AF launches new Delta Dental Plan

Increased patient coverage includes dentures, braces

Lt. Col. (Dr.) Frederick Guerra
Reese Dental Clinic

The new enhanced Delta Dental Plan will go into effect April 1. In addition to benefits covered under the current plan (examinations, x-rays, cleanings, sealants, fillings), the new plan also includes: endodontics (root canal treatment), periodontics (treatment of gum disease), prosthodontics (crowns, bridges, dentures), orthodontic treatment (braces), and oral surgery (extractions, including wisdom teeth).

As with commercially available dental insurance plans, the new DDP will have annual maximum benefit limits per patient, and sponsor co-payments. There will also be a lifetime maximum per patient for orthodontic care. Co-payment percentages are still being negotiated.

There will be automatic enrollment for all CONUS assigned service members with eligible family members that are known to have 24 months remaining in service. Those who intend to remain in the service for 24 months who are not automatically enrolled in the new plan may enroll at their personnel center by completing DD Form 2494. The minimum enrollment period is 24 months, except for current enrollees.

All sponsors currently enrolled in the DDP will be enrolled, regardless of their remaining time in service. Enrollment criteria for overseas sponsors remain unchanged.

Automatically enrolled sponsors will have a one-time disenrollment option beginning one month prior to the implementation date of the new plan, and continuing for four months past the implementation date. Sponsors electing to disenroll from the plan may do so during this period. They will receive a full refund of all premiums deducted, as long as the program has not been used following the implementation date.

Use of the DDP during the disenrollment period will constitute acceptance of the new DDP.

Premiums for the new plan are $9.65 for a single family member and $19.30 for two or more family members. For an implementation date of April 1, deductions will begin in March. Evidence of coverage booklets will not be available until late summer. In the interim, the DEERS support office will be mailing a DDP benefits letter to all eligible

From my perspective

by Col. Robert M. Negley
64 FTW Inspector General

Inspector General business, in the U.S. military, goes back over 200 years to George Washington's requirement for accurate, first-hand information (unfiltered by the chain of command) regarding the capability, morale, discipline, and effectiveness of his forces.

Colonel Negley

Today's IG charter, codified in USC Title 10, contains these elements, plus challenges to all IGs (including Reese) to sustain a high level of confidence in our inspection system's self-correcting mechanisms. Basically, when we substantiate unit readiness deficiencies, individual complaint issues, or fraud, waste, and abuse allegations, my office serves as the focal point to ensure we implement appropriate (permanent) corrective fixes.

Economy and effectiveness

I have several mechanisms, including mobility and attack response exercises, and our self-inspection program, available to objectively gauge the READINESS capability of Reese units. I provide the commander with periodic capability assessments formulated in part from the results of these programs.

Morale and discipline

I can indirectly assess the relative strengths of and confidence in base leadership through our complaint and FW&A programs.

Good indicators of the confidence our people have in their supervisors and commanders are the issues and level at which complaints and FW&A allegations are entered for resolution.

Our people should feel comfortable going to their commanders or immediate supervisors with problems. Then, if a concern remains unsolved, the next logical step should be to address it with me. Only after no satisfaction is gained locally, should any person feel compelled to elevate a problem off base.

The message at Reese is clear for both the complaints and FW&A programs. Additional commander attention is needed to build the confidence necessary to encourage people to bring their problems to the right level (which is normally the lowest supervisory level).

Commanders and supervisors

□ Be problem-solving advocates for your personnel. If you wait for them to come to you, you'll never find them. Then put your "commander's involvement" to work to fix the issue.

□ Many of our people do not realize their commanders can and will unlock the answers to the toughest problems. Let's get this message out.

□ Unit involvement often ends when an individual is referred to a specialist. I recommend follow up and intervention, if necessary, until the problem is resolved.

□ Substantiated problems may be signposts to areas where additional attention is needed. Viewing problems only as single, isolated matters may be a mistake. They may be symptomatic of larger or systemic problems with a significant potential impact on personnel or resources.

Subordinates

□ I encourage you to allow your immediate commanders and supervisors an opportunity to work your issues. Because they may normally have first-hand information pertaining to your concern, they can quickly respond to your specific issue.

□ Response to a typical request for IG action is approximately 15 calendar days. This includes time to appoint an action officer, conduct a formal inquiry, prepare the report, and finalize a legal review. Again, my experiences indicate commanders and supervisors get answers much quicker.

My pledge

So you've attempted to use the chain of command and the problem remains, or you are not comfortable with those in the chain. Perhaps you see them as part of the problem. What do you do? Contact me and I'll assist you in any way I can.

You can walk right in, no appointment required, to my office in Bldg. 800, room 203. You can call me at 3409, or use the 24-hour IG/FW&A Hotline, 6547.

Finally, I hold a personal conference period every Wednesday at the Base Library from 2 to 3 p.m. You have the right to file a complaint at any time, and enter it at any IG-level, (that's correct, without using the chain of command) without fear of retaliation. No one can take action against you simply for logging a complaint.

Security: Safeguarding military resources, classified information, requires awareness, responsiveness of all base personnel

by MSgt. George Trammell
Security Police Squadron

Protecting classified information is not just the responsibility of those with a security clearance. Every one of us needs to know and practice good information security.

Failure to follow protective practices can result in the loss or compromise of classified information. Even if you don't have a security clearance, you are an important part of the information security process.

Information security covers a lot of areas. Do you know what to do if you find unsecured classified information? You should first try to secure it. Then you must report it to your supervisor, unit security manager, commander or higher authority in your chain of command. If you are not a military member or DOD employee, you need to report it to the security police or to the office of special investigations.

A compromise of classified information is the release of such information to someone who is not authorized to have it. Remember, the willful compromise of classified information and the failure to report a known or suspected compromise is punishable under the Uniform Code of Military Justice and U.S. Federal laws.

If you are responsible for maintaining classified information, are you taking your job seriously? We all know to ensure personnel requesting access to classified information have the proper level of security clearance and a valid need to know. Do you also ensure they have completed a nondisclosure agreement and have been trained in handling classified information?

When you handle classified information there are important rules you must follow. Are you aware of your surroundings? Can someone observe you and read the classified information without your being aware of it?

Maybe you need to close the blinds and shut the door. Be sure to cover the information when someone enters the office. Don't ever take the information home or out to lunch.

If you are transporting the information outside the office, be sure to protect it from casual observation and to have it in a proper "container." This may be an envelope, briefcase folder or the like.

Think about what you would do if someone tried to take the classified information from you. Have a plan of action in case of an emergency.

If you don't know what to do, contact your unit security manager and talk about how to better protect the information you are responsible for.

We are all responsible to protect classified information for our national security, and we all need to remain proficient in handling the information properly.

For more information, contact your unit security manager or MSgt. George Trammell, NCO in charge of information security, at 3040.

Empowerment

Definitions differ on key element of QAF

by Capt. Mark Kinsey
Sheppard Air Force Base

Until very recently, I have been struggling with the definition of "empowerment." I believe the "quality convert" would probably say the answer is simple: empowerment is allowing people to do their jobs.

I would agree that, on the surface, this answer appears correct. But below the surface, there is a great deal involved in allowing people to do their jobs.

As an instructor for a mid-level management course for Air Force officers, civilians and senior NCOs, I hear a gamut of responses about what empowerment should or should not be. With every different response, I feel I gain a better understanding of true empowerment.

The central theme of the responses appears to be a frustration with management's inability to accept or act on their inputs. Many of these mid-level managers often feel they are getting the politically correct answer. I believe the truth is actually somewhere in the middle.

The simple fact is that everyone cannot be consulted before a decision is made and, no matter what the final decision, there will be those who disagree.

How does this relate to empowerment?

First, empowering the workers on every issue simply is not feasible. Empowerment cannot be in total.

That type of empowerment or ability to change standard practices at the lowest level would be anarchy.

The Air Force's tremendous and improving record of accident prevention — largely due to the standardized procedures for aircraft maintenance — is just one of thousands of standardized practices that have paid big dividends. Empowerment must be structured.

Second, the frustration of these managers with the decision process means we still have a long way to go in our quality training. Not too long ago, the Air Force did not ask the field's opinion on decisions, causing many to believe the Air Force commitment to this thing called "quality" was lip service.

I could counter-argue that point with just one of the many articles that have appeared in the Air Force's professional publications over the past 18 months.

There have been many stories of people empowered to improve processes.

For example, one article told of maintenance troops who were invited to a worldwide conference on jet engine maintenance. The maintenance troops, many of whom were staff sergeants, offered tremendous insight to the industry engineers.

Industry was listening and acting on their guidance.

Is everyone sincere about allowing changes to processes to occur, especially from the bottom up? Perhaps not yet, but I really believe the energy of empowerment in the Air Force is breaking out all over.

As a professional budget officer, I believe in getting to the bottom line. My bottom line is this: If you are a leader or manager, do not advertise empowerment that you cannot deliver. If you are a follower or "worker bee," don't get frustrated by a system that does not always recognize your way as the best way.

The Quality Air Force movement emerging appears very sincere. The "nay-sayers" are saying, "Time will tell."

But those committed to "continuous improvement of the Air Force" are saying emphatically, "Time will tell."

The current state of health will be considered before the increased amount of insurance is approved. For more information contact squadron orderly rooms or customer service at 3276.

IG available

The wing inspector general is available from 2-3 p.m. Wednesdays at the base library conference room for a personal conference period.

Although not necessary, it is recommended that individuals try to use their chains of command (supervisor, first sergeant, commander) to solve their problems before going to the IG.

If your problem is not resolved, or if you are not comfortable working your problem through the chain of command, Air Force Regulation 123-11 lets you communicate directly with the IG.

The wing inspector can be contacted at anytime at 3409; the Fraud, Waste and Abuse Hotline is 6547.

Also, due to projected manning shortages we do not anticipate any dental capability for dependents after June 1 other than possibly exams and cleanings.

Public affairs division captures best in ATC awards

The 64th Flying Training Wing Public Affairs Division has received the Air Training Command Public Affairs Director's Excellence Award for 1992.

The award is presented in recognition of the best overall public affairs program at an ATC (small) installation. In addition, MSgt. Ralph Monson, NCO in charge of public affairs, was selected as the ATC Public Affairs Senior NCO of the Year.

"A base public affairs office is always a busy place," said Capt. Judy Burk, division chief. "But, it's a good feeling to know a panel of judges recognized our efforts in 1992 as exceptional and worthy of the Director's Excellence Award."

The public affairs division was cited for having earlier won best newspaper in ATC and the short notice handling of the white house press during President Bush's visit to Reese last fall.

The division was also praised for its successful public affairs handling of the T-1A Jayhawk arrival ceremony, Top Flight IV and the Reese Open House, among other special events and activities.

"Both the director's award and the senior NCO award really belong to the entire office," said Sergeant Monson. "We have an outstanding staff of PA technicians who really pull together when needed."

Other major contributors to the award are Bill Tynan, SSgt. Mike Breslin, Sgt Greg Spraggins and A1C Tabatha Eanes.

Mr. Jones enters statistics into his computer about an environmental project.

64th CES planner receives ATC environmental award

Stephen D. Jones, an environmental planner with the 64th Civil Engineering Squadron here, was recently named the ATC nominee for the Air Force Environmental Compliance Award for Individual Excellence.

The annual award is presented to the top individual that deals with state and environmental protection agency environmental compliance issues.

"I'm very flattered by my selection," said Mr. Jones. "ATC has some of the best compliance people in the world. It's very humbling to represent ATC."

The ATC environmental award nominees' packages were forwarded to the Air Force level competition. Winners will be announced in April.

Mr. Jones began working at Reese in June 1987 as an exterior electrician. He was reassigned to his current position in April 1990.

Mr. Jones was named the 64th CES civilian of the quarter as well as the 64th CES civilian of the year for 1992.

Air Force keeps its promise; first banked pilots set to fly

RANDOLPH AFB, Texas — The Air Force is keeping its promise as the first class of "banked" pilots graduated Jan. 22 from their requalification training course.

Force reductions and base closures slashed the number of available cockpits in fiscal year 1991, leaving little space for undergraduate pilot training students upon graduation. Because of this, the Air Force began banking student pilots — putting them in other valid slots until aircraft seats emptied. There are currently about 1,100 banked pilots.

First Lt. John C. Merten, 27, was in the first class of about 23 to be banked in 1991. The Boulder, Colo., native was also in the first class to be requalified.

When the lieutenant initially went through UPT, this delay in his life-long ambition was not expected. All graduates of the year-long classes before his were guaranteed a flying slot. The Air Force never had the problem of too many pilots, too few slots.

"We found out about five weeks before we graduated that it would be about three years before we could fly," Lieutenant Merten said. "I was disappointed, but, mentally, I didn't want to get out."

"One way or another, the Air Force is going to try to keep its promise to me," he said, "and I wasn't going to throw it away because of a setback. Once you realize a goal, know what it is, you work for it."

Following UPT, Lieutenant Merten worked at Beale AFB, Calif., at Second Air Force as an assistant executive officer. Bombers were his choice of weapons system upon graduation and — as the Air Force came through on another promise — his first flying assignment will be in a B-1.

The approximately 1,100 pilots currently banked can expect to get back into jets no later than about two years and 10 months after they were banked. While they wait, pilots go back to school or fill valid positions — usually at a base where the type of aircraft they will fly are stationed.

"This allows them to identify with their future command or wing," said Col. Don H. Feld, director of programs and resources for ATC operations. "Sometimes the pilots may even go back to that base on flight status."

Since banking pilots came about, a course to get the pilots current on their skills had to be created.

"The class was great," Lieutenant Merten said. "Before going through requalification training we lived and died on rumors."

The focus of the 45-day course is to refamiliarize pilots in the T-38. "The instructors were very professional and were there to put us through the course — not wash us out," the lieutenant said.

A steady stream of classes starts later this year at Reese; Vance AFB, Okla.; and Columbus AFB, Miss. Laughlin AFB, Texas, began classes last month. Plans call for about 15 classes a year.

The drawdown and cuts have caused the numbers crunch, but the natural course of PCS's and people leaving the military have slowly opened some slots. "But this isn't happening as quickly as the drawdowns, so we need to open the valve slowly," Colonel Feld said about the number of students going through requalification training.

The training consists of 30 sorties and pilots are required to attain the level of proficiency at which they initially graduated. Of the 30 sorties, two are check rides. The first — the transition phase check ride — is flown midway through the course and tests the student's basic flying skills. The last sortie in the course — the mission qualification check ride — requires bomber and fighter students to test in formation while tanker transport students test their navigational skills.

"Early indicators show the new program is running well," Colonel Feld said.

Second Lt. Peter Garretson is a Reese banked pilot awaiting an Air Force Institute of Technology assignment.

His initial assignment was to Walker AFB as protestant chaplain and from there he went on to Shulinkou AS, Taiwan. He was the site chaplain for the Air Defense Command, Pacific Northwest Section, and the senior protestant chaplain at RAF Chicksands, England.

From England he traveled to Norton AFB, Calif., as senior protestant chaplain and on to Sonderstrom AB, Greenland. He then served as senior protestant chaplain at Hill AFB, Utah, followed by a tour at England AFB, La., as installation staff chaplain.

ATC headquarters at Randolph AFB, Texas, was his next assignment as chief, readiness and budget and logistics divisions. Remaining in Texas, he headed the Carswell AFB, Texas staff as the installation staff chaplain. His next tour was at Rhein Main AB, Germany, as the installation staff chaplain. Chaplain Bush returned to Randolph AFB, Texas, as the command chaplain in July 1991.

Chaplain Bush received a bachelor's degree from Buena Vista College, Storm Lake, Iowa, in 1958 and a master of divinity in 1961 from Eastern Baptist Seminary, Philadelphia. He is also a 1987 graduate of the Air War College.

The cost of the breakfast is $3. Tickets may be secured through any first sergeant or the chapel. For further information, call Chaplain (Maj.) Millard Timmons at 3237.

Helping people find jobs is goal of career program

by Reynalda Schroeder family support center

The Career Focus Program is primarily designed to provide services and programs for active duty spouses wishing employment outside the home.

Others eligible for services and programs are other branches of the service, guard and reserve on active duty, retirees, Department of Defense civilians and their eligible family members. New personnel are given information at "INTRO" or "Blast-Off" briefings about the family support center and its programs, one of which is the CFP.

How does the CFP work? The program is similar to a personnel agency for those eligible while at Reese. Unlike employment agencies, there are no fees. The spouse contacts the CFP manager and together they make a review of experience, education, skills, job interests and job opportunities in the area.

We attempt to maintain current listings of vacancies in the Lubbock area in order to facilitate your search for employment. Job Line numbers and a list of major employers is made available so that once an application is made to an organization, following up can be as easy as picking up the telephone. Also, we are in contact with various local employers who call us for referrals to fill specific vacancies.

The CFP does not guarantee to find you a job, but can only provide job leads. Once a job lead is given, you must make the contact, fill out the application, and go on the interview. We are here to assist you in putting together a résumé, completing applications, writing follow-up letters, and the like. We can offer advice, guidance and assistance if you are having problems during any phase of the job-hunting process.

What you must do is keep in touch and let us know how the process is going.

Flexibility is very important when job hunting because sometimes taking a position in an organization that is not exactly what you want can be a stepping stone — getting your foot in the door — to the job you want.

At times we interview a spouse who would benefit more from continuing his or her education and developing better skills prior to entering the job market. In these cases, we refer our clients to the education center or other appropriate agencies for interest assessment. We also provide information on educational programs in the area.

The CFP offers seminars and workshops such as "successful job hunting," "résumé writing," and "interviewing skills."

These workshops are presented by professionals. The information they provide is not theory but practical help since the presenters are often the employers, people who actually do the screening and hiring. We highly encourage our patrons to participate.

For more information about the career focus program, call 6494 or come by the family support center, Bldg. 310.
