War Demands To Keep Oil Men Busy

AUSTIN-(AP)-Compelling war demands for crude products will keep the gigantic Texas oil industry humming indefinitely despite nationwide gasoline rationing, the majority members of the Railroad Commission asserted Thursday.

'Until last month, the nation was in the preparedness stage,' exlpained Chairman Ernest O. Thompson, 'but now that we have started large scale military operations we can expect ever increasing demands for Texas' crude."

License Laws

There is only one known way to relieve a doctor shortage, and that is to find another doctor and move him into the area where the shortage exists. That sounds easy, but any time you try to shove doctors around you run into difficulties.

First you have to find a doctor who is willing to be shoved. Maybe the community won't like the new doctor. Maybe, if the shift involves crossing a state line, the state into which the doctor would otherwise be willing to move won't grant him a license. That actually happens. It's the old bugaboo, the interstate trade barrier which also hampers the operation of truck drivers and milk sales-

Every doctor must pass a stiff examination to get his license to practice medicine within that state, but no state will honor the licenses of other states, and a doctor licensed in New York can't practice in New Jersey unless he first passes the New Jersey examination. He can treat New Jersey people who come to his New York office, but not the other way around. A uniform law to correct this nuisance by providing for temporary licenses has been recommended but it would take several years to have this corrected in any reasonable number of states, and as matters stand today only 38 states of the union have reciprocal arrangements for transfer of licenses and nine states require the transferring doctor shall have been practicing for from one to 10 years.

One way to get around those restrictions would be to commission a doctor in the U. S. Public Health Service. He would then be a federal officer and he could be (Continued from page 1) moved into any part of the country.

between strategy and tactics, he said that the bidding is strategy and the play of the hand tactics; that most players would agree that the play, or tactics, is more difficult than the bidding or strategy The latter is to a certain degree mechanical and subject to convention, while the tactics, or play, giv more scope for the skill of the good player.

Today's hand brings out the general's point. The contract reached rather mechanically, and may or may not be made. South has only a minimum opening in high cards, and his rebid is based solely on the hope that the pat-terns will fit together well.

When the dummy goes down, he sees he must win some additional tricks in the black suits to make the contract. He wins the first rick and leads a spade. What actually happened now was that West put up the king of spades and returned a trump, which rode to the king. South led the other spade and East won. East led back the three of trumps and South alertly played the nine, which held. Then South could afford to ruff one diamond with the queen of trumps, ruff : third spade, and cash the ace trumps to pick up the jack. The ace of clubs gave re-entry to the two long spades.
