Chief Master Sgt. of the AF addresses enlisted issues

Chief Master Sgt. of the Air Force David J. Campanale visited here Friday through Sunday. He was the guest speaker at this year's annual Enlisted Awards Banquet.

During a question and answer session, the chief discussed some issues facing today's enlisted corps.

Q: What are the top three pressing issues facing quality of life for the enlisted?

A: Housing, first and foremost, for both our accompanied and unaccompanied people; pay and compensation and educational opportunities follow.

Q. Is there any pending news about dormitory living arrangements?

A. You are going to hear an announcement soon after the budget situation is resolved. It will describe our intentions for future dormitory construction and renovation plans.

Quality of life for our military personnel is of great concern to our Air Force Leadership. The Secretary of Defense (William J. Perry) is also very committed to helping out all our people. I think Air Force people will be pleased with the decisions and the direction we're headed.

Q. What is the future for married housing?

A. We're moving toward privatization asking the private sector to help us out and perhaps, eventually get us out of the housing business.

We have come to a point today in the Air Force where we have about 60,000 houses that are below what we think are acceptable standards. With the current funding we get every year to fix or replace these houses, it's going to take us 24

Leaders send Thanksgiving messages

by President Bill Clinton

During this time of Thanksgiving, all Americans owe special appreciation to the men and women who serve in our nation's Armed Forces and to the families who support them.

Thanksgiving is the season when families traditionally come together to express gratitude for the blessings they enjoy.

For many of you, this reunion will not be possible — you will observe the holiday in faraway lands or aboard ships deployed around the world. That is one of the many sacrifices you make to defend the freedoms we hold so dear. But your dedicated service is crucial to our well-being, reminding nations around the globe of our country's strength and of our unshakable resolve to uphold the democratic ideals on which America was founded.

When citizens across the nation gather this year for their Thanksgiving dinner, they'll give thanks not only for their freedom but for all that you are doing to protect their cherished freedom.

The thoughts and prayers of all Americans will be with you on this occasion, and Hillary and I join in wishing you the best for a joyous and happy Thanksgiving.

by William J. Perry
Secretary of Defense

Fifty years ago, Americans sitting down to their Thanksgiving dinners had much to be thankful for. The most destructive war the world had seen was over, and America's sons and daughters were returning from far-flung battlefields.

The future looked bright and peaceful.

The Americans at their Thanksgiving tables in 1945 could not have foreseen the twists and turns that history was about to take — the start-up of the Cold War, communist aggression in Korea, the Vietnam War, the Persian Gulf War, and the many other operations in which U.S. forces have taken part.

In a sense, we are in much the same situation as those of the World War II generation. Like them, we have seen the end of a long and costly war — the Cold War. Like them, we are thankful for peace. And like them, we face an uncertain future.

Yet despite the uncertainties, I am confident the U.S. service members will stand ready to guard our country and protect our national interests. America is thankful and fortunate to have men and women like you in our armed forces.

Wherever you are this holiday, you can take great pride for your role in America's peace and the world's security.

by Shelia E. Widnall
Secretary of the Air Force and Gen. Ronald R. Fogleman
Air Force chief of staff

The Thanksgiving holiday has traditionally been a time for Americans to join family and friends in giving thanks for a bountiful year. This is especially true for our Air Force family, which upon reflection has much for which to be thankful.

As a key member of a larger American and NATO team, our airmen are demonstrating the United Nations resolve to restore peace in Bosnia. And at the same time we're helping to keep tabs on Iraq and preserve peace in the Persian Gulf region.

To uphold our commitment to help those in need, we've been engaged in mobility operations providing relief supplies and food to starving people in Africa and the storm-ravaged people of the Caribbean.

We unfolded a new era of cooperation and openness with our Western Hemisphere neighbors and now train and fight together to maintain democracy and stamp out the scourge of narcoterrorism.

It isn't always easy doing these and the other things we've accomplished. It has meant enduring long separations, making hard choices and sacrifices and persevering through hardship. Along the way we've laid to rest some of our own, proving again that all we strive for and fight to maintain doesn't come without cost.

We join other Americans in giving thanks for what we've accomplished and to those who keep us free. And as Thanksgiving leads us into the festive holiday season, Americans also expect their military to maintain a constant vigil ... while they pause and give thanks for the men and women of their military forces.

by Gen. Billy J. Boles
AETC commander

The men and women of Air Education and Training Command have accomplished much in 1995, notwithstanding many challenges and opportunities to fail. I am proud of you all.

The Thanksgiving season is a time for each of us to give thanks for the many blessings which have been bestowed upon us. There is no better way to do that than by being with family and friends who have done so much to give us support as we have weathered the adversities.

Have a great holiday season and let's be thankful for what we have and who we are — part of the greatest Air Force in the world.

by Col. Randy Gelwix
64th FTW commander

Thanksgiving is the day we give thanks for the blessings we received during the past year.

This will also be a four-day weekend for Reese personnel.

Family gatherings are a tradition during the Thanksgiving weekend. We must be careful not to overextend the driving time just to get to or from family gatherings. If an extra day or two of leave is required to get there and back safely, don't hesitate to ask for it.

During this weekend, a lot of you will serve or be served alcohol. Moderation is the key and is the responsibility of the host as well as each individual. Allow your guests to enjoy themselves but please ensure a designated driver is available.

I want each of you to really enjoy this weekend, you deserve it! If you're driving long distances, plan accordingly and make this quality family time enjoyable. I hope to see everybody safely back at work, well rested and ready to continue our mission.

(Continued from Page 1) years to get them up to standards. By the end of that 24 years, we're probably going to have another 60,000 houses to fix. So it would be a continuous circle. We'd be investing money and could not see the benefit and our people would feel the brunt financially. So, we think privatization is the way to go, and the benefits privatization provides will allow us to care for our most valuable resource, our people.

Q. What is the overseas housing situation like?

A. It depends on the area. Some cases it's okay and some cases it's not. One of the things we've looked at and been able to use is government-leased housing in some overseas areas.

Q. With a smaller military, what is the availability of overseas assignments?

A. There's not as many choices as there used to be, but there are not as many people competing for those choices either. The assignment process can be frustrating because people expect to volunteer and get selected right away. Well, that just doesn't happen right away for everyone but if you're persistent and patient, you'll more than likely get your assignment choice and have the chance to serve overseas.

Q. Are you satisfied with the recent changes to the performance system and the promotion system?

A. Very satisfied! We just did a review this past February and I'm confident the changes we made will make our system even better. We'll see, it takes time; you have to let these things work.

Look at this year-- we had a higher promotion rate in every promotion grade than we anticipated. That tells me the system is working. I look around and although we have a lot of sharp people who don't get promoted, we're promoting a lot of tremendously sharp people.

People naturally are frustrated when they don't get promoted. But in today's Air Force the competition is pretty stiff. To be outstanding in the Air Force today is just an average thing. Just walk down the street and take a look at Air Force people. You don't see many Air Force people hanging around today who are not outstanding. You just have to work harder today to get promoted than you use to.

Is the current system perfect? No, but it's the best possible system because it's a system that basically gives the member, to the greatest extent possible, the opportunity to control their destiny. That to me is an excellent promotion system.

Q. What advice can you give an airman on making grade to a senior noncommissioned officer?

A. Just try to do your best, increase your knowledge and experience, work hard and be the best person you can be. Along the way you'll find out that personal excellence in who you are, what you do and how you do it are far more important than what rank you serve.

Chief Master Sgt. of the Air Force David J. Campanale was the guest speaker at the Enlisted Awards Banquet Saturday. This year's award winners were: First Sergeant of the Year-- Master Sgt. Roger Gravelle; Senior NCO-- Master Sgt. Gary Loftus, 64th Operations Support Squadron; NCO-- Staff Sgt. Robert Palos, 35th Flying Training Squadron; and Airman-- Senior Airman Kyle Gibson, 64th Medical Support Squadron.

64th SVS activities not impacted by closure

by Capt. Jonathan Grammer
64th Services Squadron commander

Have you wondered how base closure will affect the services provided by the Base Exchange, Commissary and 64th Services Squadron?

It won't have any impact on the services provided as long as there is a continued demand from customers.

The BX has a new manager, Cathy Ely, who brings 13 years of experience and a strong desire to serve the customer. The BX has already made some improvements making it easier to cash checks and receive services previously provided at the cashier's cage. Now you can cash checks, purchase money orders or stamps at any register in the store. Checks may also be written for $150 over the amount of your purchase.

All automotive items were moved to the service station making room for items such as our new line of exercise equipment. Toyland is ready for Christmas with a huge inventory and variety of toys. There are plans to dramatically increase the book selection and rearrange displays to enhance your shopping experience.

The BX offers a guarantee to match any price, before taxes, from discount stores. Also, if you make a purchase at the BX and find the same item elsewhere within 30 days, bring in your receipt and we'll gladly refund the difference.

The 64th SVS and Commissary are continuing business as usual. All activities are open and our people look forward to serving you. They will continue to try new programs and are ready to tailor programs to meet the needs of customers. Take a few minutes to let them know how they are doing by completing a customer comment card or visiting with one of the staff members.

Continued usage and support of your BX, Commissary and 64th SVS activities allows them to remain open and continue the level of service you currently receive.

Low theater attendance threatens operation

In the past few months we've noticed a dramatic reduction in attendance at the base theater on Sunday evenings.

Obviously, we want to keep showing a movie on Sunday night, but we can't do it without an increase in attendance.

Since this is a night prior to school, we are going to start the Sunday movie at 6:30 p.m. and show family oriented movies as much as possible hoping that more of you will come out to the show. However, if attendance continues declining, we'll be forced to eliminate the Sunday movie. Please help us help you.

Keep the holidays happy.

Proper food preparation, storage key for healthy holiday meals

by Airman Carlos Perez
Public health

With the holidays just around the corner, excitement grows with the thought of holiday foods and gifts.

However, holiday meals can turn into horrible memories.

Without proper storage and preparation, these holiday memories can turn from being with friends and family to having salmonella; which can be abdominal pain, cramping, fever, diarrhea, nausea and vomiting.

In order to prevent any foodborne illness from happening, you should consider several things.

□ Microorganisms grow in temperatures between 41 to 140 degrees Fahrenheit.

□ Thaw food properly. Defrost frozen foods in the refrigerator to prevent them from passing the 41 degree Fahrenheit limit.

□ Maintain cooked items at or above 140 degrees Fahrenheit while serving.

□ Practice good personal hygiene by washing your hands before, during and after preparing food.

□ Wash kitchen counters and anything that touches raw meat. Keep dishes, utensils, kitchen equipment and work surfaces clean before and after they are used.

□ Wrap and store leftovers in the refrigerator promptly. This prevents potentially harmful bacteria from growing.

□ Freeze leftovers that will be kept longer than a couple of days rather than refrigerating them.

□ Use leftovers as soon as possible after defrosting.

Following these tips should help ensure you enjoy your holiday meals.

Survivors recount Saudi bomb blast

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AFNS) — The grace of God, a busy friend and a high-back chair all may have kept the death toll from rising after a 220-pound car bomb ripped through an office building here Nov. 13, say some of its survivors.

The blast killed six and injured more than 60. Five of those killed and 30 of the injured were Americans. The terrorist's target housed the Office of the Program Manager for the Saudi Arabian National Guard, a U.S. Army security assistance program that started in the early 1970s.

Most of the 150 U.S. soldiers and civilians who work for OPM-SANG have offices in that building.

"I was sitting in my high-back chair up in my third floor office. I remember adjusting my glasses — then I had no sense of anything happening until I pushed a window frame off my shoulder that had hit me in the head," said Greg Turner a retired lieutenant colonel, now an Army civilian. Turner still in a Saudi hospital, said his recovery was going well after having his ear reattached and many cuts stitched up.

Right after the blast he wasn't so sure he'd make it. Turner managed to crawl and weave his way through a maze of ceiling tile and its framework to reach the stairs. "Right before I reached the stairs all this dust came in and you couldn't see a thing," Turner stumbled down to street level where he remembers little.

"This Saudi pulled up in a four-wheel drive vehicle of some type, somebody loaded up four or five of us who looked the worst and then whisked us off to the hospital. I really wasn't as bad off as the others, but I was bleeding a lot. I guess that's why they took me."

He then squeezes his wife's hand and says: "I'm thoroughly convinced if it wasn't for the back of that chair (which faced the wall of plate-glass) I wouldn't be sitting here talking to you today."

That Monday, down on the second floor of the three-story building, 21-year-old Niamh Miller, an American clerical worker, was slightly annoyed with her friend because she was running late for lunch.

"I called her and she had to finish up some work, so I decided to eat lunch in the office rather than go down to the cafeteria," said Miller. "If it wasn't for her I would have been down in the cafeteria."

The first-floor cafeteria was one of the hardest hit areas. Most of those killed by the 11:30 a.m. blast were in that section of the building.

The unity of this small, tight-knit community of about 350 workers and family members was evident right after the explosion, said Col. Lyn Boylston, who was also working in the building.

"The spouses had raced down from the housing area and were there with bandages and other first aid stuff within 10 minutes," said Boylston. Boylston, who had just been out on his third-floor balcony, was huddled over his desk with two other people looking over a briefing when the bomb went off.

"I could feel the heat and there was this pungent odor as I picked myself up off the floor," he said. "I immediately began trying to figure out what caused the explosion. At first I thought it might be the new air conditioner they just installed on the roof, then maybe a Scud (missile). About that time there were more explosions and I thought we were under attack." Later he discovered the secondary explosions were caused by the rupturing gas tanks of some of the vehicles in the parking lot. Boylston escaped with only a few scrapes and bruises.

"About the time the explosions stopped and I had found the other people in the office, I heard prayer call and remember thinking 'how appropriate.'"

Boylston helped his fellow office workers out of the building, then he helped an "unorganized team effort to clear the third floor. The scene outside was absolute chaos," said the colonel. "Your ears almost hurt from all the sirens - civilian police, military police and all kinds of ambulances."

He said the full effect of the bombing didn't sink in until he went back to the building the next day.

64th OSS common link between flying squadrons

by Senior Airman Tim Dempsey
Staff writer

The mission of the 64th Operations Support Squadron is to provide direct support to Joint Specialized Undergraduate Pilot Training.

It is the common link between the 35th, 52nd and 54th Flying Training Squadrons.

The support is provided through flight and academic training, quality assurance of the contract simulator instruction, airfield management, weather, air traffic control, flight records, life support, wing scheduling and airspace.

The squadron is comprised of the current operations, international training, airfield operations, academic, weather, intelligence and V flights.

The current operations flight is responsible for wing programming, life support and flight records.

The international training flight is responsible for the well-being and training of the international students, which is approximately 4.5% of JSUPT students.

The airfield operations flight is responsible for the air traffic control tower and the base operations. The control tower's 20-member team is involved with monitoring approximately 75,000 sorties per year.

The academic flight is responsible for all academic training for the JSUPT students.

The weather flight provides 24-hour weather support for the base. It accomplishes this by providing flying weather conditions for all aircraft leaving Reese and giving warning notices about dangerous weather conditions threatening the base.

The intelligence flight provides weekly classified briefings on worldwide scientific, military and political developments to the wing staff, aircrews and support personnel. It also instructs JSUPT students on five intelligence academic blocks.

The V flight is comprised of the base operations, standardization evaluation, CSI and TRIM quality assurance evaluations. The Stan Eval is responsible for QAE of simulators, self-inspection and quality for the squadron.

Youth baseball seeks family of year

In celebration of the American military family and its dedication to youth baseball, the makers of FRENCH Mustard, in cooperation with USA Baseball are sponsoring a search to honor a "Youth Baseball Military Family of the Year" at military installations across the United States.

From among the winners, one family will be honored and recognized at the 1996 Summer Games in Atlanta.

To be eligible for the "Family of the Year" honor, nominees must meet the following criteria:

□ At least one member of the family must be on active duty in the United States military.

□ At least two members of the family must participate in or support youth baseball (league or scholastic level through high school).

□ Family members must display extraordinary enthusiasm, dedication, and support of youth baseball in their community.

□ Family members must exhibit fair play and sportsmanship in their support of youth baseball.

Nominations may be submitted by coaches, local league, military base, or school administrators, USA Baseball affiliated organizations, media, neighbors, friends or the family itself. Each nomination must be submitted with a letter explaining why that particu-

Teams shoot for turkeys in Black History tourney

The Black History Month Golf Tournament was held at the Reese Highplains Golf Course Nov. 17.

The team of Ron Hall, James Walker, Robert Taylor and Dwayne Quarles won the tournament shooting 11-under-par-71. Turkeys, golf balls, gift certificates and prize money were awarded to the winners.

Hall also won the Long Distance Drive on Hole 13 and Jeff Cossairt won the Closest Pin on Hole 9. They both won a Thanksgiving turkey.

The tourney raised more than $300 for the Black History Month Banquet in February.

The tournament organizers thanks all of the volunteers who helped in this event.
