Going my way? . . . I'm sure you are. We're both heading into the deusest "fog" in our lives! There's going to be plenty of snags and bumps—probably worse. And that "fog" isn't going to lift until after the way. Foat is it'll probably set thicker and thickers the limit. the war. Fact is, it'll probably get thicker and thicker the longer those damn Japs and Nazis hold out!

You and I may not see the firing line—but we do have a big responsibility in keeping the home fires burning—in keeping our democratic economy going. That's what we're fighting for! It is with Advertising that you enter this unprecedented "fog." You don't want to lose us-and we don't want to lose you. We've got to hang together! We want to keep campaigns coming to you-and we're counting on you backing them with merchandising cooperation more

Do these things now, and after we get back to normal times again, you'll be glad you did!

Much In Little

George Ade is an old man, having passed his 76th birthday. His reputation as the "Hoosier humorist" depends on writings, chiefly the "Fables in Slang," which already sound "dated" to a generation which has passed him by.

But neither the generation nor the times have passed by Ade himself. He says "the old bean is working; I can read all I want, and get around as much as I like.

Evidence that this is true comes from a sentence in his birthday interview in which he came about as close to telling what the war is all about in one sentence as some others have done in encyclopedic books. Said Ade:

"Decent people can't lie down and let those roughnecks walk on them."

the game of the experienced player. He would not discuss freak hands. He would say to his pupils, "About 85 per cent of all hands dealt are of the five most frequent patterns. The principles of bidding and play are developed for these hands. It is impossible to lay down rules for the other 15 per cent, where bad breaks are bound to upset all average expectations."

Anyone who wished to take lessons from Whitehead first had to play a series of test hands, through which Whitehead analyzed weaknesses. Today's hand was No. 1 of the catechism"

Whitehead would give the pupil the South cards, lay out the dummy, and play the defense himself. He would cash two rounds of spades, then shift to the jack of diamonds. Now play the hand.

Nine out of ten pupils, said Whitehead, would win the dia-mond with the king, lead the third spade for dummy to ruff, cash the ace and king of trumps, then take the ace and king of clubs and ruff a third club. When the clubs failed to break, the contract was set one, as the declarer still had to lose a trump and a diamond.

"Now," Whitehead would say, 'you could have set up one long club by one more ruff if you had had an extra re-entry to dummy. Why, then, did you rush to ruff
