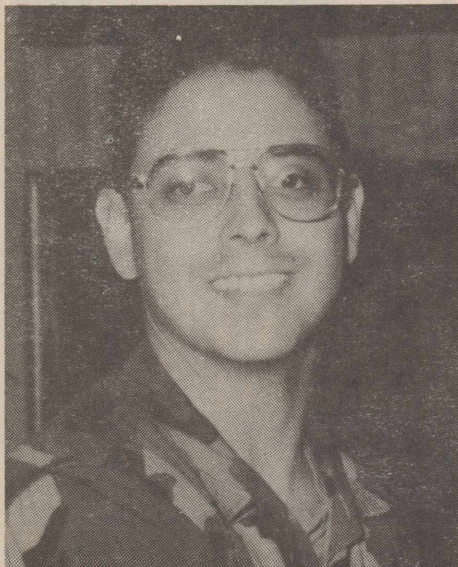

Thirteen of the 64th Operations Group's finest were presented annual "Tops in Ops" awards Thursday for outstanding duty performance.

The awards are part of Air Training Command's operations recognition program. The purpose of the program is to provide recognition to those individuals who, at the wing level, demonstrate the highest measure of dedication, expertise and professionalism to the operational mission in their assigned duties.

Operations Support Officer
Maj. Gary B. Tucker

This award is presented to the support officer within the operations group who has contributed most to effective mission accomplishment. Major Tucker, 64th Operations Support Squadron operations officer, managed a wide variety of critical wing issues, such as new mobility commitments, weather station and base operations modifications and unit reorganization. At the same time, he provided outstanding leadership to the many diverse work centers within the 64th OSS.

Life Support NCO
SSgt. Christopher Sandoval

Sergeant Sandoval, 54th Flying Training Squadron, has demonstrated superb technical expertise and leadership for the life support mission. He became the life support assistant superintendent and provided important continuity during a massive change of supervisory personnel. He is recognized as the most capable technician for aircrew continuation training and explosive safety programs.

Operations System
Management Airman
SrA. Prentiss McKay Jr.

Airman McKay, 35th FTS, is recognized for outstanding support by an airman in the 271 career field. Airman McKay ensured excellent attention to the many details of squadron operations system management. He has provided superb support for the 35th FTS in tracking the flight and training progress through the year.

Operations System
Management NCO
SSgt. Darryl A. Tripp

Sergeant Tripp, 52nd FTS, is a top-notch NCO whose expert leadership, comprehensive job knowledge and superb attention to detail resulted in sustained daily flying operations. Because of his expertise and outstanding job knowledge in running the T-37 and T-38 duty desks, he was specially selected to bring on-line all the duty desk and Air Force forms functions for ATC's newest training system — the T-1A.

Weather Observer
SSgt. Michael J. Hudson

Sergeant Hudson, 64th OSS weather flight, is the senior ranking observer. Sergeant Hudson consistently provided accurate and prompt weather observations during severe weather and quickly disseminated weather warnings and advisories for potentially damaging winds, thunderstorms and high temperatures. His excellent support provided invaluable assistance to forecasters during peak work loads, significantly expediting operational flight planning.

Weather Forecaster
SSgt. Robert C.A. Kraetsch

Sergeant Kraetsch, 64th OSS weather flight, was recognized for his outstanding blend of superior technical expertise, hands on operational support, supervision and total dedication to the mission which significantly enhanced weather operations at Reese. The wing's best operational forecaster, Sergeant Kraetsch consistently provided outstanding customer support to aircrews, supervisors and senior leadership, especially under difficult, severe weather conditions. Sergeant Kraetsch has been selected to represent ATC at Air Force for the Pierce Award for forecasting excellence.

Air Traffic Controller
SSgt. John P. Zapata

Sergeant Zapata, 64th OSS air traffic control flight, has provided extremely professional airdrome vigilance in one of the busiest air traffic control environments in the United States. On one occasion his quick thinking prevented a high speed ground collision, earning the Gen. Gordon A. Blake Aircraft Save Award. Sergeant Zapata has made many contributions to the Air Traffic Program by his briefings to distinguished visitors and his relentless pursuit of quality customer service.

Air Traffic Control Trainer
Sgt. Lenette T. Morecraft

Sergeant Morecraft, 64th OSS air traffic control flight, has provided valuable leadership in air traffic control training. Constant attention to this critical area has resulted in an outstanding controller proficiency and upgrade program for control tower personnel. Her one-on-one assistance and excellent classes on all aspects of air traffic control have ensured the strongest possible base for training continuity in this intense field.

Air Traffic Control Manager (NCO)

Sergeant Davis, 64th OSS air traffic control flight, was cited for leadership that has been called the magnet that has drawn tower personnel together during challenging times and has transformed the tower into one of the premier work centers on Reese. He has kept the tower focused on providing the best service possible to Reese aircrews and has been the driving force in at least 40 self-help projects in the flight.

Air Traffic Control Manager (Officer)

Capt. Martin B. Heller

Captain Heller, 64th OSS air traffic control flight commander, was recognized for his leadership and guidance which resulted in major quality improvements in air traffic control tower operations. He and his team of professionals have provided outstanding air traffic control support for Reese's flying operations and while overcoming several major challenges during navigational aid upgrade projects. The flight has also excelled in developing air traffic procedures for T-1A operations.

Operations Mission Maker

Captain White, 64th OSS, exhibited tremendous flying skills in an unbroken string of excellent ratings on all of his flying evaluations. He was a superb academic instructor and was primary instructor in the T-38 aerodynamics course. Due to his fluency in the Russian language, he was frequently selected to escort Russian aircraft on state visits to the United States and augmented visits by Russian leaders. He received the Squadron Officer School commandant's award as the top graduate and motivated his flight to take top honors as well. Captain White has recently been reassigned to March AFB, Calif.

Flying Training Flight Commander

Capt. David B. Sumrell

Captain Sumrell, 35th FTS D-Flight commander, instituted in-house training, motivation and leadership principles resulting in outstanding graduates in the T-37 phase of pilot training and a strong, cohesive team of dedicated instructor pilots. His professional qualities include excellence in the supervisor of flying position and leadership in all squadron intramural sports programs.

MSgt. Rick Miller (right) and MSgt. Lee Merchant, 64th Operations Support Squadron, load clothes for delivery downtown Jan. 29. Three hundred items of clothing were donated and collected by OSS members recently for delivery to a local homeless shelter and another house that serves the needy. The timely donation of clothes came just as a cold front began to grip the South Plains.

Stop smoking

Health clinic offers help

by Capt. Maritza J. Milan
64th Medical Squadron

Currently, the mental health clinic at the 64th Medical Squadron is conducting a smoking cessation program at the health promotions office. The program is designed to assist military members and dependents who want to stop smoking.

The program is basically a cognitive behavioral program. This means it teaches the smoker to recognize the reasons and behaviors that cause him or her to smoke and then shows the person how to attack and change those things that cause their smoking. The program follows the "fresh start" guidelines of the American Cancer Society and is a professional program that has a history of good success around the country. To supplement the program the Habitrol patch is also discussed and can be prescribed at the end of the program.

The program is offered as a group class in four separate one-hour sessions that are completed in a two-week period. The groups usually have five to seven people and the maximum number is 15. The classes are offered roughly twice a month. Those interested can sign up for one of the upcoming classes by calling 3739. If the times offered are not compatible you can call back at the beginning of the next month. One-on-one sessions can also be arranged.

Classes provide the smoker with information on the different types of addictions: psychological, physiological, and creation of habits. It also prepares the person to cope with the possible withdrawal symptoms, and teaches different gradual behavioral approaches to quitting smoking. The person is also exposed to relaxation techniques such as breathing exercise and progressive muscle relaxation. The person also receives a briefing on the use of the Habitrol patch as well as handouts on stress management, aerobic exercise and dietary information.

The classes and the Habitrol patch can only work if you have a strong desire to stop smoking. Our next class starts at 4:30 p.m. Wednesday. Future classes are pending. If you are interested, call the mental health clinic at 3739.

Notes

IG available

The wing inspector general is available from 2-3 p.m. Wednesdays at the base library conference room for a personal conference period.

Although not necessary, it is recommended that individuals try to use their chains of command (supervisor, first sergeant, commander) to solve their problems before going to the IG. If your problem is not resolved, or if you are not comfortable working your problem through the chain of command, Air Force Regulation 123-11 lets you communicate directly with the IG.

The wing inspector can be contacted at any time at 3409; the fraud, waste and abuse hotline is 6547.

For additional information on how to obtain other student loans, contact the United Student Aid Funds at 1-800-LOAN-USA.
