1980 record year in U.S. for homicide

By SCOTT KRAFT
Associated Press Writer

The New Year was barely a minute old in the nation's capital when a 17-year-old girl was shot to death — a quick reminder of 1980's grim legacy of murder and a hint that the upswing may continue in 1981.

New York, Los Angeles and Chicago led the country's cities in homicides in 1980, according to an Associated Press check of police records. Florida's Dade County posted a 50 percent increase and Memphis, Tenn., a 30 percent increase.

"Life just seems to be cheaper these days," said a detective in New York, where a record 1,787 people were killed in 1980, including former Beatle John Lennon. The total was up 50 from 1979's record.

A 25 percent increase in homicides in Los Angeles brought a record toll of 1,040 for the year, up from 806 in 1979. In Los Angeles County, more than 2,300 people were slain.

Chicago, No. 2 murder city in 1979 with 855, had 865 homicides in 1980 to rank third behind Los Angeles.

In Dade County, 580 people were killed for an increase of more than 50 percent over the 363 in 1979. Authorities said homicides have increased 90 percent in the past two years.

"Violence has become epidemic. It's very contagious. When people see that one person can do it, then they think they can, too," said Dr. David Abrahamsen, the New York psychoanalyst who examined David Berkowitz in the Son of Sam killings.

"Before it gets better, it's going to get worse," Abrahamsen predicted.

Violent deaths during 1980 were more frequent in many other large cities, from Detroit to Kansas City, Mo., and Columbus, Ohio, to Dallas.

In the District of Columbia, 202 people were killed during the year, up 12 from 1979, and the Washington Post on Wednesday devoted two pages to pictures of some of the victims. The capital's first homicide of 1981 was Robin Henderson, shot and killed at 12:01 New Year's Day. A young suspect was taken into custody in that case.

Nationwide, 21,456 people were slain in 1979, the FBI says. But figures for 1980 won't be available for some time.

Authorities and crime psychologists blame the upswing in homicides on the country's sagging economy, lack of effective handgun control legislation and a loosening of family ties.

"We are a violent people, unfortunately," Abrahamsen said. "Killing has come to be thought of as an easy way to get out of a situation. It is really frightening."

Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley has endorsed part of a $17.6 million crash program to stem the crime wave, and police plan to get rookie officers on the street sooner.

James Sullivan, chief of detectives in New York City, called for national gun control legislation to stem the increase in murders.

Although New York has one of the strictest gun control laws in the nation, weapons are imported from other states, he said. The gun used to kill Lennon in December was purchased in Honolulu, he noted.

Drug wars, family fights, barroom brawls and traffic disputes are among the reasons for an increase in murders in Dade County.

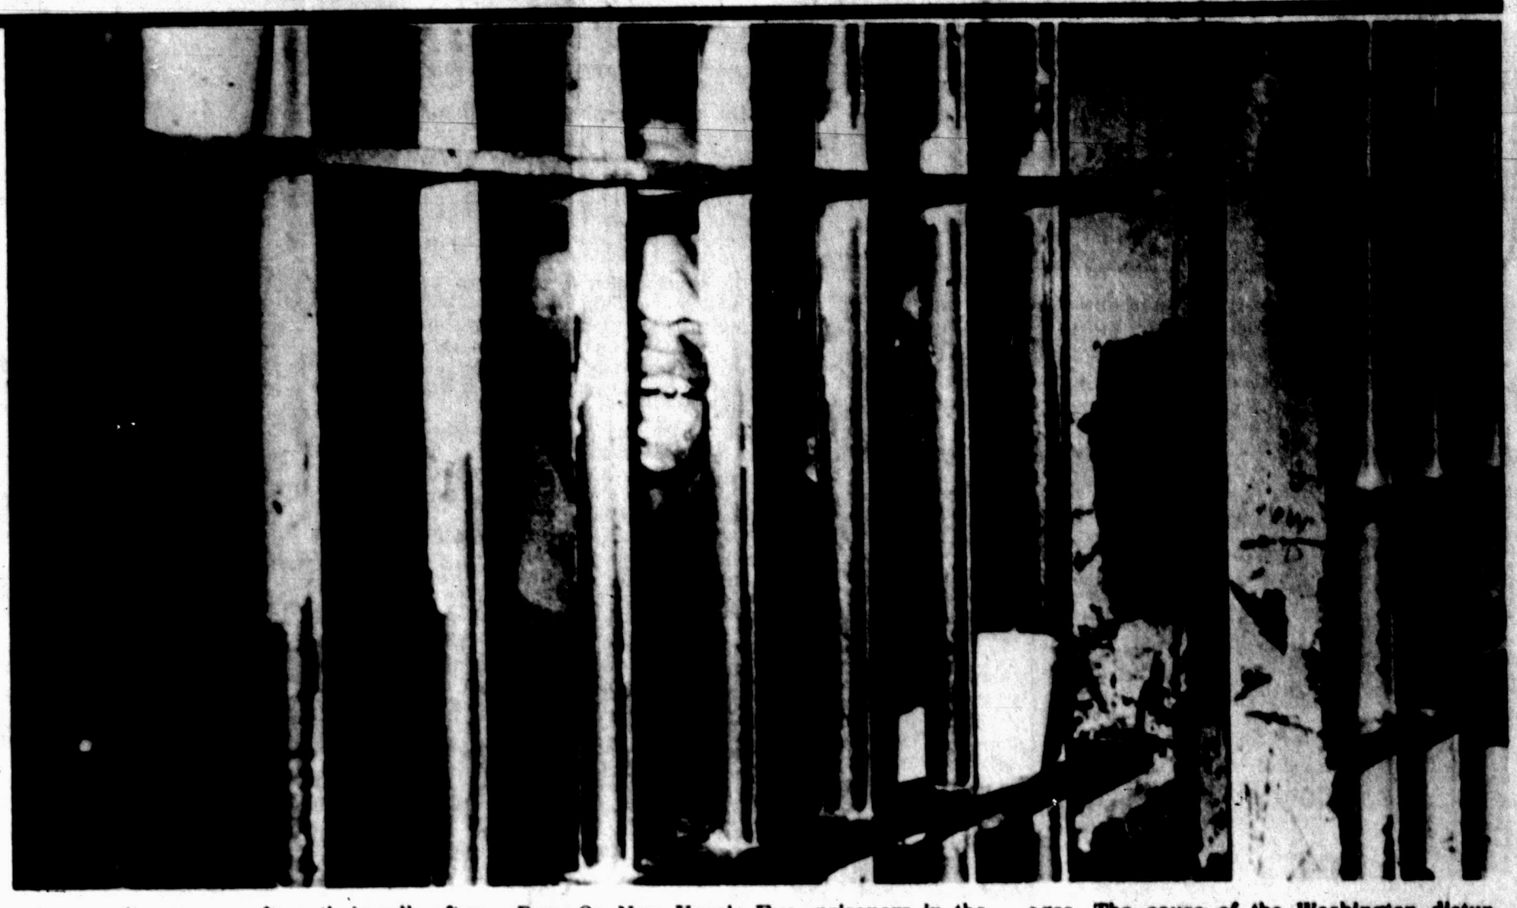
County homicide Capt. Marshall Frank said he's seen an increase in the number of murders committed by "crazy people for no other reason than they are crazy."

Dade County's population boomed in 1980 as "Freedom Flotilla" refugees arrived from Cuba, and county homicide Sgt. Mike Gonzalez said those refugees acccounted for about 15 percent of the year's homicides.

"It's easy to see there is less respect for life," said William Willbanks, a criminology professor at Florida International University. "But why? That's the key."

Other cities and their preliminary 1980 homicide tolls:

Detroit 547, up 96; Philadelphia 438, up 52; New Orleans 242, up 26; Dallas 327, up 20; Memphis, Tenn., 166, up 48; Kansas City, Mo., a record 139, up 20; Phoenix, Ariz., 112, up 12; Columbus, Ohio, 90, up 18; Seattle 64, up 23, and Portland, Ore., 49, up nine.



Angry prisoners peer from their cells after taking over the Lafayette Parish Jail in Louisiana for some seven hours New Year's Day. On New Year's Eve, prisoners in the state Corrections Center in Shelton, Wash., went on a rampage causing $750,000 in damages. Inmates riot in two state prisons

Causes of disturbances sought by state officials

Louisiana

LAFAYETTE, La. (AP) — Officials who ignored court orders to improve security and living conditions at the Lafayette Parish prison are to blame for a melee in which two jailers were held hostage, says a lawyer who mediated a tense, seven-hour standoff between inmates and authorities.

"It is not too hard to make the claim that it would not have occurred had there been better security," said attorney Cliff Remm of Acadiana Legal Services, a law firm for indigent defendants.

"It could have led to a lot of bloodshed," he said. "I'm happy it turned out the way it did. It had the potential to be a very bad affair."

No one was injured in the incident Thursday, which began about 2:30 a.m. when 28 maximum security prisoners overpowered two jailers who entered a cell block to investigate shouts that an inmate was being raped, according to Chief Deputy Major Bill Vincent.

The jailers, Ivory Celestine and Wilbert McComb, barricaded themselves into a laundry room of the seventh-floor courthouse lockup as some 95 of the 109 inmates armed themselves with kitchen knives, screwdrivers and hastily improvised clubs and destroyed or damaged jail records and furnishings and inmate property.

A special tactics team was in position to rake the jail passageways with plastic shot from 12-gauge riot guns when the hostages were freed and the inmates agreed to return to their cells.

"They just gave up," said deputy Michael Minzey. "They didn't have anything left to bargain with."

Remm and television newsman Jerry J. Grayson were called in as go-betweens by three inmate spokesmen who opened telephone negotiations with Sheriff Carlo Listi and District Attorney Nathan Stansbury.

Meanwhile, some 60 officers converged on the court building. According to one member of the special weapons team, a sharpshooter posted with an M-16 rifle on the roof of the adjoining First National Bank building spotted McComb and Celestine and alerted the siege command post.

A deputy who remained hidden on the seventh floor was then able to free the jailers, and they escaped down a key-operated elevator inaccessible to inmates. "We had the keys. They didn't," a deputy said.

As part of their agreement, one inmate locked the others in their cells and waited for Remm and the deputies to walk up the stairs and reassume control of the jail.

Listi and Stansbury agreed to the inmates' demand that no prisoner be prosecuted for participating in the takeover, and that no reprisals would be taken against individual prisoners, Remm said.

Washington

SHELTON, Wash. (AP) — The 806 inmates of the state Corrections Center will be confined to their living quarters through the weekend after a rampage, the worst in the center's history, that caused $750,000 in damages, officials say.

The cause of the New Year's Eve burning and rock-hurling melee remained a mystery Thursday to prison officials.

"It's something the administration obviously would like to know — if they were venting anger at a particular individual or procedure, overcrowding or whatever — but we still have no good reason," said Dick Paulson, spokesman for the Department of Social and Health Services.

In what Superintendent Bob Jones called a "semilockdown," prisoners watched television in their living units Thursday and were let out, one wing at a time, for meals.

About 100 inmates participated in Wednesday evening's riot, Paulson said, and authorities isolated 22 suspected "ringleaders."

The rioters set fire to the education building, which included the chapel and library, broke dining room windows, pulled apart a guard control booth and ransacked the prison store.

Educational programs will be shut down a minimum of two weeks, Paulson said. The education unit provided the inmates' main activity, offering everything from remedial education to college degrees. Jones said structural engineers believe the building can be repaired.

The fracas was the worst in the 16-year history of the state's newest prison, said James Harvey, associate superintendent.

The inmate store will not be reopened, Paulson said. Inmates will order what they want in the future and items will be delivered to their cells.

Recreation and hospital admittance procedures also were being revised following the riot, which erupted after dinner and lasted about two hours.

No major injuries were reported in the melee, but one guard suffered a cut hand from broken glass, Paulson said.

Jones said he thinks the cause of the riot "was fairly complex in terms of the psychology of people. We have fought the belief that the squeaky wheel gets the grease, but that feeling has been going around in the (prison) population."

"People always feel the strain of the holiday season. They feel their loss," he said.

He also said the nature of the center has changed. The prison is getting tougher, older inmates sentenced to longer terms. "We're not a fullfledged prison. We always knew the potential was here (for a riot)."

He conceded that the center is overcrowded.

Pilot says Navy dumped nuclear waste in ocean

READING, Vt. (AP) — The Navy used a bomber to dump metal canisters filled with radioactive wastes into the Atlantic Ocean off New Jersey in 1947, a former Navy pilot says.

George Earle IV, 64, said the canisters were dumped from a B-17 bomber flying low over the ocean 100 nautical miles south-southwest of Atlantic City on three flights in October 1947.

He described the operation as "very hush-hush," and said the plane was checked for radiation contamination after each flight.

He said the Navy and the federal atomic energy officials did not respond to requests he made by letter about six months ago for an investigation of whether the canisters are leaking.

Earle said he does not know the source of the material in the canisters, or how radioactive it was.

"Where the stuff came from, I don't know," Earle said by telephone Thursday night. "But I know it was atomic waste or something, or they wouldn't have been all over us with Geiger counters."

He said he doesn't know if the canisters pose a safety threat, but raised the matter because senior officers familiar with the project probably have since died. Earle resigned from the Navy later in 1947.

"The admirals and captains, they are all dead," he said. "So I was the only one who knew where this stuff was.

"I don't want any personal publicity," he added. "I just want someone to say, 'Okay, these things are there, let's see if they're safe.'"

The flights were from Mustin Field, then the Naval Air Experimental Station, Earle said. He said the area now is near the Spectrum sports arena in Philadelphia.

He said the canisters resembled large beer barrels. He could not recall how many were dumped, but estimated that a B-17 could hold two tons in its bomb bays.

Earle said recent news stories about how the government dumped radioactive wastes in the Pacific Ocean off Santa Barbara, Calif., in the 1950s prompted him to recall his flights.

"I got thinking about this and I dug up in my files these flight plans," he said. "After 33 years, I dug up these things because it worried me."

Iran has latest U.S. word

By The Associated Press

The Algerian intermediaries in the hostage crisis arrived in Tehran today and handed over the U.S. reply to Iran's demand for $24 billion, Western reporters in the Iranian capital said. There was no immediate comment from Iranian officials.

A leading Iranian clergyman said, meanwhile, that Iran should stop bargaining over the 52 Americans and put them on trial like any other criminals because they are spies, not hostages.

The three Algerian intermediaries were met at Tehran Airport by representatives of Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai and later turned over the U.S. reply to officials directly concerned with the hostages seized 14 months ago, the reporters said.

The Algerians declined to speak with the correspondents.

Informed Washington sources said the U.S. reply offers to deposit about $12 billion of Iranian assets in an escrow account in a neutral country, presumably Algeria, and that Iran could claim the funds once the hostages are released.

President Carter said the American response contained "reasonable proposals" and said, "I think it would be to the advantage of the Iranians — certainly to the advantage of the United States and the hostages — if they would accept what we have proposed."

However, Carter has little more than two weeks left in his administration to settle the issue, and most observers saw little chance of the crisis being resolved before President-elect Ronald Reagan takes office Jan. 20.

The Washington Post reported today that the U.S. response gives Iran until Jan. 16 to accept the proposals. The Post said official sources described the date "not as an ultimatum but 'simply a fact of life.'" The sources said Iranian acceptance by Jan. 16 would give the Carter administration time to implement the proposals before going out of office.

The Post said Carter does not want to leave negotiations "in an ambiguous state that limits the options of his successor."

The Iranian Parliament decided two months ago the hostages would be freed if the U.S. government returned the wealth of the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, released $8 billion in Iranian assets frozen in U.S. banks, cancelled pending lawsuits against Iran and pledged not to interfere in Iran's affairs.

Last week, Iran said the United States had to deposit $24 billion in the Algerian Central Bank before the hostages could be freed. But Iran's chief hostage negotiator said early this week a U.S. counterproposal on the money would be accepted if the Algerians went along with it.

On Thursday, a leading Iranian clergyman, Ayatollah Allameh Wahya Noori said documents found when the Americans and the U.S. Embassy in Tehran were seized 426 days ago provided proof that the captives had been engaged in espionage.

Noori said there was no provision in Islamic law for ransom, criticized the government for demanding $24 billion, and said Iran's demand for a U.S. pledge not to interfere in Iran's affairs was "like asking a scorpion not to bite."

His statements appeared in the Tehran Times as Tehran Radio said with the U.S. "final reply" being handed over to the Algerian intermediaries, "it looks as if the matter is somehow nearing its end."

Nine-digit ZIP delayed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Postal Service, bowing to congressional pressure, today postponed until June 1 the start of a new, nine-digit ZIP code intended to save millions of dollars in costs of handling business mail.

Use of the nine-digit code was supposed to have begun in February. The Senate voted unanimously last month to order a delay until June 1, while allowing the Postal Service to buy computerized equipment and make efficiency studies of the new system, but the amendment was dropped in the final version of the legislation to which it was attached.

Postmaster General William F. Bolger said the delay was "consistent" with the Senate action and reflected a desire to make sure "that we exercise all due caution in instituting this important and far-reaching development."

Police continue investigation of fatal hit and run incident

BIG SPRING — Department of Public Safety officials are continuing their investigation into the hit and run death of 21-year-old Cynthia Marquez Machado of Big Spring.

According to a spokesman for the DPS, Ms. Machado's body was discovered about 1:20 a.m. Thursday 1½ miles north of Big Spring on Texas Highway 350.

So far, officers know only that the woman's body was found lying in the middle of the southbound lane of traffic, leading them to believe she was struck by a southbound vehicle.

She was pronounced dead at the scene by Howard County Peace Justice Lewis Heflin. Her body was taken to Sheppard Funeral Home in Big Spring.

Indefinite dentention of Cubans ruled unjust

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Indefinite prison detention of Cuban refugees thought to be security risks is a violation of basic human rights and "an abuse of discretion on the part of the attorney general," a federal judge has ruled.

"You just cannot hold people without giving them a definite time for their release," U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers said Thursday after ruling the government exceeded its authority in holding a Cuban at the federal prison at Leavenworth.

In the landmark decision, Rogers on Wednesday gave the government 90 days to release Pedro Rodriguez, free him on parole supervised by a federal lawyer or prove he is dangerous and should be jailed until he can be returned to Cuba.

Rogers' decision could affect the nearly 1,800 Cubans who have been detained at various federal institutions since being denied formal admission to the United States on grounds that they committed crimes of "moral turpitude" in Cuba.

About 6,000 other Cubans are awaiting sponsorship at a processing center in Fort Chaffee, Ark.

Government detention of the 48-year-old Rodriguez is "unlawful ... and amounts to an abuse of discretion on the part of the attorney general and his delegates," Rogers wrote in his 40-page opinion.

Rogers said he concluded the detainees have a right under international law and treaties and the United Nations Charter — in addition to basic human rights — to a rapid resolution of their status.

Rodriguez and 234 others who fled Cuba have lived for the past seven months at the maximum-security prison in Leavenworth while U.S. officials try to convince the Cuban government to take them back.

Rodriguez testified that he had been convicted by a military court in Cuba of stealing a suitcase at a bus stop.

U.S. Attorney James Buchele said Thursday in Topeka that a decision on whether to appeal Rogers' order to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver would be made next week, and probably would be based on whether the 90-day time limit is adequate.

"I don't think there's anybody in the government who feels these people should be held in prison indefinitely," Buchele said. "But can the immigration department and the State Department resolve what to do with these people in that period of time? With the new administration coming in, that may be difficult."

Leslie Granger, Rogers' administrative law research attorney, said the opinion is the first to come from among similar court cases in Topeka, Atlanta, New York and the state of Washington.

Weather nice for new year

1981 is beginning nicely weatherwise as temperatures are expected to remain in the mid-60s through Saturday with fair to partly cloudy days in store, according to the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The low tonight will fall once again to the mid-30s, with a soft southerly wind of 5-10 mph.

Winds on Saturday will be from the west to the northwest at 10-15 mph throughout the day.

The weatherman said the extended outlook for the remainder of the holiday weekend weather shows partly cloudy skies and cooler temperatures.

The high on New Year's Day reached 61 in Midland, some 12 degrees shy of the record 73 degrees set in 1965. The overnight low this morning was a warm 33 degrees above the record low for the date of zero, set in 1979.

Diceys have first baby of new year

For the Tim Dicey family, the new year brought signs of a good beginning.

A daughter was born to Tim and his wife, Donna Suchy, at 9:30 a.m. Thursday at their home, 3307 Thomas St.

This is the first reported birth for 1981 in Midland, although it does not qualify as a winner in Midland's first baby of the year contest since it was not born under a physician's supervision in a Midland hospital.

The infant has been named Sienna Mariann.

Dicey and a midwife assisted in the natural delivery, said the father. "We wanted to have the baby in surroundings that we would be comfortable with," he explained. "We thought we would be happier at home than in a hospital."

He reports that baby and mother are in fine condition.

This is the second natural childbirth delivery for the Dicey's. Sienna joins a sister, Astrid-Marie.

"The baby was expected around the 22nd of December, but I guess she wanted to hold off until the New Year," said Dicey.

A geophysicist with Gulf Oil Co., Dicey is a native of England. His wife, who is from Iowa, is an employee with First National Bank. "but she plans to stay at home a while to be with the baby," said Dicey. They moved to Midland six months ago.

Sienna and Astrid will be using Suchy-Dicey as a hyphenated last name until they reach 18 years of age, explained Dicey. "Then, they can choose which last name they want or retain the hyphenated version," he said.

"It looks like it's going to be a great year," he added. "It's been great so far."

Fake lawyer put in jail

FREEHOLD, N.J. (AP) — A New Jersey man who allegedly faked a U.S. Supreme Court decision allowing him to practice law hadn't studied his civics too well, authorities say.

Clarence E. Edmond, a former school teacher and parole officer from Long Branch, was arrested Tuesday on charges of failing to appear at a Nov. 18 hearing where he was to answer charges of impersonating a lawyer, authorities said.

He was being held Wednesday in lieu of $2,500 bail at Monmouth County Jail in Freehold.

Authorities contend Edmond penned the Clarence E. Edmond Emergency Act of 1979, which was represented as a U.S. Supreme Court decision. The civics problem is that the Supreme Court issues only opinions; Congress passes acts.

The "emergency act" purported to protect Edmond from prosecution in every jurisdiction in the country and supposedly authorized him to practice law, authorities charge. He allegedly sent it to federal prosecutors throughout the country.

Edmond allegedly tried to use powers under the "emergency act" to serve as an attorney in Long Branch Municipal Court.

Edmond faces up to a $500 fine and six months in prison if convicted.

Boy hurt in Odessa crash

ODESSA — Robert Zavalla, 7, was listed in critical condition in intensive care at Medical Center Hospital this morning as a result of a two-car collision here Thursday at 2:43 a.m.

His mother, Yvonne Zavalla, 28, of 930 E. 16th St., was listed in stable condition in intensive care.

A car driven by Lonnie J. Zimmerman of Powell, Tenn., was southbound on Dixie Avenue when it was involved in a collision with a car driven by Luz Zavalla, 29. The Zavalla car was heading north on Dixie Avenue.

The other occupant of the Zavalla car was Gregory Zavalla, 3-months old. According to a hospital spokesman, Luz Zavalla and Gregory Zavalla were treated and released.

According to reports, Zimmerman was injured but not taken to the hospital.

Couple sought in bombing of Nairobi, Kenya hotel

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The owners of the explosion-devastated Norfolk Hotel said today they believe a time bomb was responsible and that police are searching for a man and a woman who occupied the room where the bomb went off, killing at least 16 New Year's Eve revelers and injuring 85 others in the dining rooms below.

Jack and Edward Block said the man had stayed at the hotel for several days before the bombing and was visited by the woman. The owners refused to say what name the man used to register, or to comment on unconfirmed reports that he carried a Maltese passport.

The Block brothers, whose father, a poor Jewish immigrant, built a family fortune after purchasing the hotel 53 years ago, refused to comment on speculation that the bombing may have been linked to Arab-Israeli quarrels.

"There are far more important Jews in the world," Jack Block said. "I think it is far removed from us."

His brother Edward said the bomber "could be a crank. You can't tell what a lunatic will do."

Police refused to comment on the hotel owners' statements. Authorities have not yet conceded that the blast, which wrecked a large part of one of Africa's oldest and best known hotels, was caused by a bomb.

The Blocks said 14 bodies were found in the rubble, although police spokesmen contend 16 were killed.

The hotel owners said 50 persons were unaccounted for, including hotel staff and guests. They said most of the missing were believed to be guests who moved elsewhere but had not made their whereabouts known to police, or employees who had not returned to work after the explosion.

The U.S. Embassy said one American was killed, eight were missing and eight were injured. The only Americans identified so far were W.C. "Pat" Quinn, his wife, Donna, and their two children, Noah, 11 and Julie, 15, all of Hudson, N.H. They were reported in satisfactory condition after suffering extensive burns and cuts.

No official list of victims was available, and authorities said the task of identifying bodies and notifying relatives was going slowly bacause many of the victims were badly burned.

A British diplomat said two Britons — a 10-month-old infant and a 4-year-old child — were killed, three were missing and 19 injured. The Italian Embassy listed one Italian missing and two injured.

Nairobi Hospital, which took in most of the seriously injured, said it was treating four Belgians, two Frenchmen, two Germans, one Australian and 12 Kenyans.

Jack Block estimated the cost of the explosion at up to $2.8 million. He said he hoped to partially reopen the hotel in a week.

Speculation about Palestinian guerrilla involvement in the bombing was raised Thursday by Arab sources in Beirut, Lebanon, who claimed Palestinian radicals may have bombed the Jewish-owned hostelry in retaliation for past Kenyan help for Israel. They said the extremists hold two grudges against the Kenyan government.

One stems back to the government's transfer of five suspected Palestinian terrorists to Israel. The five — three Palestinians and two West Germans — were arrested in Kenya in 1976 and accused of plotting to blow up one of Israel's El Al jetliners at Nairobi. The suspects, alleged members of Dr. George Habash's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, were convicted in Israel of terrorist offenses.

The two West Germans — Brigitte Schulz and Thomas Reuter — were sentenced to 10 year prison terms but were released last week and deported to Germany as a New Year's holiday goodwill gesture. The three Palestinians are serving 18 year sentences.

The Arab radicals also were enraged by the unofficial assistance Kenya provided during Israel's daring hostage rescue raid at Uganda's Entebbe airport on July 4, 1976. After freeing the hostages from PFLP guerrillas at Entebbe, the raiders were allowed to refuel their aircraft in neighboring Nairobi before returning to Israel.

The Arab sources said either or both of the incidents could be grounds for a Palestianian reprisal, such as the bombing of a Jewish-owned target in Kenya. Spokesman for the radical Palestinian organizations in Beirut refused comment on the speculation.

Kenyan authorities have given no possible motive for the bombing and observers said there was nothing in recent Kenyan events that gave grounds for a solid theory.

Gunman murders hostage, kills self

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An armed robber who described himself as a "three-time loser" apparently turned his gun on a hostage and then killed himself after a six-hour siege at a central Los Angeles supermarket, police investigators say.

Police said the gunman, Ronald Berryman, 37, whose address was not known, barricaded himself in the market office with the store's assistant manager for several hours before both were found dead Thursday.

The gunman forced Claudio Santi to relay responses to police attempting to communicate with him and said he wanted a helicopter. However, two gunshots were heard from inside Ralph's market on Vermont Avenue and 3rd Street shortly before a helicopter landed near the market, officials said.

The bodies of the two men were found by police officers who fired tear gas and then entered cautiously at 8:50 p.m., an hour and 45 minutes after the gunshots were heard.

Ramparts Division Officer Robert Arellano said a a psychologist was at the scene with a police negotiating team during the stalemate. One officer outside the store described the robber as "psychologically disturbed." Police said he described himself as a loser.

Inside the market, police found a box with wires and toggle switches and a police bomb squad was summoned to investigate.

"It was a phony," said Officer Gene Akesson. "It was a bunch of highway flares wrapped together."

The incident began about 2:30 p.m. when the man forced Santi into a mezzanine office, apparently intending to rob a safe.

Arellano said another employee summoned police by tripping a silent alarm. Officers arrived and evacuated some 200 shoppers from the busy market while the gunman and his hostage remained holed up in the mezzanine office.

Special weapons officers were stationed around the building and on the roof. Shortly after they heard the gunshots, a police helicopter was dispatched to the scene.

Midland man injured in accident

George Leon Mauzy, of No. 1 Bentley Court, was treated at Midland Memorial Hospital after he was involved in a one-car accident at 3:41 p.m. Thursday.

Mauzy was listed in satisfactory condition in MMH this morning.

According to police reports, Mauzy was westbound in the 1100 block of West Scharbauer Drive when he lost control of his vehicle, became airborne and landed in a ditch 241 feet from where his vehicle left the roadway.

At 6:54 p.m. Thursday, another accident occurred in the 1100 block of West Scharbauer.

Carlos Urquides was westbound on his motorcycle, when he failed to make a curve, officers said. The motorcycle struck the curb and fell over. Urquides was taken to Midland Memorial emergency room, where he was treated and released.

Two more Thursday accidents started off the new year with minor injuries.

Terry Lynn Darden of San Angelo and Patrick Kirk Jehring of Route 5 Box 701 were both southbound on Holiday Hill Road when their vehicles collided at 7:42 p.m.

Injured was Atene Allen of San Angelo, a passenger in Darden's vehicle. She refused treatment at the scene.

Brad Lyndell Davis, 4233 Princeton Ave., also refused treatment after his vehicle was involved in a collision with one driven by Joseph Benjamin Cockrell of Waco.

Reports said both vehicles were southbound in the 400 block of Andrews Highway when the collision occurred at 3 p.m. Thursday.

Police, Fire Roundup

Firemen Thursday responded to a house fire late Thursday in which heavy damage was done to a dryer and the house suffered slight smoke damage.

The house at 3601 Roosevelt Ave. caught fire shortly before 11:53 p.m. Thursday. It was occupied by Arnold S. Phillips.

The fire apparently was caused by an electrical short in the dryer.

At 6:18 a.m. Thursday, firemen were sent to a grass fire at Mineola Street and Ohio Avenue. When they arrived, however, they discovered that the fire was not a grass fire. A man had started a small fire to keep warm. There was no damage.

Other fire calls included three dumpster fires, a trash fire and a false alarm.

The ambulance responded on four medical runs and two accidents with injuries.

Local-service airlines record safest year

WSHINGTON (AP) — The year just ended was the afest one in history for America's local-service, trur and flag airlines, as measured by the number of fai accidents and deaths, the government says.

Intll of 1980, those airlines had one fatal accident in wich 13 persons were killed, according to figures pubshed Thursday by the Federal Aviation Administrtion.

Te FAA figures cover the scheduled domestic airlies that are certified by the Civil Aeronautics Boad. Those serving short distances are known as locaservice operators, those with longer domestic rous are called trunk carriers and those with intnational flights are flag carriers.

Te record for 1980 involving the three types of carers is the best since 1933, when 17 deaths were recded, and for fatal accidents since 1928, when oneuch crash was recorded, the agency said. It is a shap decline from 1979, when an American Airlines DC0 crashed in Chicago on May 5, killing 271 perns aboard the plane and two on the ground. The tot of fatalities that year was 353, it said.

"his is a record of which the airlines and the FAA carjustly be proud," said FAA Administrator Laghorne M. Bond in a statement accompanying theigures. "But we must guard against complacency.Our goal must continue to be the complete elimnation of accidents."

Te only fatal accident in 1980 occurred June 12 nea Valley, Neb., when a twin-turboprop Swearingen Metroliner operated by Air Wisconsin lost power in oth engines while flying in a severe thunderstom.

Te agency reported that flag and trunk carriers hav gone 14 months without a fatal crash. The most recnt accident where lives were lost for these carers was in Mexico City on Oct. 31, 1979, when a Wdern Airlines DC-10 skidded off a runway that wa closed for repairs and slammed into a storage buding. Seventy of 87 persons on board and one on thground were killed.

Te 14 months represent the second-longest stch without a loss of life in the history of modern avition. The only longer period was an 18-month spa between February 1964 and August 1965.

Te FAA observed that 1980 was the first full caindar year in which there was no fatal crash involving a large jetliner.

I agency computation, the airlines flew some 250 bilon passenger miles — enough to take every person in the country on a flight of more than 1,00 miles.

The agency also released figures in several othe categories:

—For commuter airlines, whose routes are no certified by the Civil Aeronautics board, the numbe of persons killed in 1980 was 25 in seven accidents compared with the previous year's 69 in 13 acci dents.

—For supplemental, or non-scheduled, airlines there was one death, when a cargo plane struck an killed a parachutist.

Welfare boss refuses pay

BURRILLVILLE, R.I. (AP) — John Nolan Jr. says he doesn't work hard enough to be paid and has refused to accept his salary as town welfare direc tor.

It wasn't a sudden change of heart that caused Nolan, a retired steamfitter, to turn back his first two biweekly paychecks of about $415 each.

Nolan was elected to the job in November after promising to accept only $1,000 of the $10,000 allocated for the welfare director's salary. He believes the job should be made part-time or eliminated.

Brzezinski criticized anew

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — U.S. Ambassador Donald F. McHenry has criticized Zbigniew Brzezinski for assuming too big a role in foreign policy. It was the second attack on the national security adviser this week by an official of the outgoing Carter administration.

"You can have only one secretary of state," McHenry said in an interview Wednesday with The Associated Press. He said Brzezinski spoke out when he "shouldn't have" and sent "mixed signals" on the Carter administration's foreign policy.

The comments by McHenry, whose foreign policy positions have been identified closely with those of Vance, apparently reflect some State Department unhappiness with Brzezinski's interpretation of his role.

When asked to discuss reasons for Carter's defeat in the Nov. 4 presidential election, McHenry said one of the problems was "Brzezinski, who shouldn't have been speaking."

On Tuesday, in an article in the February issue of Playboy magazine, Hodding Carter III, who served as press secretary to former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, also criticized Brzezinski, characterizing him as a "second-rate thinker."

Hodding Carter compared Brzezinski to a "rat terrier" who would "begin nipping at Vance's ankles" the moment the former secretary articulated a policy decision.

Brzezinski's spokesman said Tuesday that the national security adviser had no comment on Hodding Carter's article and neither Brzezinski nor the spokesman could be reached for reaction to the latest criticism from McHenry.

Turning to the incoming Reagan administration, McHenry conceded he knew very little about Secretary of State-designate Alexander M. Haig Jr. "He is, however, identified with a school of thought and has had very little experience with areas outside of Europe and Southeast Asia," McHenry said.

Referring to the president-elect's foreign policy advisers, McHenry expressed concern about what he called "globalists," or people who view the world from Cold War era perspectives and fail to give proper weight to social, political and economic problems in developing nations.

McHenry said black Africans are concerned that the incoming administration may be less sympathetic than Carter's. Some Carter administration critics claim it was too "Third World oriented," citing in particular McHenry and his predecessor, Andrew Young, who are black.

McHenry, whose resignation as chief delegate to the United Nations takes effect Jan. 19, said he thought Washington was slowing its Middle East peace effort by refusing to deal directly with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"I personally believe that you can never solve a problem by refusing to talk with those whose position or actions will have an important bearing on the solution to the question," he said.

McHenry, 44, succeeded Young in September 1979, after the latter had an unauthorized meeting with a representative of the PLO. In contrast to Young, McHenry, a foreign service veteran, has gained a reputation for prudence and restraint.

Carter, Reagan New Year's messages stress prosperity

By The Associated Press

In separate New Year's messages, the president and the president-to-be say their fondest hope in 1981 is for peace and prosperity for Americans.

President-elect Ronald Reagan wished Americans "a year of health, happiness and ... peace" in a New Year's Day greeting taped for NBC-TV and aired Thursday during the network's coverage of the Tournament of Roses Parade in Pasadena, Calif. He said the nation can solve its problems "as we've solved them for 200 years."

"We just have to do it together," Reagan said.

President Carter had much the same thought for reporters who asked him Thursday what his resolutions for the new year would be.

"To have a good transition and try to turn over the nation and the government in good condition and just pray that we will continue to have peace and prosperity for the American people," he said before leaving the White House for New Orleans.

Carter flew to New Orleans to watch his home-state University of Georgia football team defeat the University of Notre Dame 17-10 in the Sugar Bowl.

En route to the game, the president stopped off in Marietta, Ga., to pick up about 20 of his Georgia friends, including Gov. George Busbee, former budget director Bert Lance, former attorney General Griffin Bell, adviser Charles Kirbo and sportsman-broadcast magnate Ted Turner.

A White House spokesman in Washington said the Georgians were "traveling as the president's guests" and would not be billed for the flight aboard Air Force One.

Carter and his party watched from a private, glassed-in suite high above the playing field of the New Orleans Superdome.

Air Force One later returned the president's guests to Marietta, and then took Carter back to Washington.

A continent away, Reagan was winding up a two-day vacation in the desert near Palm Springs, Calif., with a private dinner at the Eldorado Country Club, where President Dwight D. Eisenhower spent his winter vacations after leaving office.

About 40 persons attended the dinner, including comedian Bob Hope, Reagan's aides said.

The president-elect was returning today to his home in the Pacific Palisades section of Los Angeles, where aides said he will spend the weekend reviewing potential appointments and preparing for his meeting next week in Juarez, Mexico with President Jose Lopez Portillo.

31 die in New Year's fires

By The Associated Press

Authorities today were investigating reports that a problem with the 911 emergency telephone system in New Brunswick, N.J., kept firefighters from responding quickly to a blaze that killed four children and three adults. The victims were among 31 people who died in fires in nine states on New Year's Day.

In other major fires, a man, a woman and three children were killed in a mobile home fire in Kingsbury, N.Y. In Readfield, Maine, a man and three boys died in a fire blamed on a wood-burning stove.

Sixteen-year-old Howard Foster Jr., who lived next door to the gutted three-story house in New Brunswick, said he tried three times to call the emergency number before his mother got through.

Police Capt. George Seamon said he could think of no reason for the delay and would investigate. Fire Chief Leo Harkins said firefighters from a station house two blocks away were at the scene within one minute of the report and found flames shooting from the house.

The bodies of five of the victims — a mother, her three children and her nephew, ages 1 to 4 — were discovered huddled around a couch.

"Children this age would run to an adult. If they were a little older, they would know to run out of the building," Harkins said.

In Readfield, Charlene Cain returned from her job as a waitress at about 2 a.m. Thursday to find her one-story, wood-frame house on fire, officials said.

She summoned firefighters, but they could not save her three sons and a man who lived with the family. All four victims apparently woke up and attempted to escape, but were blocked by fire at both of the home's doors, said state fire investigator Charles Hopper.

In Kingsbury, authorities said a wall was ignited by a candle left burning on a table.

Careless cigarette smoking was blamed for a pre-dawn apartment fire in Brooklyn, N.Y., that killed a 90-year-old woman and her 56-year-old son. Not far away, a fire broke out a few hours later and took the life of a 78-year-old woman. The cause was not known.

A top priority

Jimmy Carter's mistakes in aling with Mexico and the na-ons of Central and South Ameri- now are fostering some nasty percussions. The failure of the arter administration to adopt a olicy of stabilization in Central nd South America cannot be nied.

Look at what's happening now. exican President Jose Lopez rtillo has announced plans for a astic modernization of that untry's military forces, includ- a buildup of short-range mis-les and the purchase of sophisti-ted jet fighter planes.

Aggression isn't on Lopez Por-llo's mind. Rather, what he is ncerned with is the chaos and nseless violence taking place in any of the nations to the south of exico's border, notably El Sal-dor and Nicaragua.

With that violence only an m's length away and Mexico w developing oil fields in its uthern portion, the possibility of rrorist attacks becomes ever eater.

Lopez Portillo's concern is jus-fied. He does not want to see his tion undergo the violence and turmoil now being experienced in the other nations to the south of Mexico.

The Carter administration, seemingly oblivious to the internal threat facing the nations of South and Central America, ignored the obvious and now the bill is coming due.

Ronald Reagan should not repeat the mistakes of Jimmy Carter. The importance of Mexico to the stability of the entire Western Hemisphere cannot be overemphasized.

It's probably too late to bring stability to El Salvador and Nicaragua. The United States unfortunately has failed to maintain its relationship with those nations or even to enhance that relationship.

It isn't too late with Mexico, though. President-elect Reagan should include as one of his top priorities the task of improving the relationship between the United States and Mexico and, if possible, the other nations of the Western Hemisphere.

In this day and age it certainly pays to maintain good relations with your neighbors.

Trade picture improves

Nobody is claiming that the merican trade woes have disap-ared forever. The nation's auto-akers and manufacturers pro-ucing other goods vulnerable to eavy foreign competition would rotest vehemently.

But the balance of payments ex-hanged with our trading part-ers abroad is expected to shift is year to give the United States s first surplus since 1976.

Thanks primarily to reduced emand for foreign oil, the third-uarter surplus of almost $5 bil-on wiped out deficits during the rst two quarters of 1980, virtual-assuring a surplus for the entire ear.

The measure of goods, services, oreign aid, loans to foreigners, e movement of gold and pay-ents to Americans living abroad perhaps the most promising indication that the U.S. dollar is due for a revival.

While recession and inflation abroad could curtail U.S. exports, the evidence that energy conservation efforts are taking hold is encouraging.

Dependence on oil from overseas is at the root of our economic problems, along with, of course, the deficit-spending habit of Congress. Continued determination to limit the use of imported oil not only can brighten the nation's energy outlook, but stimulate a return to economic health.

BIBLE VERSE

Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of hand to do it. Say not unto thy neighbor, Go, and come again, and tomorrow I will give; when thou hast it by thee. Prov. 3:27,18.

CHARLIE REESE

John Lennon's followers will keep his memory alive

On the night John Lennon was shot to death, Lisa, a pretty convenience store clerk, hopped onto her 10-speed and went home to tell her roommate. He was broken up by the news and cried.

Such reactions are difficult for non-fans to understand. Some people seem even to resent it, as if it is unfair for others to care about people they don't care about or care as much about.

I didn't care so much about Lennon or the other Beatles, but it's OK with me that so many people did and do. Part of the caring, of course, is just association.

When you follow a public figure's career for a long time, you begin to associate yourself with his life, and when his life ends, it's a part of your life that's over too. On the whole, familiarity more often breeds affection than contempt.

It's true that the reports of his death were greatly exaggerated. That is the nature of the news business, which measures importance very often by numbers. If a hangnail developed a large following, the press would report its demise.

In the age of mass communications and superhype, it is relatively easy to develop large followings, and so it becomes relatively more difficult to assess the followed's true talent and contribution.

I'm told by people who know music that Lennon was a great lyricist, and I know the Beatles' music added something to the rock 'n' roll sound. I think it improved it and, heaven knows, rock 'n' roll can stand a lot of improvement.

Charley Reese

What's interesting about people like Lennon is how other people use them. They use them when they are alive, and then they use them when they die. I wonder how many people in the gun-control crowd who have seized upon his death for yet another run at the Bill of Rights ever even listened to the Beatles.

I am against gun control, of course, and for nut control. I think it's primitive to blame inanimate objects for functioning mechanically the way they are designed to function.

Handguns are made to kill people. The one that killed Lennon worked. What didn't work was Lennon's security system, if he had one, the gunman's head and the shrinks who turned the gunman loose.

Besides, it's stupid in a nuclear age to worry about 8,000 to 10,000 people who get bumped off each year with handguns. If the death rate is to be the criterion for social action, then we should work on cars first.

As a matter of fact, it's stupid to get excited by handguns and not get excited about booze and other drugs that play a prominent role in a huge percentage of murders and suicides.

But Lennon is beyond all of this garbage, and that's good. He will be of use to people for a good long time, though, and a lot of them will make as much money on him dead as some did when he was alive.

We have developed a real vulture industry in this country. First thing you know, someone will start selling futures in memorabilia before a celebrity dies.

What's important, though, is that people like Lisa and her roommate will remember the music and the good times they had when they first heard it, and they will even look back on his death because that also became a milestone in their lives.

Maybe one day the roommate will say, "Do you remember when John Lennon was killed and you rode your 10-speed back home to tell me?" And the memory of the evening will come back and be savored because life, even its bitter moments, has a sweetness worth remembering.

WASHINGTON MRRY-GO-ROUND

Soviets' Afghan invasion hurting opium trade

WASHINGTON — There's a silver lining to the dark cloud of Soviet aggression in Afghanistan: Afghan opium farmers have been too busy fighting the Russian invaders to harvest their crops.

So however unhappy the State Department is over the Kremlin's move into Afghanistan, another federal agency, the Drug Enforcement Administration, is delighted that the Russians have interfered with the annual Afghan opium harvest.

"Afghanistan traditionally has been a significant producer of illicit opium and hashish in Southwest Asia," a classified DEA report on Afghanistan and narcotics begins. "Until the Soviet invasion in late 1979, Afghanistan also served as a major transit area for Southwest Asia narcotics destined for Western markets."

The secret report, seen by my associate Dale Van Atta, says that opium was the principal crop grown in remote areas of Afghanistan, concentrated on the Afghan-Pakistani border. It was traditionally purchased from the Afghan farmers by middlemen who moved it to stockpiles and brokerage areas in the northwest frontier province of Pakistan.

By truck or camel caravan, the opium dealers also moved the farmers' crops westward to the consumer market in Iran.

But the Soviets and their Afghan puppets, for all their other faults, do not encourage the production of opium poppies. In fact, the curtailment of opium growing by the Marxist coup of Nur Mohammed Taraki in April 1978 may have been as responsible as the regime's atheistic doctrines for the native rebellion by devout Moslem tribesmen — who also grew opium poppies.

Jack Anderson

The DEA report explains that many Moslem tribesmen in the opium-growing area of Afghanistan were too busy fighting the Marxists to take care of their fields, while others who normally would have worked in the fields fled to Pakistan to avoid the fighting.

This combination of holy war and "draft-dodging" has apparently continued through successive Soviet-backed regimes in Afghanistan. And the Kabul government's response has tightened up drug traffic control, more for political reasons than any particular distaste for narcotics trade. Dope smugglers are by their nature anti-government; therefore, any government hoping to take control of Afghanistan considers the drug dealers enemies of the state.

Even before the Russians moved in to take direct control of their badly run satellite in late 1979, the Afghan military had established checkpoints to intercept arms and supplies for insurgent tribesmen. And the checkpoints also put a crimp in the drug traffic.

Since the Russians took over the country, "Soviet forces have taken over anti-smuggling operations from the Afghan nationals as part of overall military operations against the insurgents," the DEA report states. And the Russians, for whatever motives, are succeeding in their crackdown.

Because of the Soviet invasion, last year's opium crop was presumed to be partially destroyed "as Soviet air and ground forces pursued the insurgents into the tribal territories," the DEA reported, adding: "Similarly, much of the manpower required to harvest this crop was either preoccupied with fighting, became refugees or was killed in battle."

Furthermore, the DEA predicts: "Should the Soviet-Afghan conflict with the insurgents intensify, it could adversely affect both the planting and the size of the 1980-1981 opium poppy crop, and thereby reduce the amount of opium available on the open market."

SECOND TEAM?: Former Vietnam prisoners-of-war are complaining that the Marine Corps is not making a maximum effort to convict suspected turncoat Robert Garwood of collaborating with the North Vietnamese.

They point out that while the Marines' prosecution team is diligent and dedicated, it is no match professionally for Garwood's topflight trial lawyers and researchers, who show up at the Camp Lejeune courtroom and law library in platoon strength.

The Vietnam vets, who insist that Garwood lived high as a collaborator and informant while they suffered in POW camps, wonder why the Defense Department didn't bring in its best legal talent to prosecute him.

Unofficial Marine sources, in turn, insist that the prosecution team is "highly competent."

●

MEOW!: Ronald Reagan's transition-team captain for the Tennessee Valley Authority, Robert Sansom, was dealt a sharp blow by Congress last year. A new law will keep Sansom's firm, the Virginia Vermiculite Co., from strip-mining 14,000 acres of a National Historic Landmark at Green Springs, Va., for vermiculite, a granular substance that is used for potting soil and cat litter.

●

BACK TO BASICS: While Congress never tires of spending money for glamorous new military weapons like intercontinental missiles and airplanes that cost $26 million apiece, it has a strange reluctance to replace such mundane equipment as Jeeps and trucks. Many of the armed services' ground vehicles are five years older than the soldiers who drive them.

Half the Marine Corps' vehicles, for example, are not usable, and in the case of some classes of large vehicles, every one is broken and awaiting repair.

INSIDE REPORT:

Van Cleave choice would usher in a new SALT philosophy

By ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — The confidential ecommendation to President-elect eagan for "a pause" in new SALT lks, coupled with the possibility of efense strategist William Van leave becoming Reagan's arms-con-ol negotiator, points to a decisive reak with arms control philosophy at any SALT treaty is a good SALT reaty.

The unpublicized proposal for Rea-an to go slow in new super-power uclear arms talks came 10 days ago om the transition team turned lose the Arms Control and Disarma-ent Agency (ACDA). Now required eading by Reagan's national securi-strategists, the report is described y those who have studied it as "ex-ctly what the president-elect ants."

It espouses full linkage, advocates omplete disclosure of widely-alleged oviet violations of past agreements nd insists that the rebuilding of U.S. ilitary strength to provide a "mar-in of safety" should precede a new ALT treaty. That happens to coin-ide with arms control philosophies ng held by Van Cleave, the brilliant onoclast whose undiplomatic can-or has cost him the Reagan adminis-ration posts he most wanted: the econd or third top Pentagon job nder Defense Secretary Caspar einburger. During the presidential ampaign, Van Cleave was Reagan's rincipal adviser on arms control, a olicy area intimately known to the niversity of Southern California rofessor.

Weinburger and other top-level Reaganites have found abrasive about Van Cleave both during the campaign and more recently in the post-election transition could be his greatest asset as chief American negotiator with stoney-faced Soviet bargain-hunters in the Kremlin. "Bill as our nuclear arms negotiator," a Reagan insider privately remarked, "would be exactly right in sending Moscow the message that Reagan is one president who won't be rolled over on SALT."

Evans — Novak

Van Cleave was a member of the 1971-1972 arms control negotiating team but resigned before the Nixon administration accepted and signed SALT I in Moscow in 1972. But in testimony before a Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. Henry M. Jackson, he warned that the treaty contained weaknesses that might prove dangerous in the future — a prophecy that has come all too true in the past eight years.

Van Cleave also served on Team B, the famous group of outside experts appointed in 1976 by then-Central Intelligence Director George Bush as a check on the CIA's own expert assessment of U.S. and Soviet military strength.

Conceivably Van Cleave, whose reputation for intellectual honesty emerged unscathed from his battles with Weinburger and other Reagan insiders, might decide that being chief arms control negotiator is a challenge not large enough for him. Reagan agents sounding him out on the prospect think he can be won over, mainly with the argument that no one else could have as much symbolic impact on Moscow.

An equal argument might be found in the strong tone of the ACDA transition team's report to the president-elect and the fact that it is having an enthusiastic reception by senior Reagan advisers. The team was headed by James Malone, ACDA's general counsel during the Nixon-Ford administration. Its central proposal: that until completion of a "thorough, inter-agency reassessment of all arms control and national security strategy ... a pause in all arms control negotiations" is essential.

If as expected that becomes the president-elect's policy, the Reagan administration would follow an arms control strategy exactly opposite that of Jimmy Carter four years ago. Carter rushed into SALT talks with Moscow, but when he got an agreement two-and-a-half years later opposition ran so high that he did not even try to push it to a vote in the Senate.

Reagan's transition team warns against "unilateral arms reductions" by the U.S. in hopes of enticing Soviet reciprocity. That is a deliberate reminder of the Alice-in-Wonderland arms-control theory of the Carter administration during its blinkered days when Carter claimed the West no longer need have an "inordinate fear" of communism. The report's strongest argument for going slow is that SALT has become "a permanent excuse for Western failure to come to grips with the Soviet military challenge," a dictum Van Cleave himself might have written.

The shrewd move to confront the Soviets with the cold-steel will and determination of Bill Van Cleave as chief American SALT negotiator could help put arms control, which is clearly an important aspect of the super-power relationship, into proper perspective after 10 years of dangerous experimentation.

Senate critics who would try to shoot down Van Cleave would soon learn this fact: Reagan wants a new SALT treaty, but a treaty that is good, not bad or only fair, for the U.S. With Van Cleave as his negotiator, he would not lose any sleep worrying.

In an expert game, it is sometimes possible to draw fine inferences. In this hand from a major team championship, declarer took an anti-percentage line to make his contract.

The only eccentricity in the auction was North's one diamond opening bid. That was the result of his using a forcing one club system. Thereafter, the bidding was normal, but the final contract of four spades needed a bit of luck. Note that South's rebid of three diamonds was forcing.

West led the king of clubs. Declarer ducked and West continued with the queen. Declarer won the ace, cashed the king of spades and lost a heart finesse to East. Back came a club to West's ten and West exited with a heart. Declarer had to make the rest, and his chances were bleak, at best!

The queen of diamonds was run, which held, followed by the jack of diamonds, which also won as West followed with the ten. Now declarer led a trump, but instead of finessing the jack, the percentage play, he rose with the ace to fell the queen.

After drawing the last trump, it was a simple matter to cash the ace of diamonds and ruff a diamond in dummy, and the game was in the bag.

What tipped declarer off to avoid the spade finesse? No, he had not gotten a glimpse of one of the defender's hands — the clue was in the play of the cards.

East, had he so desired, could have prevented declarer from taking the spade finesse. All he had to do was cover the second diamond honor. When East did not do so, declarer deduced that East wanted him to take the trump finesse. If that's what East wanted, it had to be wrong to do so. So declarer played for the drop and his reasoning was vindicated.

Knifemaker strives to keep art alive

By LINDA DUFFIELD
Associated Press Writer

MIDDLETOWN, Md. (AP) — He's described in some quarters as the most celebrated of all American knifemakers. But William F. Moran appears more concerned with his efforts to ensure that bladesmithing will not become a lost art.

He labors at knifemaking in a tiny workshop along a rural road near this Frederick County community, continuing the work he became interested in when he was a boy on his father's farm.

"My father had a dairy farm, and we, like everybody else, had a forge on the farm," said the 55-year-old Moran. "When I was just a kid I started making knives. After a while, I found I could make a better blade than one you could buy."

Since giving up farming to go into the knifemaking business full time 20 years ago, Moran has parlayed a youthful hobby into a business so successful that he is no longer accepting orders for his work.

He has, he said, a "backlog of 20 years or more" for orders for his custom-made blades, and he expects that just filling those will take "the rest of my life."

His hand-tempered, hand-forged blades sell at about $300 on the low end, and can go as high as $5,000 — the price he got sight-unseen from a collector for a knife forged from a meteorite.

Although the worth of blades such as Moran's is now appreciated, there was a long period when craftsmen who could do his type of work were few and far between.

"Back when I started, it had been sort of a forgotten art," noted Moran. "One of the first things that went under during the Industrial Revolution in this country was knife-making. It was just totally forgotten."

But Moran, and a handful of others, have taken steps to make sure that will never happen again.

About four years ago, he and two other men who forged blades began the American Bladesmith Society, an organization dedicated to passing along the art of knife forging to a younger generation.

The society holds seminars and teaching sessions, with some measure of success.

"The thing I am really more proud of than anything else is the American Bladesmith Society," said Moran. "That (society) has really brought back interest in the forged blade."

Although the society is still a small organization, Moran noted "It has grown quite well and there is no question that the forged blade will always be around."

Although Moran's knives don't go for a song, it's the collector of his blades who stands to make the real profit.

A Damascus Steel dagger with ivory handle which he crafted sold in 1978 for under $3,000. Less than two years later, the dagger's estimated market value has more than doubled, to $6,000.

"Investors are investing in knives like they do in paintings and things like that," explained Moran.

And Moran, whose early blades were utility knives for hunting or combat, seems to find that a bit ironic. He pointed out that his "blue chip" knives have been collectors' items for about 10 years, but he listed them in a catalog as long ago as 20 years.

His blades are finished off with a buffing stage which gives them a mirror-like finish. And if you doubt their sharpness, Moran will demonstrate by taking a knife and shaving off hairs on his arm without touching the blade to skin.

Despite the prices of his blades, Moran said those who think he makes a lot of money from his work are wrong. He can spend up to two months fashioning a single blade, and he has the overhead of his shop, equipment and supplies.

He also makes the sheathes which hold his knives, hand stitching the leather ones and crafting others from maple containing grooves which are inlaid with silver wire, an item he said is increasing in cost.

Legislators strive to scrap 55 mph limit

DENVER (AP) — Buoyed by support from the Republican Party platform, legislators in Colorado and other Western states are revving up for an effort to scrap the 55 mph speed limit on highways.

Previous attempts to abolish the lower speed limit have been stymied by fears that the federal government would cut off millions of dollars in highway construction funds.

But the election of Ronald Reagan, coupled with a clause in the GOP platform saying states should set their own speed limits, has given new hope to foes of the 55 mph limit.

Officials of Reagan's transportation transition team have said they favor such a policy.

"The Republican platform says this is a states' rights issue," said state Rep. Bob Stephenson, a Republican who is the principal sponsor of a bill filed this week to change Colorado's maximum speed limit to 70 mph.

"I want to see if the federal government, or the president, will do what the platform said they'd do," Stephenson said Tuesday.

Congress enacted the 55 mph limit in 1975 to conserve energy and reduce highway accidents. States are responsible for enforcing the limit and if they do not do so, they face the loss of federal highway money.

Campaigns against the 55 mph limit are building in some Western states, where sentiment against the limit has run high because of the long distances which many motorists travel on flat and uncrowded highways. In addition, some question whether the need to conserve energy is real or contrived by oil companies.

A measure repealing the 55 mph speed limit progressed part way through the Wyoming Legislature in 1979, and a bill has been prefiled for the upcoming session that would raise the limit to 75 on four-lane divided highways and 65 on others.

Arizona Rep. Pete Corpstein said he and a majority of his colleagues favor raising the speed limit but do not want to risk a loss of highway funds. He would prefer that Congress follow the recommendation of the transition team and refer the matter to the states to handle as they wish.

Officials of the Colorado Highway Department say repeal of the 55 mph limit would have two adverse consequences: a cutoff of some $150 million in federal highway funding and a likely increase in both the number and severity of traffic accidents.

Col. C. Wayne Keith, chief of the state patrol, estimated that the lower speed limit has saved more than 600 lives in Colorado during the seven years it has been in effect.

Shortage of holes endangering birds

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — A shortage of abandoned woodpecker holes has bird fans singing the blues.

Bluebirds like to nest in the holes. But the cutting of timber and the use of metal utility posts has cut into the number of holes, officials say.

The Dixie Chapter of the Telephone Pioneers of America, a civic group, is planning to start early next year erecting 130 bluebird nesting boxes along Interstate 20 between the South Carolina line and Atlanta.

"The bluebirds have been on the endangered species list for years, but now they are making a comeback, we think partly because of people erecting the nesting boxes," said San Templeton, president of the Pioneer's Dixie chapter, located in North Augusta, S.C.

"Bluebirds generally are migratory birds and they usually come through Georgia in February," he said. "They will stake out a box and nest sometimes as many as five times by the end of the summer. They usually lay three to five eggs at a time. Some of them stay permanently."

Hu in charge of Chinese Party

PEKING (AP) — General Secretary Hu Yaobang today appeared to be clearly in charge of the 38 million-member Chinese Communist Party, effectively replacing Chairman Hua Guofeng who is expected to resign.

Hua apparently has been stripped of his powers as chairman and even has given up control of the party's military commission to his old rival, Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping, according to diplomatic sources.

For the time being, however, Hua retains his title. A Foreign Ministry spokesman said, "Hua Guofeng still is chairman of the Central Committeee of the Chinese Communist Party."

In answer to a journalist's question, the spokesman said Hua is in Peking but he gave no further information on Hua's status.

All Chinese newspapers gave prominent display to the ascendancy of Hu Yaobang, who presided over a major New Year's party by the Central Committee.

Hu, 67, is an old ally of strongman Deng Xiaoping and currently heads the powerful party secretariat which handles day-to-day party business.

His appearance as the spokesman of the party confirmed reports of the political demise of Hua, who has not been seen in public for 36 days. Although nominally the chairman, Hua was not even mentioned in the long list of those attending the New Year's celebration.

Hua inherited the chairmanship from the late Mao Tse-tung but he recently has been severely criticized for supporting many of Mao's discredited "leftist" ideas. He also is seen as an obstacle to Deng's pragmatic modernization drive.

Officials declined comment on why Hua was conspicuously absent from the celebration. Diplomatic observers said the New Year's party was the ideal time for Chinese leaders to dispel rumors about Hua being in political hot water, but they chose to keep him under wraps.

Kremlin warns Polish labor movement

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's newly independent labor movement got a stiff warning from the Soviet Union not to press for more reforms that could lead to "chaos in the economy." A ranking U.S. congressman said a Soviet thrust into Poland could be just weeks away.

The official Tass news agency said "anti-socialist" forces were using the slogans of Solidarity, Poland's biggest independent union, to thwart efforts by the Communist Party and government to "normalize the situation" in Poland.

The Tass commentary Thursday said an effort was under way in Poland to fashion Solidarity into a political counterbalance to "official organs of power," a move that would threaten the absolute dominance of the party.

"The circles opposed to the Polish United Workers Party are making through the channels of 'Solidarity' the obviously provocative demands whose implementation would lead to the deepening of disproportions in the Polish economy and to the growth of tension in the home market," the commentary said.

"The disruption of the working rhythm leads to the aggravation of irregularities in the supply of consumer goods to the population," it said. "The anti-socialist forces are trying to carry the matters to the creation of chaos in the economy, hoping to use this in their subversive aims."

The commentary apparently attempted to fix the blame for Poland's continuing shortages of food, especially meat and other staples which prompted a government plan for full-scale rationing in February.

Solidarity was formed in the wake of a nationwide wave of labor unrest that began July 2 when the government announced an end to subsidies that sent meat prices soaring. Major strikes ended Aug. 31 when the government agreed to formation of the independent unions — a move unprecedented in the Soviet bloc where unions are under party control — and promised other reforms.

Labor unrest has virtually subsided since reports of a massive buildup of Soviet troops on Poland's borders raised fears of military intervention in early December.

Father didn't know best, says Chapin

By DENNIS MCLELLAN

IRVINE, Calif. — Posing for a family portrait with her two children in front of their Irvine house, Lauren Chapin only vaguely resembles Kathy Anderson, the cherub-faced younger daughter she played in "Father Knows Best."

The baby fat long ago disappeared from her slim 5-foot-2 figure and, at 35, laugh lines radiate from her eyes. Chapin gives the impression she's done a lot of living — and she has.

The family portrait also illustrates just how far Lauren Chapin's Irvine of the '80s is from Kathy Anderson's Springfield of the '50s.

The car parked in the driveway is a Japanese economy model, not a Detroit-made family station wagon. The house is look-alike ranch-style tract, not custom two-story colonial with white picket fence. And it's rented, not owned.

Conspicuously absent from the picture is the warm and understanding father figure available to solve any family crisis with his sage advice.

In the Chapin single-parent household, it's mother who knows best.

Chapin's home life bears little resemblance to the idealistic portrayal of the "typical" all-American middle-class family in "Father Knows Best." But then it always did.

Even while making the series, her own parents were divorced. And, she says, she rarely got along with her mother, who was an alcoholic.

After the series ended in 1960, Chapin led the kind of life that would have appalled Jim and Margaret Anderson, her TV parents.

She dropped out of high school in her junior year, was married at 16 and separated from her husband within two years. They divorced five years later.

At 18, she says, she started taking drugs, eventually becoming addicted to heroin. She kicked the habit in 1970 after successfully completing a year-long drug rehabilitation program.

Two more marriages, which she describes as "illegal" followed. The second marriage was annulled when she discovered her husband had not received a previous divorce. The third time she was married in Mexico.

But this is all in the past — before her religious involvement — when, she says, "I thought it was all right."

Now, she says with a smile reminiscent of impish Kathy Anderson, "I want to be married, have the piece of paper, the ring on the finger and have a neat partnership. I miss that, so I just keep praying that the Lord will bring the right man to me."

Seated at her kitchen breakfast bar sipping coffee, Chapin appears to relish domesticity.

A pot of black-eyed peas is simmering on the stove and her 2-year-old daughter Summer is in the family room watercoloring with a friend. Matthew, her 7-year-old son, is in school.

Chapin, who acts infrequently, is a part-time teacher for the American Academy of Husband-Coached Childbirth, an organization that teaches the Bradley method of natural childbirth, and works for a brokerage firm.

Teaching the eight-week program in her home, Chapin uses a film made of her dauther's birth as a teaching aid. Ultimately, she says, she'd like to get a degree in nursing and become a midwife or work in pediatrics.

But, more than anything, Chapin seeks the wholesome brand of Anderson family life that is still visible in "Father Knows Best" reruns around the country.

"For the most part, people say that show was one of the best," she says. "It was moralistic, it had everything people are looking for today.

"Jim and Margaret are the loving, warm couple. They taught their children to respect themselves and think for themselves and not let other people handle their problems. I wish today's life was more like the Anderson's life."

Pausing to gaze at her daughter playing in the next room, Chapin muses:

"I want to get the two-story house with the picket fence and the family life," she says. "I want to raise my children that way. I want to know about God and family and love."

A six-month convalescence from viral encephalitis brought about a dramatic change in Chapin's life. She found religion, with the help of her sister-in-law Caroline.

It's from the perspective of a born-again Christian that Chapin, who wears a tiny gold-cross necklace, is writing her autobiography, "Father Didn't Know Best."

"It's about being a child star and the pitfalls that happen with it," she says. "It's not all glorious like everybody says."

"I don't think any child should be a child star," Chapin maintains. "You're 7 and expected to behave as a 40-year-old. A child needs to be a child. There are only a few short years to be free and young and beautiful."

Only rarely does the child want to act, she says adding that show business parents frequently use their children to gain recognition for themselves.

In Chapin's case it was her mother, "a typical movie mother," who pushed her two older brothers and later herself into acting, she says.

Her big break, the role in "Father Knows Best," came in 1954 when she was 8.

Growing up, she didn't think it unusual that she went to the studio every day rather than school and that she associated with actors instead of kids on the block. She had nothing to compare it to, she explains.

By the time she was 11 or 12 she began realizing it wasn't normal to be fawned over every time she walked down the street. "I really wanted the normalcy," she emphasizes. "I didn't want to be the one who was different."

"My mother said I must dress for the public," she recalls. "I said, 'What about me?' There is no you."

Her displeasure with being recognized in public was magnified during her adolescent years.

"When you're a kid and have pimples on your face and you're insecure anyway, it didn't make for good news," she admits. "It made it difficult because you couldn't be normal. Everything you did was under a microscope."

While she enjoyed working with her TV family on the set, life at home was far from harmonious.

"My mother was not one of those loving alcoholics; she was one of those mean witches," Chapin says. "It created a lot of hassles. I thought she was just mean and terrible and she hated me and I hated her."

Years later, after she had overcome her own drug addiction, Chapin realized that her mother, now dead, had been sick.

"Anyone relying on alcohol or drugs has a disability," she observes. "She (her mother) also had TB, and it was tough raising three kids alone. She needed someone to love her."

Chapin is still critical of the education she received while making the series. She was supposed to receive three hours of school on the studio lot each day, she says, "but it was not a consecutive three hours a day. I got five minutes here and 10 minutes there."

If she thought she was short-changed on her education, she also came up short on her earnings from the series. She received only a small part, $19,000, which had been set aside in savings bonds for her. She says her mother spent most of her money on houses, new cars, food and clothing.

"My mother, unfortunately, didn't know how to save; she spent very well," observes Chapin, adding that she fared better than her two actor brothers. They received nothing.

Asked if she'd let her children go into show business, the answer is swift: "Never; absolutely never. I'm a firm believer that when they grow up, if they want to get into show business, I'll help them because they are old enough to know who they are."

After the security of being in the long-running hit TV series ended, Chapin discovered that she was typecast as the "young, innocent, sweet Kathy". Acting jobs were scarce.

Contrary to her TV image as "young, sweet and innocent," Chapin describes herself at the time of her marriage, as "brazen, forward and a strong personality" who henpecked her young husband.

"At 16 I thought I was really mature and very much advanced," she says. Laughing, she adds: "In actuality, I was probably a very spoiled brat."

When acting roles failed to materialize, Chapin found work as an airline stewardess, dog groomer, insurance claims examiner, carhop and cocktail waitress. "You name it and I did it."

During this period, she adds, she also went through "a lot of crazy ways and did a lot of crazy things."

As for her treatment of heroin addiction in 1970, she notes that many of her friends now are dead because of drugs — "and that's scary. I look at myself and feel God must have been on my side."

She later spent several years counseling drug addicts in a Torrance psychiatric hospital.

Three years ago, Chapin and former co-stars, Robert Young, Jane Wyatt, Elinor Donahue and Billy Gray, were reunited for a TV movie, "The Father Knows Best Reunion."

"We had a good time," says Chapin with a smile. "It felt like 20 years had not even gone by and we just fell into the routine.

The exposure helped her get a few acting jobs, most recently a small part in a TV movie, "Scouts Honor."

And while she's currentlyattending an acting workshop, acting appears to be a secondary part of her life. To succeed in television and the movies, she says, "You have to really go out and hustle and I don't. I can't play the game; it's not in me."

AT WIT'S END

Parent training

By ERMA BOMBECK

Everyone at card club the other night was discussing the newest technique of child-rearing called "Parent Effectiveness Training."

What this amounts to is "active listening," which psychiatrists have been doing for years. You just sit there and look wise (play with a letter opener if you wish) and let the kid do all the talking.

If he says, "I threw up today," you just remain expressionless and say, "Do you like throwing up, Gordon?"

"Not much."

"You're saying you prefer something else?"

"I guess so."

"You're not sure?"

"I'm sure."

"Then, you're quite certain about that."

"Sorta."

"You've just expressed doubt again."

"I DON'T LIKE THROWING UP!"

"There is no need to be hostile. No one is going to make you throw up."

"This conversation is dumb."

"Is that what you think, Gordon?"

"I'm going to be sick again."

"You see," Mother smiles, "that's what you wanted all along."

I told the group my husband was ahead of his time. He's been using that technique on me for years, only he calls it DHN — Drive Her Nuts.

I was climbing into bed the other night when I said, "You did deposit your check in the bank today, didn't you?"

"Is that something you want to discuss now?"

"No, I could wait until tomorrow at the bank, but there will be so many people around — lawyers, law enforcement officers, the president of the bank. Don't be patronizing! I wrote a check today for the draperies because we don't have a charge at Bilko's."

"Would you like to have a charge at Bilko's?"

"That's not important. The draperies were on sale and I was lucky to find a triple pair 80 inches long, so I wrote them a check. I didn't have a choice."

"You are saying you feel threatened by this action."

"I am saying unless you deposited that check today I won't need the draperies because where I'm going I won't have a window. Besides, I'm going to be sick!"

"You see," he smiled, turning off the light, "that's what you wanted all along."

UN launches water program

NEW YORK (AP) — The United Nations has launched a 10-year program to provide safe drinking water for everyone.

U.N. experts say a quarter of the earth's 4 billion people now drink dirty water and some 2 billion have no toilet.

It estimates that up to 80 percent of diseases in developing countries could be prevented by clean water and improved sanitation. The cost of this program will be $30 billion annually for the next 10 years.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Getting rid of pet odor

Dear Heloise: I've got the cutest cat but, as will happen sooner or later, he drenched one of my stuffed chairs.

Is there any way of getting that terrible odor out of my favorite sitting place? — R.B. Davis

+ + +

This is one problem all of us have faced at one time or another if we own a pet. House trained though they may be, they get sick or deterred and the inevitable happens.

Be it your carpet, couch, or whatever, as I've said in previous columns, unless you can get to the stain immediately and soak it up before it reaches the underpadding, you're in trouble.

Most stains aren't found until the damage has been done. When this is the case, about the only solution is to mask the smell.

There are various stain removers and deodorizers on the market. Some people write in that they've had real good luck using them, but some remove only the stain, leaving the odor. And if they do remove the odor, after the house has been closed up for awhile, the smell returns.

I feel for you who have experienced this problem, 'cause the only real alternative is to get rid of one's pet, and none of us wants to do that. As we all know, a pet is a member of the family...

One thing I've found that really helps mask that odor, once the stain has been removed, is to put several, and I mean several, fabric softener sheets under the cushion, as well as inside it, if possible.

Poke the sheets in out-of-the-way places where they won't be seen. Their fragrance will penetrate the stuffing of the chair, couch, mattress — whatever. Leave them there for several weeks.

If you catch the accident as soon as it happens, soak it up with paper towels or napkins immediately, then sprinkle baking soda or salt on it to soak up any remaining traces of moisture. If an odor remains, resort to the masking technique.

Hope this helps keep Tabby in your good graces. — Heloise

KIDS 'N SNOW

Dear Heloise: I've never seen this hint for mothers in snowbelt areas, so will pass it along.

Have you ever heard of wristers? They eliminate soggy, wet sleeves when children play in the snow. They've been around for years, as my grandmother made them for me and I've knitted them for my three children (now grown).

Wristers are extra long cuffs pulled over jersey or shirt sleeves under jackets. They make it unnecessary to have long cuffs on mittens which never seem to get back in place once removed and put on again. The shorter mitten cuff is pulled over the wrister which thus remains in place.

I've expanded on the idea and added more length making a thumb hole to keep them from slipping up the arm.

Anyone who knits mittens would have no problem knowing how to make them, and the size depends on the size of the child who'll wear them.

This letter has been a visit with an old friend. — Ethel Brown

+ + +

Thanks for dropping in — you brightened my day! For those readers who don't knit, try cutting off an old tube sock and using the cuff in the same way. — Heloise

LETTER OF LAUGHTER

Dear Heloise: I was told that a good way to warm the bed covers on a cold night was to move your arms and legs rapidly as if running.

Well, nobody warned me not to wear nylon pajamas while doing it!

I jumped in bed and started throwing my arms and legs at breakneck speed as suggested and I looked like a giant sparkler on the Fourth of July!

Good thing my shades were down — my next door neighbor is a volunteer fireman. — Lil

DEAR HELOISE:

I just had to tell you of our way of telling our daughter and her military husband overseas all the news that goes on here at home.

For a couple of dollars you can buy 20 (10-cent) postcards.

Some morning, when the mood is right, sit down and address all of them to the APO overseas address, and add your return address sticker.

Then, everytime something of interest happens or you have something to say, just hurry and write them the new gossip and drop it in the mail.

More than likely, by the end of the month you'll have used up all 20 cards, and look at the savings over those impulsive long distance phone calls during which you can't possibly tell them all the happenings (even if you could think of them all).

But best of all, the kids have mail call almost every day, and that's real love from home. — Marie Scarsella

+ + +

I'll second that! You can get pretty homesick and anxious to hear from home when you're that far away.

Thanks for sharing. — Heloise

DEAR HELOISE: When I roll my hair on brush rollers, I cut squares of nylon net to use as end papers.

It helps tuck in ends easily, and the little picks go right through the netting.

I've been using them for years. — Margie

+ + +

Makes hair rolling go slick as a button. And those squares of nylon net last forever! — Heloise

Would-be pilot achieves her goal

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Brenda Robinson is not only one of the few women to have made inroads into what had previously been a male-dominated military field, but she also holds the distinction of being the first — and only — black female pilot in the U.S. Navy.

"All I ever wanted to do was fly," says the 24-year-old Ensign Robinson of North Wales, Pa., who graduated from Dowling College, Oakdale, N.Y., where she majored in aeronautics.

"I was one of only five women at Dowling pursuing a degree in aeronautics," she says. "By the time I graduated, I had flown solo and earned my private pilot's license."

It wasn't until her senior year in college that she thought about flying military aircraft.

"I had friends in the Air Force, so I checked out the Air Force first," she says. "I was told I would have to spend two years in the Air Force before I could get into flight school.

"The Navy said if I was tough enough to get through their flight school I could fly with them. They issued a challenge that appealed to me." She joined the Navy in November 1978 and began aviation officer candidate school in Florida shortly thereafter.

"The first week was miserable," recalls the soft-spoken Ensign Robinson. "I had trouble eating. I was nervous, but too busy to worry about it. On many occasions I asked myself what I was doing there."

After completing the 16-week course, she received her commission as a Navy officer and went on to primary flight training at Whiting Field, Fla., and to advanced flight training at Corpus Christi, Texas. She was then awarded the wings of a Navy aviator and was certified to fly multi-engine, propeller-driven aircraft.

"Completing flight school was the greatest challenge I have faced," says the 5-foot-4, 120-pound pilot who is now assigned to Fleet Logistics Support Squadron Forty, headquartered in Norfolk.

She flies the C-1A "Trader" aircraft, which can carry eight passengers, 3,500 pounds of cargo or combinations of both. It can also be configured to carry up to three litter patients or to function as a platform for parachute jumpers.

The aircraft's primary mission is that of transporting passengers, mail and high-priority cargo to and from Navy aircraft carriers. Although Ensign Robinson is prevented by law from being assigned to a combat-oriented ship or aviation squadron she is currently undergoing training to qualify her to land the C-1A on the flight deck of an aircraft carrier, one of the most challenging and dangerous flying feats done by Navy aviators.

The unpretentious ensign doesn't enjoy being in the limelight, but would rather be left alone to "get the job done," as she puts it.

"I knew I was doing something unique and I realized I would be a pioneer," says the officer, who claims not to feel any pressure to excel on behalf of her sex and race. "I also knew I would serve as an example. I hope other black women will realize they, too, can do what I've done."

Fish-lover's cookbook is good reading

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

Most cookbooks stand or fall on the quality of the recipes — which is as it should be. But it's nice when they contain something more.

"The Fish-Lovers' Cookbook" by Sheryl and Mel London not only boasts 300 original recipes, but it contains some of the most sprightly writing we have seen in such a work in some time.

For instance, there's the chapter with the provocative title, "How Can Anything That Ugly Taste That Good?" It refers to monkfish, eel, shark and other marine types that would never win a beauty prize but are delicious.

There are also profiles of fishing characters like the two lobstermen from Martha's Vineyard and an affable Maryland crabber.

The authors inject a chilling comment that the fish you buy at the market may well be fresher than the ones you catch by the time you have brought them home and made them ready for the table. This can be avoided, they point out, by cleaning your catch at once, then placing it in an ordinary cooler with a layer of crushed ice on the bottom.

Freshness is the answer to tasty fish, wherever you get them. If you are shopping in the market, be sure that the fish that catches your fancy does not have a strong odor, is clear of eye and has a bright, shiny skin.

The book is a tribute to fish in general. It notes that the oceans of the world are a rich storehouse of minerals, so it follows that denizens of the deep are good sources of the elements our bodies require.

For the diet-conscious, the authors point out that most fish are considerably lower in calories than meat and are also high in protein. Salt is omitted from the recipes, incidentally, on the grounds that it takes from the delicacy of the fish.

There is one sad note. Since pollution has become so prevalent in waters everywhere, the authors decided to omit any recipes for bivalves like oysters, clams, mussels and scallops, since they are usually found near centers of pollution.

This does not include such crustaceans as lobsters, shrimp and crabs, since they live in deeper water.

Here's a recipe the Londons included for sauteed soft-shell crabs.

12 small soft-shell crabs, cleaned
½ cup whole wheat pastry flour
¼ teaspoon cayenne
¼ teaspoon black pepper
½ cup butter
1 small clove garlic, crushed
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon finely minced, fresh parsley

Dredge crabs with flour seasoned with cayenne and pepper. Heat butter in heavy skillet and when hot add crabs. Cook till golden brown on both sides. Place on warm platter. Add garlic to skillet and stir. Add lemon juice. Pour sauce over crabs and sprinkle with parsley. Serves 6. Good with chilled dry white wine.

Sequoyah honored on stamp

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

Sequoyah, the Cherokee Indian scholar who devised a written alphabet for his people, is honored on a new U.S. 19-cent regular postage stamp — the first of a new series of regular stamps to replace the current Americana Series. The 19-cent denomination meets the new international rate for post cards effective Jan. 1.

Without formal education or knowledge of English, Sequoyah created a working written language for his tribe which brought its members literacy. It was the only case in American Indian history of the adoption of a system of writing by a tribe without white assistance, according to the U.S. Postal Service. The language still survives and is used today.

His name, with slight spelling change, was given to the giant redwood trees of California and to the Sequoia National Park. In recognition of Sequoyah's contribution to the early development of Oklahoma, the state chose him to be one of its two honorees in Statuary Hall, Washington, D.C. The other Oklahoman is Will Rogers.

The new stamp features a pencil sketch of Sequoyah based on a full-color portrait by artist Charles Banks Wilson of Oklahoma. In the upper left corner is "USA 19 cents." Across the bottom in large type is the name "Sequoyah."

First-day cancellations may be ordered in the usual two methods. You may buy the stamp from your local post office and affix it to your envelope with peelable return labels recommended. Envelopes, postmarked no later than Jan. 11, should be forwarded to "Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Postmaster, Tahlequah, Okla., 74464." No remittance is required. If you prefer the USPS to affix the stamps, follow the same procedures and address your order to: "Sequoyah Stamp, Postmaster, Tahlequah, Okla. 74464." Enclose a money-order remittance to cover the cost of the stamp, no later than Jan. 11.

The U.S.S.R. has issued a series of stamps in tribute to its space program. One stamp commemorates the flight of "Soyuz T-2" space ship, featuring portraits of cosmonauts Malyshev and Skenov with the craft. Another set of three honors the 20th anniversary of the Gagarin Cosmonauts Training Center with illustrations of the cosmonauts in training. A third set of three stamps hails the joint Soviet-Cuban space flight of the Intercosmos program.

Specially prepared, full-color commemorative covers picturing President-elect Ronald Reagan and Vice President-elect George Bush are available at $4.95 per set from the International Stamp Collectors Society. They will be hand canceled Jan. 20, Inauguration Day, with a Washington, D.C., postmark. The red, white and blue cachet features photos of Reagan and Bush with the seals of their respective offices in the background. Write to: PRESIDENT, International Stamp Collectors Society, P.O. Box 854, Van Nuys, Calif. 91408.

During the past year, the Netherlands has issued a variety of stamps which have become popular with collectors in the U.S. Included are the Anne Frank stamp, the Occupation and Liberation issue, stamps for the International Bridge Tournament, the stamp honoring Interpex 1980 (the Netherlands International Stamp Exhibition) which featured an illustration of young collectors at their hobby, the commemorative for the inauguration of Princess Beatrix, plus many others. In answer to readers who have inquired, all of these stamps issued during 1980 are available at your local stamp dealer or stamp department. For those who specialize in the Netherlands, there is a Minkus album just for the stamps of the Netherlands and former colonies, including Netherlands Antilles and Surinam. The two-post binder sells for $40.

Vatican City reports a set of two new stamps in honor of the 700th anniversary of the death of St. Albertus Magnus. The stamps reproduce artworks showing the saint on his mission of peace and as a student and bishop. Another set of two stamps was dedicated to the Feast of All Saints.

Premature infant care

CLEVELAND (AP) — Tiny, fragile babies sleep in plastic incubators. They are so small that a nurse's hand can cradle them as diapers are changed.

These are the patients of the newborn intensive care unit of Cleveland Metropolitan General-Highland View Hospital, one of three such units in the Cleveland area. The infants are premature or sick and require close nursing and highly skilled medical care.

Much progress has been made in keeping alive premature infants. Today, babies who have only been in their mothers' wombs for 28 weeks can survive after weeks of treatment in an intensive care unit, according to Dr. Melinda S. Kwong, director of Metro's unit.

Metro's newborn intensive care unit is two years old, and 800 babies a year spend time there. They stay in one of the 39 isolettes until they are old enough and weigh enough to leave. The costs are high for these babies — each day in the unit costs $400.

Fragile as they are, however, the nurses hold them, caress them and talk to them. Parents, too, are encouraged to visit and cuddle their infants, unless the child is too ill.

It's not like a newborn nursery, with fat babies kicking and screaming for milk. But for many parents with newborns in the intensive care unit, it's a hopeful step in that direction.

Chinese costumes

NEW YORK (AP) — The opulence and color of imperial China during the Ch'ing dynasty (1644-1911) may be seen through August at the Metropolitan Museum's Costume Institute.

Most of the objects in "The Manchu Dragon: Costumes of China, the Ch'ing Dynasty" are from the collections in the Metropolitan, with some loans from other collections.

THE NEWSPAPER BIBLE

What would it take?

ONE day about this time as another great crowd gathered, the people ran out of food again. Jesus called His disciples to discuss the situation. "I pity these people," He said, "for they have been here three days, and have nothing left to eat.

And if I send them home without feeding them, they will faint along the road! For some of them have come a long distance."

"Are we supposed to find food for them here in the desert?" His disciples scoffed.

"How many loaves of bread do you have?" He asked. "Seven," they replied.

So He told the crowd to sit down on the ground. Then He took the seven loaves, thanked God for them, broke them into pieces and passed them to His disciples, and the disciples placed them before the people.

A few small fish were found, too, so Jesus also blessed these and told the disciples to serve them.

And the whole crowd ate until they were full, and afterwards He sent them home. There were about 4,000 people in the crowd that day and when the scraps were picked up after the meal, there were seven very large basketfuls left over!

Immediately after this He got into a boat with His disciples and came to the region of Dalmanutha.

When the local leaders learned of His arrival they came to argue with Him. "Do a miracle for us," they said. "Make something happen in the sky. Then we will believe in you."

His heart fell when He heard this and He said, "Certainly not. How many more miracles do you people need?"

Girl still missing

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A week ago today, six-year-old Avery "Peaches" Shorts vanished after buying a soda at a store near her home in an isolated, racially mixed housing project.

And despite a New Year's Day search by 300 officers and volunteers, police say they know little more about the child's disappearance than they did when her mother reported her missing.

"We thought we had something at several points," Knox County Sheriff Joe Jenkins said after leading the search Thursday. "Everything either turned up to be the wrong size clothing or wrong color."

The search, the second hunt for the child, attracted volunteer officers and rescue workers from several counties and a dozen Tennessee Highway Patrol troopers who came with a helicopter.

Frequently letting neighborhood children lead the way, they groped through underbrush, inspected abandoned cars and trailers and checked piles of scrap metal and rows of unused culverts.

They launched boats on the Tennessee River, a mile from the girl's home, and dragged shallow ponds and streams. They searched banks of deep water quarries, emptied a garbage dumpster after finding a pair of girl's underwear nearby and raked through waste at a sewerage treatment plant.

"We've done all we can do to try to find her," Jenkins said. "It's hard to find a person when you don't know which direction to go."

The girl's neighborhood, Montgomery Village, is a project of 452 apartments set among woods and hills and bordered by a railroad track. More woods hide the project from a main street and line Joe Lewis Road, the street used by the girl to walk to the store.

"I've been here thousands of times," Bobby Sullivan, 13, a village resident, said as he scaled a scrap metal pile to help in the hunt. "I hope this isn't another Atlanta, don't you? I'm scared of that."

Police say the girl's disappearance appears unrelated to the 15 dead or missing black childdren in Atlanta, but residents of the southside Knoxville project have echoed Sullivan's worries and point out a grim coincidence — a nearby highway sign showing the Georgia city less than 200 miles away.

Before the holiday search was launched, detectives encountered dead ends at every step. They used lie detector tests for their interviews, but found nothing. And though doubtful, they sought help from a psychic, Bobby Drinnon of Morristown, 40 miles away. But Drinnon, saying there was too much publicity, withdrew on his second day on the job.

"I'm doing okay," the girl's mother, Hazel Smith, 25, said Thursday. She remained inside her apartment with two other children, waiting for news from the search. "It's still the same."

Whooping cough has not been eliminated

Dear Dr. Solomon: Whooping cough used to be rather prevalent when I was younger, but I don't hear much about it any more. Has medical science eliminated it? If not, is there any treatment for it? — Mrs. C.P.

Dear Mrs. P.: Whooping cough is still with us, although it often goes unrecognized, possibly because of the feeling that it has been conquered. Diagnosing the disease often can be difficult since there are a number of other conditions, including tuberculosis and cystic fibrosis, that can mimic it.

The treatment of whooping cough is supportive in nature. Some doctors recommend that children with the disease be hospitalized. There are a number of reasons for this. In the first place, a child with whooping cough may require oxygen, especially if the coughing leads to cyanosis (a bluish or purplish discoloration due to lack of oxygen). Moreover, the child's nutritional intake may have to be supplemented, either orally or intravenously. And finally, a child with whooping cough may be susceptible to complications, including hemorrhages brought about by the coughing. Some children, in fact, cough so violently that they suffer hernias. However, when the disease is diagnosed early and adequate care is provided, most children do well.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My doctor has informed me that tests show I have gallstones, but he is noncommittal about whether I'll have to have an operation. Is it possible for a person to go through life with gallstones without needing surgery? — Mrs. B.Y.

Dear Mrs. Y.: Many people who have gallstones never develop gallbladder disease. In fact, they may never even realize they have gallstones, or they may experience only mild discomfort.

Whether an operation is indicated in a particular case depends on a number of factors including the patient's age and general health, and the degree of discomfort caused by the stones. Surgery usually becomes necessary when the gallbladder is inflamed, a condition known as cholecystitis. This rarely occurs in the absence of gallstones. The symptoms of cholecystitis include prolonged periods of severe pain, nausea, vomiting and fever.

I assume your doctor was noncommittal about the need for surgery because he really does not know at this time whether it will be necessary. You should inform him at once if you experience any of the symptoms of cholecystitis.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My 17-year-old daughter has what some people refer to as a full figure. Actually, her breasts are quite large, and even our family doctor has suggested that she might want to have something done about it. At what age would such an operation be considered appropriate? — Mrs. C.P.

Dear Mrs. P.: Reduction mammoplasty (reconstruction of the breasts) can be done at any time as long as the patient has achieved full growth. According to Dr. Reuven K. Snyderman, who heads the section of plastic surgery at the Rutgers Medical School, the patient can have the operation performed as early as 16 or 17 years of age.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Teen falls on arrow

WESTFIELD, N.Y. (AP) — A Pennsylvania teenager was in fair condition after accidentally being impaled on a razor-sharp hunting arrow, officials said.

Roy Miller, 15, of Erie, Pa., apparently was hunting with some companions on land near the Pennsylvania-New York border Thursday when he stumbled and fell onto the point, said Game Protector Joseph Wisniewski.

The arrow entered his left side just above the abdomen and protruded from his back, Wisniewski said.

The warden said Miller himself pulled the arrow out before he was helped by members of the Ripley Volunteer Fire Department. He was taken to Westfield Memorial Hospital.

Stars make resolutions

NEW YORK (AP) — Broadway stars and entertainers are like everyone else when it comes to New Year's resolutions. They're worried about their weight, bad habits and keeping to their good intentions.

In comments in Thursday's Daily News, a number of celebrities, including violinist Itzhak Perlman, Bert Parks and "Barnum" star Jim Dale, offered their personal resolutions for the new year.

Said Perlman: "My resolution is to eat less and lose 25 pounds. Since I'm not a singer, I don't need the weight."

Parks, former emcee of the Miss America pageant, resolved "to get fired again. It certainly did wonders. It will be a great year. You know it was last Jan. 3 that I got fired by the Miss America pageant and things have been just wonderful since."

For Dale, sticking to his New Year's pledges was the main concern. "My resolution is not to break any of my New Year's resolutions after the first week of 1981," said the actor.

•

NEW YORK (AP) — Bess Myerson, the television personality turned politician, was in "stable and satisfactory condition" at Lenox Hill Hospital after a fall in her apartment.

Miss Myerson was initially reported suffering from a slipped disc, but friends later told the Daily News that Miss Myerson was redecorating her apartment when she lost her balance and fell off a ladder Tuesday.

She was taken to the hospital where tests disclosed that she was also suffering from hypoglycemia, or low blood sugar.

•

NEW YORK (AP) — Hollywood columnist Rona Barrett and "Tomorrow Show" host Tom Snyder will make another attempt to work together, this time on the revised version of "Tomorrow" that debuts Jan. 12.

NBC Entertainment Vice President Irv Wilson said Miss Barrett, gossip columnist and TV personality, will appear on a regular basis from Hollywood on the newly titled "Tomorrow Coast to Coast," starring Snyder.

Miss Barrett appeared for a brief time on "Tomorrow," but left the show abruptly last fall, claiming that she was not being allowed proper time and prominence.

New technique fights heart clots to save lives

By SANDRA BALMER
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — A new technique for dissolving clots in the arteries around the heart could cut sharply into the 300,000 deaths now caused by such blockages each year, a researcher says.

The technique, if used promptly when symptoms of a coronary attack appear, could help save the lives of victims of arterial clots or coronary thromboses, said Dr. William Ganz, cardiology professor at the UCLA Medical School who is developing the procedure.

The procedure is still in the developmental stage, Ganz said, and until it is perfected "it cannot and should not be done in an institution that doesn't have the intellectual and physical capacity to do so."

But when the technique becomes available for general use in about two years, it will represent the first significant means of reducing death rates from coronary thrombosis in a decade, Ganz said.

A coronary thrombosis involves the cutoff of blood to portions of the heart muscle, as when a clot forms to block the artery. Without blood, the muscle tissue begins to deteriorate after 20 minutes and gradually worsens until, after six hours, it is irreparably damaged.

Ganz reported in the Jan. 3 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association that he and colleagues at the Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles have used the new technique to open clogged heart arteries in 20 of 21 patients who were suffering from coronary thromboses.

Under the technique, doctors feed into a patient's heart arteries a small flexible tube telescoped inside a conventional-size catheter tube inserted into the arteries at the arm or groin.

Researchers maneuver the tubes as near to the clot site as possible, then extend the smaller flexible catheter until it reaches the site of the blockage. They then inject medication which triggers production of a body enzyme that actually dissolves the clot and reopens the vital flow of blood to heart muscles, Ganz said.

Other techniques to dissolve heart clots are currently in use, but Ganz said his is different primarily because the smaller tube extends inside the pulmonary artery all the way to the clot and quickly brings medication where it is most needed.

Ganz infuses the drug Thrombolysin into the clot site. One of its components triggers the body's natural production of the enzyme plasminogen to dissolve the clot. The drug also adds extra amounts of the enzyme to speed the process.

"To save a patient we must save a large quantity of muscle," Ganz said in a telephone interview. "That's why we have to intervene quickly. We have to see the patient within 3 hours of onset of chest pains for the procedure to be effective."

Since the procedure was first tested on animals two years ago, it has been used on about 200 patients around the world — strictly on an experimental basis, Ganz said.

Once technical improvements are made in the procedure, Ganz said the public must learn to seek medical attention immediately when symptoms occur — even if they think the pains are only a bad case of heartburn, as commonly happens among heart attack patients, he said.

"Remember," he said, if the clogged artery is reopened "within 20 minutes, there will be absolutely no damage to the heart."

Milan opera house damaged by fire

MILAN, Italy (AP) — A fire, apparently sparked by a short circuit, caused an estimated $60,000 worth of damage to the mezzanine and the royal box of Milan's famed La Scala Opera House, officials said today.

"The fire broke out in the deserted theater Thursday night, blackening the mezzanine walls and chandeliers and damaging curtains and carpets and the red velvet brocade drapes and chairs of the royal box, normally reserved for dignitaries, officials of the opera house said.

"None of the 678 seats (in the mezzanine) was damaged," said Carlo Mezzadri, the administrator of the 2,800-seat theater. "The damage is not as serious as originally feared."

Theater officials said they were seeking fire department permission to open for tonight's scheduled performance of the ballet "Romeo and Juliet," starring Rudolf Nureyev and Carla Fracci.

"Workmen are already repairing the damages. We can open with the damaged area cordoned off," Mezzadri said.

The blaze set off the automatic sprinkler system and was put out in 10 minutes, fire officials said. Firemen summoned by an alarm were in the theater within minutes fighting the blaze with chemical sprays, the officials added.

Off-duty trooper charged in shooting

BALTIMORE (AP) — An Maryland state trooper who said he was struck in the face with a snowball and racially insulted by a gang of youths was charged with assault after allegedly shooting a 17-year-old boy, officials say.

Trooper Frazier A. West, who is black, said he was surrounded by a hostile crowd after the New Year's Day incident, which allegedly occurred while he was off duty and driving through a white working-class neighborhood. The youths allegedly involved are white.

The incident came almost one year after Roman Welzant, a 68-year-old retired salesman, shot and killed one youth and wounded another after they allegedly attacked him with snowballs.

Welzant, who said he and his wife had been continually harassed over the years and contended the Jan. 4, 1980, shooting was in self-defense, was acquitted of charges in June.

Police said after Thursday's incident that Neil McEntee was treated for a leg injury and charged with assault for allegedly hitting West with a snowball, police said.

McEntee told the Baltimore Sun that he and six or seven friends were celebrating the New Year by standing at the intersection of Falls Road and Roland Heights Avenue and pelting passing cars with snow.

"I don't know why ... It's just that the snow was there, and we've thrown snowballs for years at cars," McEntee said.

In a statement made to city police, West said his car became stuck in the snow about 2 a.m. and when he rolled down the window he was struck in the face with a snowball.

McEntee said West stopped his car suddenly in the intersection after it was hit by a snowball and threatened to shoot one of the youths if another snowball was thrown.

According to authorities, West contended he was taunted by McEntee, who he said told him, "Nigger, you ain't no policeman. Get back in your car. Go on your way."

McEntee denied using racial epithets, but said others in the group "might have called him a nigger."

The working class district of neat row houses is predominantly white. An unidentified resident told the Sun the area "takes pride on not letting any blacks in."

West told police he slapped McEntee "to fend him off" because the youth, at 6-foot-1, was taller than the trooper. A crowd then began to close in on him, police said, adding West reported he fired one shot at the ground and later a second shot.

He freed his vehicle and drove to Northern District police headquarters to report the incident.

McEntee said he did not know he had been shot at first, according to authorities.

"I thought it was a blank gun. I glanced at my leg, because it was a little numb, but I didn't know it had hit me," he said.

McEntee's mother, Frances, said she did not approve of the youths throwing snowballs.

Town's only policeman quits in face of voilence

LAPWAI, Idaho (AP) — Dan Quackenbush, the one-man police force in this Indian reservation town, says he's been shot at, fought with and threatened in his two months on the job. The violence has convinced him he ought to quit.

Rocks and bottles have bounced off and broken against his office while he worked inside. He keeps lots of guns around his house and has told his wife to shoot anyone who tries to break in.

"It hasn't been too much fun," said Quackenbush, who makes $950 a month and because of the laws governing Indians has been largely powerless to do anything about the situation.

The last straw came two weeks ago when a bullet smashed through his squad car window, narrowly missing him.

"That's when I decided they'd have to pay me a lot more if they wanted me to stay here," he said.

For 18 months before Quackenbush arrived from Belle Fourche, S.D., to become police chief on Oct. 31, Lapwai, a town of 1,050, was without its own police force. Reports of vandalism, extortion, fights and other violence reached the Nez Perce sheriff's office 13 miles away in Lewiston, but deputies were hard-pressed to keep the lid on crime.

Lapwai, with many of its buildings boarded up, has no industry. It is located east of Lewiston inside the Nez Perce Indian Reservation.

Its population is two-thirds Nez Perce Indians and local police lack jurisdiction over Indians in many cases. Almost all felonies must be referred to the federal Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The reservation has no tribal police, Quackenbush says, and the lone BIA officer just transferred to another point. There won't be a replacement for six months, he said.

Drug use is widespread among the Indians, said Quackenbush, and he has no jurisdiction over it.

Wilfred Scott, chairman of the Nez Perce tribal executive committee, said he didn't believe Lapwai was any rowdier than any other town its size.

"My own feeling is that the (reports of violence) have been blown way out of proportion, and I was born and raised here," Scott said.

Scott acknowledged that Lapwai police officers, when there are any, do face problems in trying to arrest Indians. He said the tribe is trying to get funding from the BIA for a tribal law enforcement system, including police, prosecutors and courts.

On Dec. 17, Quackenbush, sheriff's deputies and Idaho state troopers responded to a report that shots were coming from the Willard White residence.

Quackenbush said a four-hour confrontation in which 75 to 100 shots were fired ended when three men inside the house agreed to cease fire. But not before Quackenbush had a brush with death.

"I was crouched in the car when the right rear passenger window was shattered by a rifle shot," Quackenbush said.

White was charged with disturbing the peace. Quackenbush said he had filed other charges with the county prosecutor following the incident, but declined to elaborate.

Cold cash overcomes class bias

WACO, Texas (AP) — Money makes for social prestige, and it might help make a technical education more attractive in the years ahead, according to a vocational school official here.

At least, that's what Carter Richardson of the Texas State Technical Institute hopes. He says Texas needs more highly trained technicians, and needs them badly.

"The problem is that technical education has been in bad graces until very recently," said Richardson. "For too long there has been a social stigma prevailing that a person won't succeed unless he gets a bachelor's degree."

Richardson said that about 350 students will graduate from the school this year. But that's not nearly enough for the state's needs.

"We wish we could grow faster and supply more of these graduates," Richardson said in a recent interview with the Waco Tribune-Herald.

Soviet SST out of service

By THOMAS KENT
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — More than three years after Soviet officials triumphantly inaugurated passenger flights on their TU-144 supersonic jetliner, the problem-plagued plane is out of service, back in its builders' hands and still undergoing tests, Soviet officials say.

A spokesman for the Soviet Ministry of Aircraft Production claimed this week that the tests are "coming to an end," and that the 140-passenger plane could be back in service "soon."

But he declined to predict when regular flights will resume, and references to the supersonic jet were missing from official congratulations to airline workers published last Monday in the Soviet press.

The spokesman, speaking with The Associated Press, claimed that the safety of the plane, a prototype of which crashed spectacularly at the 1973 Paris Air Show, "now has been assured."

But Western specialists say they still suspect that the plane has problems that could affect flight safety. Only this, they believe, could account for the lack of mention of the plane in the Soviet press and the absence of more demonstration flights.

The aircraft industry spokesman, however, asserted that the TU-144's problems now are basically economic. The plane's Western rival, the British-French Concorde, has also suffered from high operating costs.

The slim, needle-nosed Soviet craft was once expected to beat the Concorde into passenger service, but was finally inaugurated as a passenger jet on Nov. 1, 1977, 21 months behind its rival. Previously, it had carried mail and cargo.

The new passenger service was presented with great fanfare, and foreign journalists were invited on a 2,000-mile wine-and-caviar demonstration flight from Moscow to Alma Ata in Soviet Central Asia. Reporters aboard said the flight was smooth, but some claimed vibration noise forced them to communicate by writing notes to each other.

The aircraft's designer, Alexei Tupolev, said at the time that the aircraft had already been tested in 2.5 million miles of flying and that noise inside the cabin would be reduced.

Fears for the safety of the aircraft date from the Paris Air Show incident, when a prototype exploded in the air as 30,000 spectators looked on. Thirteen people, including six crewmen, were killed and flaming wreckage destroyed a dozen homes in the Paris suburb of Goussainville.

No major accidents since then have been reported, and the plane flew for a time between Moscow and Alma Ata after the 1977 inauguration. Flights were later suspended, however. Eight to 20 of the aircraft are now believed to exist.

In June, 1979, the Soviet press said a new version of the craft had made a test flight to Khabarovsk in the Soviet Far East and that the new plane would soon go into mass production.

Since then, almost nothing has been said about the plane, except that one aircraft was given to an aviation museum last March for display.

Western analysts believe the entire TU-144 program was largely aimed at prestige and improving civilian air travel, and that the aircraft and its technology have little military application.

Buffalo stabbings continue

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Only hours after the third black man stabbed in the area this week gave detectives a description of his assailant, another black man reported he warded off a knife attack, authorities said.

Calvin Cripper told police a white male approached him from behind while he was waiting for a bus Thursday.

According to police reports, the white man uttered a racial slur and lunged with a knife. The attacker ran away when Cripper knocked the knife away with a bag of clothing he was carrying, the report said.

Police said there were no witnesses to the incident and were unable to give further details.

Asked whether the incident might be related to stabbing killings Monday and Tuesday, which occurred as the victims were waiting for buses, and to Wednesday's near-fatal attack on Albert Menefee, Erie County District Attorney Edward Cosgrove said, "If I had anything to say about it, I would have called a press conference."

A Buffalo newspaper said Menefee, stabbed in the heart in the ninth attack on a black man in three months, recovered enough overnight to describe his white assailant.

Now under 24-hour police guard, Menefee spoke twice with detectives who visited him Thursday. The Courier-Express said Menefee gave a description which resembled others provided by witnesses to the attack.

The visits were "very fruitful," an officer said.

Meanwhile, black leaders said more and more blacks were arming themselves.

"We're in a very tense situation, and I'm just hoping the culprit is caught soon so we can all get back to living normal lives," said the Rev. Bennett Smith. "I said it then (in September) and I'm saying it now: the attacks on black males were like an indoctrination ritual that was taught by some hate group."

Smith, pastor of St. John the Baptist Church, said one of his members told him "he was forced to stick his gun in his belt. That is the way many blacks feel."

Theodore Kirkland, a state parole commissioner and Buffalo policeman on leave of absence, said blacks must become more aggressive in chasing suspects.

"White police officers are good at capturing blacks, but it is the opposite when they are pursuing a white suspect," he said. "Too many blacks who have seen the attacker don't want to get involved. They could run him down and hold him until the police arrive. We must have a total commitment from everyone to capture this killer."

Cosgrove said he spent several hours Thursday speaking with investigators from a 185-member task force set up last autumn, when the attacks began.

The first four deaths Sept. 22-24 involved a gunman who fired .22-caliber bullets into the heads of his victims on the streets of Buffalo, suburban Cheektowaga and Niagara Falls.

In early October, two black cab drivers were beaten or slashed to death and their hearts were cut out.

Then the slayings stopped until Monday, when a seventh victim was stabbed while waiting at a bus stop. The next day, a similar slaying took place in Rochester, and Menefee was stabbed the next day.

After the attack on Menefee, police began a search of nearby buildings, set up roadblocks and assigned officers to airports and bus and train stations. No arrests were made.

In each stabbing, a white man wearing a green jacket and maroon hat was seen running from the stabbing sites, Cosgrove's office said.

Five die in stolen plane

EL CAJON, Calif. (AP) — The body of a 16-year-old boy was found at the controls of a stolen plane that slammed into a furniture warehouse just after takeoff, killing all five people aboard, officials said.

Witnesses said the twin-engine aircraft owned by a missionary flying school exploded on impact moments after leaving Gillespie Field early Thursday.

"If this hadn't been a holiday, there would be about 18 dead people here," said Ernie Pierson, manager of the furniture warehouse.

The body of Grant Thompson was at the controls of the plane, authorities said. The youth's mother, Roberta, 35, and his stepfather, Joseph Geruliatus, 32, were among the victims, according to Deputy Coroner Robert Pettit.

All five victims were from Santee. The other two victims were identified as Edward Allen, 35, and Richard Pehl, 37.

The bodies were severely burned, said Deputy Coroner Jay Johnson. Authorities had no information on how the plane was stolen.

Damage to the 72,000-square foot warehouse was estimated at $100,000, Pierson said. Much of the damage occurred when sprinkler systems soaked merchandise, he said.

Three air controllers who watched the takeoff said the six-passenger plane bounced erratically along the main runway before gaining altitude and swerving left.

Traffic controller Stanley Haar said he noticed the aircraft taxiing and beginning its takeoff about 6:55 a.m. without calling the tower. The air strip is not under FAA control before 7 a.m., but pilots routinely call in as a courtesy, the controllers said.

Air controllers said no flight plan was filed with the FAA.

Controller Greg Rising said the plane "got to maybe 100 feet in the air and then began falling."

"There was one big fireball when it hit," he said. "It was probably loaded with fuel."

David O. Underwood, who operates the School of Missionary Aviation and owned the plane, told police no one had permission to take the aircraft.

Fog lifts in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Thick fog and smog that had been hampering flights at Salt Lake International Airport cleared enough to allow near-normal operations Thursday night, airport tower spokesmen said.

Few flights were able to land Wednesday, the fourth straight day of murk along the Wasatch Front.

However, 30 to 40 percent of the scheduled flights were able to land and take off Thursday morning, and tower spokesmen said the last delayed flight Thursday was at 2 p.m.

Visibility increased to approximately a half mile Thursday night, as opposed to less than a sixteenth of a mile the day before. Visibility must be ½,200 feet for landings, and 700 to 2,400 feet for takeoffs, depending on the aircraft and company rules.

The Utah Highway Patrol said it handled 30 accidents New Years Eve that were directly related to foggy conditions.

Grocery bills up 15 percent in 1980

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Boosted by drought and an international taste for sugar, grocery bills rose almost 15 percent last year — about 1½ times faster than they did in 1979, an Associated Press marketbasket survey shows.

The AP survey of a random sample of items on supermarket shelves also showed that prices rose much more slowly during December than they did during November, but the good news is not expected to last.

The AP drew up a list of 15 commonly purchased food and non-food products and checked the price at one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973. Prices have been rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month. One item — chocolate chip cookies — was dropped from the list after the manufacturer discontinued the package size used in the survey.

Among the findings of the latest survey:

—The marketbasket bill increased at the checklist store in every city during 1980, rising an average of 14.4 percent. That compared with a 9.5 percent boost in 1979.

—During December, the marketbasket bill increased at the checklist store in nine cities — up an average of 1.9 percent — and decreased in four cities — down an average of 2.9 percent. Overall, the bill increased by an average of four-tenths of a percent. During November, the average increase was 2.4 percent.

—Sugar was to blame for much of the increase in supermarket bills during the year. Raw sugar prices have surged because production has not kept pace with demand and retail prices have followed. The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates the 1980 average retail price of sugar at 37 cents a pound — up 50 percent from 1979 — and says prices will rise further this year. The AP survey showed the average price of a five-pound sack of granulated sugar at the checklist store went from $1.42 at the start of 1980 to $2.85 at the end of December.

When sugar was removed from the marketbasket totals, the AP found the average bill at the checklist stores went up only 7.2 percent during 1980 — half as big as the increase with sugar included.

—Last summer's drought is expected to cause increases in meat prices next year, because of higher feed grain costs. The drought already has caused price increases on supermarket shelves; the December survey by the AP showed the price of peanut butter was up at the checklist store in nine of the cities checked. The hot, dry weather heavily damaged the nation's peanut crop and raw peanut prices have more than doubled.

—Egg prices, which have been rising steadily, were mixed during December. The AP survey showed the price of eggs increased at the checklist store in five cities and decreased in seven. Medium eggs were temporarily out of stock at the checklist store in the 13th city. The USDA says egg production is expected to decline in 1981 which could mean still higher prices ahead.

A look at the overall number of items in the AP survey showed slightly more increases during December than during November, but it also showed more decreases. Here are the percentages of increases and decreases:

	Nov.	Dec.
Up	33.0	34.6
Down	15.9	18.7
Unchanged	45.6	40.7
Unavailable	5.5	6.0

The AP did not try to weight the survey results according to population density or in terms of what percentage of a family's actual grocery outlay each item represents.

The day of the week on which the check was made varied depending on the month. Standard brands and sizes were used when available. If the requested size and brand was not available on March 1, 1973, a comparable substitute was selected. Items temporarily out of stock on one of the survey dates being compared were not included in the overall total.

The survey does not compare actual prices from city to city — saying, for example, that eggs cost more in one area than another.

At least 14 persons die in Texas holiday traffic

By The Associated Press

At least 14 people have lost their lives on Texas roads and highways since the Department of Public Safety began its grisly New Year's holiday traffic death count.

DPS officials predict 37 people will die before the gruesome 104-hour count, which began at 6 p.m. Wednesday, ends at midnight Sunday.

DPS spokesman Richard Grimmett said the 14 deaths were not unusually high for a state that averages about 11 traffic deaths a day and he predicted the heaviest toll would come on Sunday when holiday travelers begin returning home.

The New Year's traffic death watch is the second such count in a week. The DPS reported earlier that 51 persons were killed over the Christmas holidays.

Grimmett said that Texas traffic deaths through the first 10 months of 1980 were running slightly over 4 percent higher than last year's record setting level.

He said 4,229 people were killed on Texas roads and highways in 1979. Through November of this year, he said 3,855 people have been killed in Texas traffic accidents.

Two of those killed so far over the New Year's holiday died in motorcycle accidents, two were pedestrians, including a woman hit by a hit-and-run driver and a 2-year-old boy hit by a car, and six of the dead perished in two-car crashes.

Here are how some died.

Stephen Gary Stephenson, 26, of Houston, was killed Wednesday when his car collided with another and burst into flames at U.S. 59 and Miller Road in Harris County.

Cynthia Machado, 21, of Big Spring was killed while walking on Texas 350 about a mile from town. The hit-and-run accident occurred about 1:20 a.m. Thursday.

John Willard Keel, 21, of Lubbock killed when he lost control of his motorcycle and was thrown off and run over by another vehicle in Lubbock Thursday, the DPS said.

A two-car accident in Dallas shortly before midnight Wednesday killed Chris Hardin Fisher, 23.

Paul D. Grisham, 29, was killed early Thursday in Dallas when he lost control of his motorcycle and hit a brick building, traffic investigators said.

Nicola Alfieri, 19, of Clovis, N.M., died in a one car accident Wednesday night on U.S. 87 two miles south of Kree in Swisher County.

Ricardo Hernandez, 31, of Lockney, and Irma Garza Olivarez, 25, of Edinburg died in a two-vehicle accident in Edinburg Wednesday.

David Guzman Jr., 2, was killed when he was run over by a car Wednesday night in West Columbia in Brazoria County.

Charles Erwin Welch was killed in a one-car accident in Fort Worth Wednesday night.

Miguel Ramirez of Fort Worth died in a two-car broadside collision in Fort Worth Wednesday night. An unidentified man also died in the crash.

Liza has another miscarriage

NEW YORK (AP) — Entertainer Liza Minnelli has suffered another miscarriage and lost the baby she was expecting in May, it was reported today.

Columnist Earl Wilson reported in the New York Post that Miss Minnelli, 34, suffered a "mid-second trimester pregnancy loss" about 10 p.m. New Year's Eve at a hospital near Reno, Nev.

"We are incredibly upset and grieved by this sad turn of events on New Year's Eve," Wilson quoted Miss Minnelli's husband, Mark Gero, as saying.

According to the Post, Dr. Robert Stitt said, "There was nothing wrong with the baby. We've learned the difficulty. It's probable that she will be able to conceive again."

Miss Minnelli had an earlier miscarriage in December 1979.

A spokesman for the entertainer reportedly said Miss Minnelli will return to New York after a few days' rest and then resume working.

Miss Minnelli is the daughter of the late actress-singer Judy Garland and film director Vincente Minnelli.

Jordan news agency reports 200 killed in dreadful massacre

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — The state-run Petra news agency of Jordan, a foe of Syria, claimed today that Syrian security forces herded 200 people into a public square in the northern Syrian city of Aleppo and shot them all to death for alleged aid to anti-government Moslem Brotherhood guerrillas.

There was no immediate comment on the report from Syria.

Petra quoted travelers arriving in Jordan from neighboring Syria as saying the mass execution took place in Aleppo's public square of Masharka last week.

The Petra report said the alleged victims of the "dreadful Masharka massacre" were rounded up by units from Syria's "special forces" and "defense regiments" on a charge of helping the Brotherhood guerrillas.

Both security forces are headed by Col. Rifaat Assad, the younger brother of Syria's president, Hafez Assad, whose pro-Moscow socialist party has been the main target of Brotherhood attacks.

Petra did not say whether the alleged victims were executed together or in small groups. It identified one victim as Prof. Abdulrazak Marour of the engineering faculty at Aleppo University.

Unconfirmed reports in July said an attempt was made by Brotherhood prisoners to break out of jail in the town of Palmyra in central Syria. Troops surrounded the jail and killed more than 500 inmates, the reports said.

Jordan and Syria have been locked in a war of words over Syrian charges that Jordan's King Hussein allowed Brotherhood guerrillas to train on Jordanian territory for anti-government bombings and assassinations in Syria.

Syria deployed 50,000 troops and hundreds of tanks on the frontier with Jordan in late November. Hussein denied he was aiding the Brotherhood and rushed 30,000 of his own soldiers to the border along with hundreds of tanks.

Alabama Tide drowns helpless Baylor, 30-2

BY TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

DALLAS — Maybe it wasn't 45-0 like last year, but as far as Baylor fans were concerned the 30-2 lesson in the fine art of football defense administered the Bears by Alabama New Year's Day might have been a lot worse.

A year ago, Baylor made no pretense toward lordly aristocracy. The Waco Bruins were just another struggling football team which by dint of pride and perserverance, at the season's end, was good enough to merit a post season trip to Atlanta's Peach Bowl.

Thursday, it was a little different. The Bears were the proud champions of the SWC, a whopping three-game winner even in a brief eight-game conference schedule. Some said Baylor, indeed, rated as a darkhorse contender for No. 1 if things fell right in other bowls, despite that shocking loss to San Jose back in November.

BUT AGAINST Alabama, ravaged by destructive turnovers that not only set up points for the Tide, but cost them irreparable damage after the Bruins had maneveured themselves into scoring position, it was no contest. So, for a team that longs for respect as much as Rodney What's-his-name, this defeat was more humiliating than last year's early season wipe out.

It was a game in which Bear Bryant's Crimson Tide defense demonstrated why Alabama was ranked at the top of college football's poll most of the season, even if it was saddled with an offense that couldn't make it stick.

"Turnovers. That's the story in a nutshell," lamented Baylor Coach Grant Teaff. "I thought we were still in the game in the fourth quarter in spite of them."

The outcome left both 10-2 for the season, but for the 67-year-old Bryant, it was his sixth straight bowl win and a personal triumph in preparation over his younger coaching opponent.

As Baylor wide receiver Mike Fisher summed it up, "They must have super scouts. Everything we learned over the holidays, they changed. Usually I can run the in-out-in pattern and be open, but it sure wasn't there today."

Frank Ditta added, "They did their homework. They got us out of things we normally do very well."

Added linebacker Lester Ward, "They had a good game plan. We thought we did, too. They would lull you to sleep with their runs then hit you with those little bitty passes."

TEAFF labeled a first half fumble at the Tide eight as a significant point. "That really hurt us. That may have been the costly one."

The play referred to came late in the first stanza after Bama had taken a 6-0 lead on a pair of field goals by Peter Kim from 29 and 28 yards away. Baylor was on the verge of decisive retaliation when an interference call moved the ball from the BU 21 to Alabama's 29. A first down later, fullback Dennis Gentry knifed seven yards inside the 10 only to fumble where Alabama's Randy Scott recovered at the eight.

A couple of plays later, Baylor tackle Tommy Tabor salvaged a safety out of it by dumping quarterback Walter Lewis in the end zone, so the Bears trailed 6-2 instead of leading 7-6.

Even that didn't look so bad when Gerald McNeill, whose fumbles on punts set up two Tide field goals, returned a sparkling 29 yards to the Bama 36. On first down, quarterback Jay Jeffrey went deep only to find cornerback Jeremiah Castille in the way, an interception that launched the perennial SEC power on a 76-yard TD drive. Major Ogilvie hurtled over from the one to become the first player in NCAA annals to score a touchdown in four different bowl games.

"We did what they gave us," Jeffery said in attempting to explain the fact that Baylor's vaunted running attack led by the Walter Abercrombie-Dennis Gentry tandem, the one's that brung 'em here, mustered a sad 54 yards on 35 attempts. "We felt they were giving us the throw, but we didn't take advantage of it. We had a game plan and stuck with it."

AS IT turned out, the Tide wasn't giving Baylor any more in the air than it did on the ground, picking off three passes to go with four fumble recoveries.

"I think hard-hitting by Alabama caused a number of the turnovers. We knew we had a good defense. I felt we could play with them defensively, and we did. And I thought the key would be our ability to move the ball on them. They had one long run in the fourth period and a long pass in the first half," Teaff said. "Other than that we held them to three field goals."

Baylor had hopes of making the nationally televised Cotton Bowl game the launching pad for Walter Abercrombie as a viable Heisman Trophy candidate. It was viewed as a rare opportunity to exhibit Abercrombie's running talents for a nationwide audience to see.

An Alabama defense, led by middle guard Warren Lyles, snuffed out Abercrombie with 18 yards on nine carries, the longie a modest four-yarder. By the end of the third quarter, Lyles had tossed Baylor backs for 36 yards in losses on five different penetrations, good enough to make him the game's top defensive player.

Bryant made it tougher to pick an offensive player, employing 13 backs as ball carriers in gaining 341 yards and five different receivers for his quarterbacks. But in the end, Ogilvie, 74 yards on 15 carries, was as good a choice as any.

KIM BOOTED three field goals in four tries, tying a Cotton Bowl record. His third, like his second was set up by a McNeill fumble and came with 4:57 left in the third period from 42 yards out to make it 16-2.

It was a disappointing way for McNeill, who hadn't been guilty of a turnover all year, to end the season, but Teaff explained he had dislocated a finger in practice last week.

Alabama turned it into a rout, scoring two final TDs, as the Baylor defense which had been on the field 29:52 of the first 45 minutes, finally wilted. The first score was quarterback Don Jacobs' one yard keep after a 57-yard drive. The next came on a three-yard pitch to Mark Nix, set up by Joe Carter's 56-yard sprint to the Baylor five.

"We had hoped to show people across the county we could play with anybody," said Jeffrey. "Alabama just had a great defense, talent and class and got the job done."

Mike Singletary, Baylor's All-America linebacker, said, "They didn't do anything we didn't expect. they just did everything better."

Alabama's Major Ogilvie (42) tucks the ball and goes high over the Baylor defense for a touchdown Thursday in the Cotton Bowl in Dallas. The score gave Ogilvie an NCAA record for rushing for four touchdowns in four consecutive bowl games. (AP Laserphoto)

Sooners want No. 3 ranking

MIAMI (AP) — J.C. Watts is willing to concede the national championship to Georgia and Barry Switzer has no qualms about Pittsburgh being No. 2, but don't dare rate Oklahoma lower than third.

"We've been No. 3 so many times that that's what I wanted," Sooners' Coach Switzer said Thursday night after quarterback Watts engineered a nine-play, 78-yard scoring drive in the closing minutes of an 18-17 victory over second-ranked Florida State in the 47th Orange Bowl.

"After Georgia beat Notre Dame, I told them I didn't really care about No. 2, let's go for No. 3," Switzer added, referring to the top-ranked Bulldogs' 17-10 triumph over the Fighting Irish in Thursday's Sugar Bowl. "We've been three more than anybody else in the last decade."

Watts threw 11 yards to wide receiver Steve Rhodes with 1:27 remaining and then flipped a pass to tight end Forrest Valora for a two-point conversion that enabled the fourth-ranked Sooners to complete a 10-2 campaign.

"We knew the national championship was out of the picture, but we wanted to play a representative game for the school, the Big Eight and all of America that was watching," said Watts.

"Georgia has got its claim to No. 1 and rightfully so. They're 12-0 and obviously a great team. No argument from me," he added. "I'd love to play them to see if they can beat us, but that's not possible so we'll live with it. I'd hope we'd be voted No. 2, but No. 3 would be fine. Not any lower than that."

Florida State, which had its bid for a perfect season rejected by Oklahoma 24-7 in the 1980 Orange Bowl, dropped to 10-2. The Seminoles' only other setback was also a one-point decision, 10-9 to No. 20 Miami.

"We played our hearts out. Oklahoma played their hearts out," said Seminoles linebacker Reggie Herring. "I still feel we are one of the best teams in the country. We proved that tonight. We can play with anybody."

A crowd of 71,043 watched the teams fight to a 10-10 standout for three quarters before Florida State took command early in the fourth period when Mark Lucky's center snap sailed through the hands of punter Michael Keeling and Florida State's Bobby Butler pounced on it in the Sooners' end zone for a 17-10 lead with 11:07 remaining.

Watts, who was the most valuable player in Oklahoma's 1980 Orange Bowl victory, launched the game-winning drive with a 7-yard completion to halfback David Overstreet and fueled it with a 42-yard pass play to Rhodes and a 14-yard gainer to Chet Winters. Finally, he scrambled 10 yards to set up with the scoring pass to Rhodes.

"Everybody says I'm not a passer, but I've always had the confidence in my ability," said Watts.

Watts completed 7 of 12 passes for 128 yards. Meanwhile, Florida State, which ranked second in the nation in total defense, limited the Sooners' explosive wishbone running game — second best in the country — to only 156 yards. Florida State picked up 212 on the ground and only 51 through the air.

"They defensed us well, but we got a few breaks and didn't fall apart we when fell behind," said Watts. "It's just an example of what we've done all year long. We've had our backs to the wall before and we've always fought back."

Florida State made a last-ditch effort to win the game, but Bill Capece's 62-yard field goal attempt came up short on the final play in the game.

Watts' heroics made amends for the three fumbles he lost earlier in the game. One of them preceded an 11-play, 70-yard scoring drive that gave Florida State a 7-0 lead in the second quarter and another set up Capece's 19-yard, third-period field goal which lifted the Seminoles into a 10-10 tie.

Butler's recovery of Keeling's fumble accounted for Florida State's other points.

"Fumbles are just a part of the wishbone offense," said Watts. "A lot of times, you have a missed block and before you know, somebody's hit you before you expect it and the ball pops loose. That was the case tonight."

The senior quarterback nearly saw the game-winning drive halted by Florida State defensive tackle Gary Futch. Watts, under pressure unloaded a screen pass to avoid a sack and Futch nearly intercepted it.

"I was sitting down there on the ground watching him juggle it and hoping he'd drop it," said Watts. "When he did, I said I ought to go over and pay that guy."

Said Futch: "When it first came down, I said, 'Just catch it.' Then the glory hog side of me said, 'Run!' and I started running. I just ran out from under it."

Ricky Williams, the game's leading rusher with 99 yards on 19 carries, burst over left guard for 10 yards a touchdown to give Florida State a 7-0 lead with 49 seconds to go in the first half, but Watts moved the Sooners into position to score before halftime as Keeling's 53-yard field goal — an Orange Bowl game record — made it 7-3.

Georgia's Dogs claim crown

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The date was Jan. 1, 1947. Vincent Dooley, age 14, traveled from his hometown of Mobile, Ala., to New Orleans, bent on attending the Sugar Bowl between Georgia and North Carolina.

"I came down hoping to buy a ticket. My daddy gave me one dollar and I got a ride with a next-door neighbor," Dooley recalled Thursday. "I thought maybe I could buy a ticket outside the stadium from someone just hoping to get rid of one."

But young Vincent was out of luck.

"I sat on the curb next to a policeman during the game," Dooley said. "We were the only ones out there. I still remember hearing the roar of the crowd."

GEORGIA WON that game in Tulane Stadium 20-10 to cap an 11-0 campaign, but the Bulldogs only finished third in The Associated Press ratings behind, ironically, Notre Dame and Army.

Dooley heard the roar of the crowd again Thursday, but this time it was for 51-year-old Coach Vince Dooley and his No. 1-ranked Georgia Bulldogs in the Louisiana Superdome. It took 34 years, but Dooley finally got to see the Bulldogs complete another perfect season — this one 12-0 — by defeating seventh-ranked Notre Dame 17-10 in the 47th annual Sugar Bowl.

The triumph virtually assured Georgia its first national championship in 89 years of intercollegiate football. The Associated Press will announce the national champion for 1980 at 5:30 p.m., CST, Saturday.

"I sure hope it's us. I will be shocked if it turns out any other way," Dooley said.

Dooley would have been shocked if Thursday's game had turned out any other way, especially after his opportunistic Bulldogs turned a blocked Notre Dame field goal attempt, a botched kickoff by the blundering Fighting Irish and a fumble into 17 quick points in a span of 2:46 late in the first quarter and early in the second.

Harry Oliver's 50-yard field goal at 4:19 of the opening period had given the Irish a 3-0 lead before they began playing Santa Claus one week late.

Georgia's Rex Robinson knotted the score at 13:15 with a 46-yard field goal, nine plays after Terry Hoage blocked a low 48-yard attempt by Oliver. The Bulldogs nosed in front to stay 10-3 just 46 seconds later on freshman star Herschel Walker's 1-yard dive over the middle and Walker added the decisive touchdown on a 3-yard sweep at 1:11 of the second period.

WALKER'S FIRST tally followed a mixup by Notre Dame kick returners Jim Stone and Ty Barber on Robinson's kickoff after his tying field goal. The kickoff hung in the air for 4.4 seconds and Stone and Barber both moved up to block, each thinking the other would field it.

The ball landed behind them at the 4-yard line, free for the taking. Had it reached the end zone, it would have been a touchback and Notre Dame's ball at the 20. But Stone and Barber both dived for it, and so did Georgia's Dale Carver.

Carver won. He slipped under the two Notre Dame players and nudged the ball just enough for teammate Bob Kelly to recover it at the 1. Two plays later, Walker went airborne over the top and Georgia was in front for good.

Less than a minute into the second period, Notre Dame fullback John Sweeney fumbled and Chris Welton recovered for Georgia at the Irish 22. A 12-yard run around right end by Walker, a 7-yard keeper to the left side by quarterback Buck Belue and a pitchout back to the right to Walker produced the decisive points.

"Some of the things that got us here backfired a bit," said Dan Devine, who bowed out after six seasons as Notre Dame coach with a 53-16-1 record, including 9-2-1 this season. "We have not been a team that turned over the ball deep inside our territory. That got us today."

But all season Georgia has been a team that took advantage of its opponent's mistakes, a team that tied for the lead nationally in turnover margin with a plus-23 in fumble recoveries and interceptions.

"We're not a great team," Dooley said, "but we're a team, and that's the only way we had to win. In the course of anything there are so many unpredictable things. I'm sure luck plays a part, but do you take advantage of it?

"We've been that kind of a team. We prepare to be lucky. We prepare to take advantage of the breaks when they come."

They came Thursday, even after Notre Dame's Phil Carter trimmed the lead to 17-10 on a 1-yard run with 54 seconds left in third quarter. The Irish made enough mistakes to nullify a gem of a defensive effort that limited Georgia to 127 yards in total offense — Notre Dame had 328 — sacked quarterback Buck Belue four times, kept him from completing a pass until his 12th and final attempt with 2:05 left in the game and held Walker to 55 yards on 19 carries after the intermission.

However, Georgia's freshman sensation wound up with 150 yards on 36 carries to earn the game's most valuable player award.

For the first 27 minutes of the second half, Georgia only managed two first downs, one on a penalty. But with 2:56 remaining, Scott Woerner intercepted his second pass of the game at the Georgia 34 and the Bulldogs picked up three more first downs while running out the clock on their longest drive of the afternoon.

"We were hanging on, hanging in there," Dooley conceded. "We could feel them grinding on us."

Michigan turns to roses as bowl frustrations come to end

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The way tailback Butch Woolfolk runs when he's tired may induce Coach Bo Schembechler to hire a brass band to play beneath his window on the eve of every Michigan game next year.

Woolfolk, a 6-foot-1, 207-pound junior from Westfield, N.J., broke open a tight Rose Bowl game Thursday — rushing for 182 yards and a touchdown on 28 carries — to pace the Big Ten's Wolverines to a 23-6 victory over the Washington Huskies.

"I couldn't sleep at all last night," said Woolfolk, who was named Player-of-the-Game. "I doubt if I had more than 3½ hours all night long. I just kept tossing and turning."

MOST OF the Michigan players had gone with little sleep the previous night after a fire alarm forced the evacuation of the team's hotel at 2:30 a.m. Wednesday.

Once, Woolfolk broke a 35-yarder to get Michigan out of a third and 11 situation at the Wolverines' own 10-yard line.

"Tell me that wasn't a great run, when we're pinned in there," Schembechler said. "Butch can be a real load."

The victory ended what seemed like a lifetime of frustration for Schembechler, who had lost seven bowl games in as many tries during his 11 previous years at the Wolverines' helm.

Schembechler, whose fifth-ranked Wolverines finished the season 10-2, had lost five previous Rose Bowls in the 1970s plus an Orange and a Gator.

The Huskies of the Pacific-10 outplayed the Wolverines in the first half, but still trailed 7-6 after the first 30 minutes. Then Michigan took the second-half kickoff and marched down the field to score on a 25-yard field goal by Ali Haji-Sheikh.

"That was the turning point, as far as I could see," Schembechler said. "To take the kick and drive down the field on them, I think, might have taken something out of them."

HOWEVER, Washington Coach Don James said that his defenders became disheartened earlier — before the half — when the Wolverines put on two good marches, the second of which ended in a 6-yard touchdown sprint by Woolfolk, who barreled right through Husky cornerback Bill Stapleton at the goal line.

"I could tell in the locker room at the half that my defensive guys had lost a little of their confidence," James said. "Then, too, you have to remember we were down in there on them a couple of times in that first half and came away empty."

On one occasion, it appeared that Washington fullback Toussaint Tyler had plunged kor a 1-yard, fourth-down touchdown on the Huskies' second possession of the game. One official signaled TD, but another waved it off and the Wolverines took over.

"The referee who signaled TD told me he changed the call after the other official told him he clearly saw the ball was not in," James said. "If you look at the final score, we'd still lose, but you never know what effect taking that quick lead might have had on Michigan.

"It might have put more pressure on them."

Still, the Huskies continued to roll up big chunks of yardage through the air on the pinpoint passing of senior quarterback Tom Flick, the 6-2, 189-pounder from Bellevue, Wash., who was the Pacific-10 Conference player of the year.

Flick finished the game with 23 completions on 39 attempts for 282 yards.

However, the Michigan defense — which has not given up a touchdown in 22 successive quarters — picked off two of Flick's aerials.

"It hurts," Flick admitted. "It hurts like hell because when you move the football and don't get any points — it stings.

"They had some breaks, but who knows? I think Michigan is a great team and I also think Washington is a good team."

Chuck Nelson, the leading scorer on the Huskies' team this fall, had field goals of 35 and 26 yards.

"Their defense was good," said James, whose 16th-ranked team went back to Seattle with a 9-3 record. "I think we played close to our potential, but I would have liked to have had two more touchdowns."

IN ADDITION to the running of Woolfolk, the other key to the Wolverine victory was the play of All-American wide receiver Anthony Carter in the second half. Michigan didn't throw a pass to the fleet sophomore from Riviera Beach, Fla., in the first half, but used him with devastating effectiveness in the final 30 minutes.

"(Michigan quarterback John) Wangler just hadn't gone to him," Schembechler explained. "He thought if he did, he'd be forcing the ball to Anthony.

"We said 'force it!'"

Carter finished the game with five catches for 68 yards including a 7-yard touchdown pass from Wangler in the third quarter.

Fullback Stanley Edwards, a 6-1, 205-pound senior from Detroit who gained 70 yards on 19 carries, capped the Michigan scoring with a 1-yard insurance plunge in the waning minutes of the game, played before a crowd of 104,863 in temperatures announced at 87 degrees at kickoff time.

'Bum' Phillips isn't mad as long as he gets paid

HOUSTON (AP) — Firing professional football coaches is an owner's perogative, and O.A. "Bum" Phillips says it doesn't make him mad, even though he's now out of a job.

Oiler owner Bud Adams exercised his perogative on Wednesday and in a move that shocked a lot of people — including Phillips — he fired the colorful coach.

"I hold no grudge against anybody. If Bud Adams wants to pay me not to coach, that's his privilege. I'm sincere. I'm not mad at him.... An owner has a right to do what ever he wants with his property and the Houston Oilers are Bud Adam's property," said Phillips.

Phillips still had a year left on a contract with a salary estimated at $120,000 to $150,000 a year.

He admitted he would have appreciated a little more warning.

"I gave them seven years. You'd think they could have given me 24 hours," Phillips said Wednesday.

"The only thing that dissappointed me was the way it was done. I just wish he (Adams) would have given me a chance to tell my staff and family," said Phillips, who added his 13-year-old daughter burst into tears when she heard of the firing from a television bulletin.

Phillips, who joined the Oilers in 1974 and became head coach in 1975, said when Adams called Wednesday morning he jumped in his Oiler Blue pickup and drove 20 miles to the office expecting to talk about a two-year contract extension.

Instead, he was fired. The entire process took only about 15 minutes, he said.

The firing came just three days after the Oakland Raiders crushed Houston 27-7 in the American Football Conference wildcard playoff game. Adams said the decision stemmed from Phillip's refusal to hire an offensive coordinator.

Adams, who has become known for firing coaches, said he met with Phillips around mid-season and "expressed concern over a lack of scoring." He said he recommended either elevating one of the assistant coaches or hiring a new offensive coordinator.

"If I was putting together a new staff I'd hire one every time. But you don't hire an offensive coordinator once your staff is set," said Phillips.

He said he got "X" number of dollars for the coaching staff. "If you have an offensive coordinator you usually hire four coaches. The biggest chunk goes to the offensive coordinator and the rest is scattered over the other three. I just felt we had three good coaches already," said Phillips.

He said the Oilers had an offensive coordinator during his first three years and they didn't win.

"We didn't have one my last three years and we went to the playoffs every year," said Phillips.

Steve Rosenbloom, general manager of the New Orleans Saints, said he would consider Phillips as a candidate to replace the fired Dick Nolan as head coach in New Orleans.

Ladd K. Herzeg, executive vice president of the Oilers, said Wednesday he would begin immediately to search for a new head coach and that he didn't intend to take long to find a replacement.

MHS girls, boys host ACHS today

The Midland High Bulldogs have lost three of their last four games, but that streak should end today at 8 p.m. when the 14-3 Purple Pack entertains Abilene Christian High School at the Chaparral Center.

Before Christmas the Bulldogs lost to San Antonio Judson in their last game of the San Antonio Classic and they dropped two of three games in the Hobbs Invitational tournament this week. The Bulldogs lost to Hobbs, the No. 1 ranked New Mexico squad, and Altus, one of the top ranked teams in Oklahoma. However, MHS did get a win over a strong Kofa-Yuma, Ariz., squad in the tournament.

The Bulldogs have faced some class opposition recently, but tonight's encounter should put the Pack back on the right track. MHS has already defeated ACHS by a wide margin once this year.

Actually, tonight's card at the Chap is a tripleheader with a 4 p.m. start as the Midland High girls shake off the cob webs for two meetings with ACHS. The junior varsity gals meet at 4 p.m. while the girl varsitites tangle at 6:15 p.m. The Midland High girls have not played since the Tall City Invitational before Christmas and they own a two game winning streak. ACHS and the MHS junior varsity boys meet at 4 p.m. today in the MHS gym.

Midland Lee, in the throes of a five-game tailspin, travel to Sweetwater Saturday for an 8 p.m. matchup, hoping to improve on a 7-10 season mark. The Rebs need something good to happen before the start of District 5-5A play next week.

The girls open 5-5A warfare Saturday with Midland High traveling to Odessa High and Lee hosting Odessa Permian at the Chap in 8 p.m. encounters. Lee has won or shared the title all three years the girls' loop has been in existence and will play the role again as the defending champions.

Wyoming is still searching

LARAMIE, Wyo. (AP) — For the fourth time in six years, the University of Wyoming is looking for a football coach, and this time it is hoping to find one who likes the place enough to stay for a while.

The latest departure is Pat Dye, a Georgian who arrived in Laramie a year ago, shivering in the snow, but pledging to restore Wyoming's winning tradition and not use the job as a stepping stone.

Dye called it quits after coaching the Cowboys to a respectable 6-5 record — Wyoming's first winning season in four years and only the second of the decade. The former East Carolina University coach and Alabama assistant resigned effective New Year's Day to pursue the coaching vacancy at Auburn University in Alabama.

IT WAS enough to give Laramie an inferiority complex.

A Denver newspaper concluded Laramie might need a new mouthwash, while Laramie residents blamed their latest loss on the 7,200-foot altitude, the snow or the wind, which blows across Laramie's nearly treeless high plains with ferocity.

The university hurriedly started a search for a new coach, and as UW Athletic Director Bob Hitch said, perhaps only half jokingly, its first priority was finding somebody who wanted to live and die in Laramie as well as take the Cowboys to bowl games.

Despite an enrollment of only 9,000, Wyoming gained national respectability — and bowl bids — under coaches Bob Devaney and Lloyd Eaton in the 1960s and Fred Akers in 1976, and the fans never forgot.

But Devaney went to Nebraska, Eaton to the pros and Akers to Texas. Victory starved Cowboy fans started seeing the affable Dye as Wyoming's hope for the restoration.

The state's only four-year college is a source of pride to natives and newcomers alike, and dreams of regaining past bowl game glories are openly voiced in newspaper editorials and on the floor of the Wyoming legislature.

In fact, state Sen. Bill Rector, D-Cheyenne, reacted to the latest coaching turnover by introducing a bill that would force coaches to put 30 percent of their first-year salary, 20 percent of their second year and 10 percent of their third in trust. They'd get the money only if they stayed through three years.

Most legislative observers give Rector's bill little chance, but it shows the depth of feeling toward the UW football program.

Who is 'America's Team'?

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Falcons defensive end Jeff Merrow says the Falcons, rather than their National Football League playoff opponent on Sunday, the Dallas Cowboys, should be called "America's Team."

"There are very few teams who have defensive linemen making tackles downfield, and there are very few teams who have defensive backs pasting people in the chest all the time," Merrow said after practice Thursday.

"People enjoy watching us. It's fun to watch us. ... We should be America's Team."

America's Team, of course, is what the Cowboys have called themselves in recent years, promoting an image of the prototype franchise typifying professional football in America.

But Atlanta, which won the NFC West title with a 12-4 record, is favored by three points in the 3 p.m. CST nationally televised playoff battle against the Cowboys at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium.

Although Dallas, which also finished the season at 12-4, has been in the playoffs 15 times in the past 16 years and has won two Super Bowls, Merrow says the Cowboys won't be adding a third NFL title to their trophy case this year.

"I feel we're going to win it," he said. "I feel we're the better team. We've had the advantage of a week's rest and we're playing in Atlanta.

"To me, losing this game, I haven't even considered it. And I don't intend to. This is just another step. I feel it's our year and that's the only way I can approach it," he said.

Merrow said the Falcons plan to "come out of the blocks smokin'" on Sunday, but he said the Cowboys probably will be showing Atlanta many shifts on offense.

"They'll come out and run a lot of misdirection," he said. "They'll run a lot of those horsecrap plays. Tom Landry puts in all of that stuff, but I really don't understand most of it.

"They'll run a lot of those plays you won't see anywhere else, like fleaflickers and reverses — I hate when they do that. I'd rather they just come at us and play football.

"Trick plays, I don't think there's any room for that in the game ... Soon or later they'll have to settle down and play football, and that's when we're going to take command of the game."

Kelly has own pressure valve

ATLANTA (AP) — Sophomore quarterback Jim Kelly of the Miami Hurricanes has developed his own way of relieving the pressure before a big college football game — he throws up.

"Every game I do that," Kelly said as the 20th-ranked Hurricanes prepared for this afternoon's Peach Bowl battle with the Virginia Tech Hokies.

Miami is a touchdown favorite over unranked Virginia Tech in the 2 p.m. CST nationally televised game at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium. Both teams are 8-3.

"I've been doing it since high school — at football games, basketball games," Kelly said. "It makes me feel better. Inside, I get all tensed up and nervous. This relieves it."

Kelly said his Miami teammates at first thought he was "just getting sick. Now, they're used to it. They say, 'It's about time for Jim' before games. It's like a whistle to start it all off. They all start yelling and carrying on."

Miami Coach Howard Schnellenberger said he used to be concerned about Kelly's habit, but now he says, "We get worried if he doesn't do it."

Kelly's pressure-easing habit seems to work for him. The 6-foot-3, 204-pound sophomore, who was redshirted his first year, led the Hurricane offense this year with 1,519 yards passing.

Virginia Tech Coach Bill Dooley described Kelly as a quarterback who "has the ability to stand in there even if he has a rush. He keeps his poise and he has the ability to find the second receiver if the first is covered."

Kelly credits former Miami Dolphin quarterback Earl Morrall with helping him develop to his full potential.

Caponi stuns the men

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Donna Caponi holds the lead going into today's second round of the Spalding Invitational Pro-Am golf tournament — the first time ever a woman has held the lead in a tournament dominated by men.

Her seven-under par 65 of Thursday started out with four straight birdies, giving her a lead she never relinquished on the Corral de Tierra course, one of three being used until Sunday's final round at Pebble Beach.

In second place after the first round was Harvie Wood of Southern Pines, N.C., at 67. Three players tied for third at 68, led by another woman, Kathy Whitworth. The others, Scott Simpson and Pat McGowan, played Old Del Monte in Monterey.

Top scorer at Spyglass Hill, the third course that will be used until Sunday's final round at Pebble Beach, was a one-under par 72 by Rex Caldwell.

Said Caponi of her startling emergence into the lead: "The greens were absolutely magnificent. All the players, both men and women, really like fast, true greens."

The three women pros in the field are a given a distance handicap off tees in the longer holes.

Winning is the bottom line at this stage of NFL season

By The Associated Press

Bum Phillips' Houston Oilers got whipped in last Sunday's National Football League wild-card playoffs and now poor ol' Bum's out looking for a new job.

That just shows you what can happen in this obviously serious business as the winding path to Super Bowl XV takes another turn with Conference semifinal matchups scheduled for this weekend.

Although it's highly unlikely that any of the coaches involved in the four games Saturday and Sunday will meet the kind of fate Phillips did, it's obvious that one-line homilies just won't do in pro football at this stage. The bottom line is winning.

THE SUPER Bowl-eligible field of 10 is down to eight and it will be cut in half this weekend following the Conference semifinals. On Saturday, Philadelphia hosts Minnesota in an NFC game and Buffalo is at San Diego in the AFC. On Sunday, it will be Dallas at Atlanta in the NFC and Oakland at Cleveland in the AFC.

There are interesting matchups in all four contests.

Oakland's sack-happy Raiders will be zeroing in on Cleveland's Brian Sipe, who joined a very exclusive club when he passed for 4,132 yards this season. The only other 4,000-yard passers in NFL history were Joe Namath and Dan Fouts.

The Raiders recorded seven sacks in eliminating the Oilers from the playoffs last week. Two of them were by cornerback Lester Hayes, who also had a pair of interceptions.

During the regular season, Hayes had 13 interceptions, one short of the NFL record set by Dick "Night Train" Lane in 1952. The ironic part is that three other pickoffs by Hayes were nullified by Oakland penalties.

So if Sipe insists on throwing, it probably will be away from Hayes. And if you're wondering about targets, don't worry. Sipe has plenty of candidates. There are running back Mike Pruitt, who caught a club-leading 61 passes and gained 471 yards or wide receivers Dave Logan (51-822) and Reggie Rucker (55-768) or tight end Ozzie Newsome (51-594).

THAT SOUNDS like an aerial bombardment, until you take a look at what Buffalo must cope with in San Diego. The Chargers set a record with three 1,000-yard receivers — tight end Kellen Winslow (89-1,290) and flankers John Jefferson (82-1,340) and Charley Joiner (71-1,132).

Conducting that passing symphony is Fouts, who threw for 4,715 yards, breaking the NFL's single season air yardage mark for the second consecutive year.

The Bills, in the playoffs for the first time since 1974, are anxious to meet the challenge of the Chargers. Buffalo led the league in fewest yards allowed this season, permitting a total of 4,101, a drop of almost 1,000 from the 1979 yield when the Bills finished 14th in that important category.

Buffalo beat San Diego 26-24 earlier in the season and their game is one of two rematches this weekend. In the other, Philadelphia hopes it can handle Minnesota as easily as it did in the season's second game when the Eagles drubbed the Vikings 42-7.

To prepare for Saturday's game, the Eagles went to Tampa, Fla. for a week of training. The idea was to put things back together for a club which might have peaked too soon. After winning 11 of its first 12 games, Philadelphia lost three of its last four to finish at 12-4.

Minnesota, on the other hand, has been playing well, winning three of its last four and six of its last eight to claim the NFC Central crown for the 11th time in 14 years under coach Bud Grant. The Vikings don't beat themselves. Over the final eight games, quarterback Tommy Kramer threw only six interceptions and Minnesota lost only three fumbles all season.

Quarterback Ron Jaworski, who won the NFC passing title with 3,529 yards and 27 touchdowns, thought the week in Florida was just what the Eagles needed.

"We're totally prepared to play," he said. "We've had a week to freshen mentally ... we're as mentally prepared for Saturday's game as we can be."

THE LAST time Dallas played Atlanta was in the 1978 playoffs when the Cowboys, en route to the Super Bowl, knocked off the Falcons 27-20.

"We've come a long way since then," said Atlanta quarterback Steve Bartkowski, recalling his team's first taste of postseason action. "We've improved offensively and defensively."

Like Buffalo, Atlanta improved defensively, slicing more than 100 points off its yield from 388 to 272. Three rookies, linebackers Buddy Curry and Al Richardson and cornerback Kenny Johnson were key additions to the Falcon defense.

Browns expect sandlot game

BEREA, Ohio (AP) — The Cleveland Browns' playoff contest against Oakland could wind up resembling a wicked pickup game at the local sandlot, says veteran Browns receiver Reggie Rucker.

"They play just like you used to on the playground. 'You've got this guy and I've got that guy, and take him wherever he goes,'" Rucker said as the Browns continued preparations for the Sunday AFC matchup.

"That's simplifying it," he said, "but they basically want to play man-to-man coverage."

Even along the line, the Raiders' defense is not a complex animal, Rucker said.

"They rush the passer and blitz to camouflage whatever weaknesses they may have. But they certainly don't have many weaknesses."

Rucker was the favorite wide receiver of Cleveland quarterback Brian Sipe this season, gathering in 52 passes for 768 yards and four touchdowns. Only fullback Mike Pruitt, with 63 mostly short-range receptions, caught more passes for the Browns in 1980.

Sipe, like Rucker, is aware of the Raiders' style of defending against the pass, but he is not worried about being shut down the way Houston's Ken Stabler was as Oakland beat the Oilers 27-7 in the AFC wild card contest last Sunday.

"They were blitzing him a lot," Sipe said. "We do a very good job of picking up blitzes like that. It only takes one time to burn them. It'll be interesting to see what they try to do."

The imposing size of Oakland's defensive line is likewise not of particular concern to Sipe.

Oakland's second-year Coach Tom Flores refused to say whether the Browns can expect the same sort of defensive approach the Raiders employed against Houston.

Arizona State gets NCAA probation

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — The New Year was rung in on anything but a happy note Thursday for Arizona State University's athletic department.

Wednesday night, the school got word that the National Collegiate Athletic Association had placed its football program on two year's probation due to 30 rule infractions.

In a prepared statement, ASU President John W. Schwada expressed "disappointment and surprise" at the NCAA action "in view of the penalties already imposed upon the university, the forfeiture of games, the disruption of the program, the disciplinary action of the Pacific 10 Conference and, most importantly, the university's own extraordinary effort to uncover and correct abuses before and during the investigation."

Phoenix attorney Bill Jones, who represented the school, said he was "very disappointed with the decision. We've done everything we've been asked to do by the NCAA. We cooperated totally.

"This university has gone through a great deal of suffering," he added. "To see these kids and staff members hurt, it more than disappoints me. My feelings border on anger. We feel it's a very severe penalty in light of the infractions that were found."

The NCAA launched its investigation into the Arizona State football program in the fall of 1979 following allegations of ticket sales irregularities and the awarding of academic credit to eight players for an extension course for which they did not work.

When the academic scandal surfaced, the eight were declared ineligible by the Pac-10 and the school forfeited the games it played. In addition, the Pac-10 barred Arizona State from the Rose Bowl and the conference championship this season.

The NCAA Committee on Infractions said Arizona State had violated NCAA regulations governing extra benefits to student-athletes, complimentary tickets, financial aid, institutional control, academic standards, ethical conduct, and recruiting.

"Originally, there were 80 allegations," Jones said. "Of that number, 16 involved simple requests for information such as chronicaled details of recruiting procedures. There were 64 others that dealt with rule violations.

Arizona State will be eligible for postseason competition at the conclusion of the 1982 season. The two-year probationary period began Tuesday and will run through Dec. 30, 1982.

City lives up to cold reputation

By CHARLES HILLINGER
The Los Angeles Times

FAIRBANKS — As the Alaskan Airlines plane came in for a landing, the pilot announced:

"Well, here we are folks. It's 37 below zero in Fairbanks. Welcome to America's coldest city."

Fairbanks, the nation's northernmost city, lived up to its reputation as Nature's Icebox.

The average temperature for 25 consecutive days from Dec. 6 through Dec. 30 was 34 degrees below zero in downtown Fairbanks.

In many nearby communities, the daily average for the same period was 50 below, with the thermometer dropping to as low as 70 below.

On Thursday, most of the 20,000 persons living in Fairbanks and the 20,000 others in the suburbs of Alaska's second-largest city were huddled around television sets, dreaming and drooling as they watched the sun-bathed Rose Parade.

"It was worth getting up early New Year's Day just to get a glimpse of the warm," sighed Connie Evans, a nurse at Fairbanks Memorial Hospital.

It takes a particularly hearty individual to make it through a Fairbanks winter. December has been miserable, and January holds the promise of even colder days.

Man'a Fairbanks log cabin 70 years ago. She has been a trapper, gold miner and has run her own dogsled teams.

"Ain't this a helluva note?" she lamented during an interview at Fairbanks MEMORIAL Hospital, where she is recovering from severe frostbite. The oil heaters in her shack failed in the middle of the night.

"Us Alaskans live fast and we live wild and sometimes it catches up with us.

"Hell's fire," she snorted, "I wear eight pairs of socks, four britches, several shirts, sweaters and scarves when I'm outside to keep the cold away. But I guess I didn't have enough covers on the bed."

Before the winter is out, at least a dozen Fairbanks residents will lose fingers or toes from frostbite, and several other Alaskans will freeze to death — stranded in cars or in the bush, far away from possible help.

Bus drivers in recent days have been distributing leaflets asking passengers to urge the city fathers to do something about inadequate heating on buses.

"It never gets warmer than 15 above in the driver's seat," complained Jim Simpson, a driver.

Fairbanks also has a severe smog problem — but here it is ice smog. The sun, which is above the horizon about four hours a day, has hardly been seen since early December. It is obscured by the dense layer of ice smog, sometimes growing so severe that the airport must be shut down.

The unusual pollution is caused by thick clouds of exhaust pourring from vehicles in the extreme cold and smoke from wood and oil fires swirling skyward from homes and commercial buildings. Visibility has been as little as three to 10 feet.

Accidents on the icy, snow-covered streets are commonplace but the traffic crawls so slowly that collisons are usually minor.

Abandoned vehilces cause another traffic problem. Service stations are booked up two to three weeks in advance to thaw out the frozen cars and trucks with giant master heaters.

Electrical outlets line curbs and shopping-center parking lots. Cords hang from the fronts of cars to be plugged into outlets connecting with under-the-hood heaters that percolate radiator water.

Some drivers park too long in lots without the outlets and the car engines freeze. Others leave their cars running while they do errands.

Few venture outside more than a few minutes at a time and even then they are bundled to the hilt. The unlucky few who are forced to face the 3lements — policemen on foot patrols, telephone linemen and mail carriers — duck inside buildings at least once every five minutes.

The two cemeteries in town, Northern Light and Birch Hill, have special "winter" mausoleums where bodies are held from October until late May, when the ground finally thaws.

Fires are common, the result of electrical shorts and constant use of heaters and furnaces.

"When we fight fires in 20- to 27-below temperatures, spray from hoses covers us and freezes instantly. We don't mind because the ice sheeting helps keep us warm," said fire department Lt. Bob Hirn, 55, a Fairbanks fireman since 1949.

"Then we have to be thawed free by firemen pouring water over our clothes. The water in our lines and water in lines throughout the city is kept at 50-degree temperatures so pipes and hoses don't freeze up."

Asked why anyone would want to live in a place with such extreme cold, Hirn, like other old-timers, speaks of a great love for Alaska's far north.

"The friendliest people on earth live in Fairbanks. We're brough closer togehter because of the cold. We help one another out when people have problems with the weather.

"If a person in Fairbanks is outside and gets cold, he goes to the nearest house and people automatically let that person inside to get warm.

"It's the wilderness up here. The great hunting and fishing. Everytime you see the aurora borealis, it's like seeing it for the first time.

"Spring comes with a crash so beautiful, the summers are so gorgeous, it's worth toughing out the horrible winters we get.

"Our cost of living is higher here than any other city in America, but we have the highest wages as well," he added.

It is so cold here that doghouses are heated, as are outhouses on the outskirts of town.

It is so cold that people put their freezers outside in winter to save electricity. Oil heating bills in the average home run from $300 to $400 a month.

It is so cold that the popular pastime of hockey is played inside at the unheated Big Dipper Arena, where spectators watch the game at 10 and 15 below zero — the temperature in the city park arena.

"You can't just sit at home and stare at the four walls. You got to keep active doing things to keep your sanity," said Elaeanor Gutierrez as she sat on the sidelines with her husband, watching their son, Phillip, play.

The Gutierrezes moved her from San Bernardino, Calif., eight years ago.

"We love it. People either love it or hate it. Those that can't cope leave right away," said Al Gutierrez.

Inner tubes, a thing of the past in the other states are a must on Fairbanks cars. Tubeless tires go flat in the cold.

School never closes, no matter how cold it gets.

"If the schools were to close because of the cold; the kids would never get educated," one woman said.

The people of Fairbanks finally got a break — if only for a brief breathing spell — a New Year's heat wave.

The temperature soared from 31 below Wednesday night to 13 above Thursday. The people celebrated.

'Real danger not passed'

By MICHAEL GETLER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Although Americans are "breathing more easily about Poland" these days as the prospect of Soviet military intervention appears to be receding, the chairman of the House Intelligence Oversight subcommitte argues that "the real danger has not passed" and is, in fact, "just about to begin."

In a report published Friday entitled "The Worst is Yet to Come" Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., asserts that "the chances of a Soviet invasion are very high."

Contrary to many intelligence and press reports which suggested the Soviets had completed preparations to invade early in December, Rep. Aspin claims "there is strong evidence" that in reality Moscow wasn't fully ready then militarily or politically and that the real danger will run from mid-January to the end of March."

Aspin says that U.S. officials have been "touting" Soviet preparedness for an invasion since Dec. 3. "It is this official position, more than anything else," he claims, "that has produced the current sense of ease."

But Aspin, whose committee has been studying the U.S. intelligence community's ability to forecast invasions such as those in 1958 in Czechoslovakia and Afghanistan in 1979, says this early forecast of readiness for a possible intervention early in December "may be another case of the common intelligence failure of mirror imaging — assuming that others are like 7s."

The United States, he argues, puts great emphasis on the "fire fighter approach" where speed is important. "The Soviets give much greater weight to advance preparation." The Soviet military, he said, "is both precise and plodding." As in the cases of Czechoslovakia and Afghanistan, its procedures require six months for an invasion of this kind and that preparation time won't be up until mid-January.

Though the Kremlin probably still hasn't made up its mind to intervene, Aspin says the "odds strongly favor an invasion" and he cites three reasons.

First is what he calls "bureaucratic momentum," meaning that so much work has gone into preparations and so many careers are on the line that bureaucrats may be keenly aware they must "use or lose" this January-March "window" after whcih spring rains and other factors will make it hard to maintain the current forces in place.

If Poland blows up after this time and the troops are out of position, then there are undoubtedly Kremlin officials worried about "taking the heat," he says.

Furthermore, he adds, "On no other occa ion of which we are aware have the Soviets failed to use the mobilized forces at their command after such massive preparations."

Aspin also says Poland's communists today are anything but a reliable instrument of Kremlin control and that the party leader, Stanislaw Kania, faces opponents within his own party who would like to see a Soviet intervention sweep him from power.

On the military side, Rep. Aspin essentially argues that Moscow's "checklist" of preparations is longer than some other U.S. analysts believe it is.

Czechoslovakian intelligence officers trai,ed in the Soviet system, Aspin reports, said it took six months of preparation to invade their country and insist that is the standard time. Measured from mid-July, when Polish labor unrest began, this would mean mid-January would be the start of the danger period.

Singapore: "Too shiny and Tacky"

By PAUL ZACH
Special to The Washington Post

SINGAPORE — "Character was weevils in your food, metal folding chairs and a grouchy barman who insulted you as he overcharged you; it was a monsoon drain that hadn't been cleaned for months and a toilet ... located in the middle of the kitchen ... "

Paul Theroux used those words to decry Singapore's "too shiny and tacky" new hotels in his 1976 novel, "Saint Jack." Today, it is hard to find such character traits anywhere in Singapore.

Ministry of Environment officials have herded most streetside food vendors into well-scrubbed "hawkers' centers," where weevils rarely tread. Metal folding chairs usually sport padded seats. Barmen labor under ubiquitous smiling posters that advise all Singaporeans to "make courtesy our way of life."

Garbage is collected in every part of this island republic's 220 square miles every day, including Sundays and public holidays. There is litle left to clog monsoon drains or sewers.

And almost all of Singapore's 2.4 million people have access to private toilets adjacent to, rather than in the middle of, the kitchens in their government-subsidized apartment complexes.

In short, Singapore is an anomaly among seedy Southeast Asian capitals such as Bangkok and Jakarta — an oasis of rapid, steady development in a part of the world where neighboring countries lurch fitfully toward modernization.

It is described as "a testing ground for future Asia" by Hans Hofer, a German photographer who has lived here during Singapore's past decade of remarkable growth.

From a British colony and neglected way station for foreign sailors, Singapore has become an independent nation that is the commercial hub and financial capital of Southeast Asia and the world's fourth largest port. Between 1978 and 1979, its economic growth outpaced even South Korea and Taiwan as its gross national product increased 11.6 percent to $19.5 billion, or more than $4,000 per person.

The chief architect of Singapore's economic and physical transformation ha been its prime minister, Lee Kuan Yew, 57. In many ways Singapore personifies its leader, who appears young and vigorous.

Biographers describe Lee as a tireless worker with no hobbies except for an occasional round of golf.

Through 21 years in office, Lee never has been the subject of the kind of scandal and corruption stories that have tainted the successes of leaders in such neighboring countries as Indonesia and the Philippines. So foreign investors, able to conduct business without having to pay bribes and kickbacks, have flocked to Singapore with their nation-building capital.

Acquaintances also desc6ibe Lee as fastidious in his attention to details, including trimmed nails, polished shoes, a bedroom cooled to precisely 66 degrees Fahrenheit, and a 72-degree office.

Government planners have not yet figured out how to control Singapore's sweltering equatorial heat, but they have produced a city-state considered the "cleanest and greenest" in Asia, if not the world. Manicured lawns and gardens border tree-lined avenues and heavy fines discourage strollers from littering the many esplanades.

But in his drive to propel Singapore into the ranks of the developed countries, Lee ha leveled much of pre-1970 Singapore.

Old landmarks have given way to new ones so quickly that some residents complain about getting lost in their own city "because the road has changed direction," or "because there was a new building I had never seen before."

Even travelers who prefer a suite at the Holi-ay Inn to a Chinese hotel alive with the "character" preferred by Theroux have wondered whether, in its rush to modernization, Singapore has become a sterile city without a soul.

Neither religion nor tradition stands in the way of the bulldozers. Last year, the redevelopment authority replaced an ancient Chinese temple with a community r3creation center, despite angry protests from worshipers throughout Southeast Asia.

Only a worldwide outcry, including a pledge by a group of New Yorkers to buy it, saved the Raffles Hotel, the historic haunt of writers, from demolition. The government has designated it a national landmark.

Even so, pile drivers are r3ttling its wooden frame and the nerves of its guests. Private developers have begun construction of Raffles City, a combination office-shopping-apartment complex crowned by a gleaming 72-story hotel that will dwarf the stately, two-story Raffles.

Raffles Hotel manager Roberto Pregarz said he believes the government realizes the value of Singapore's landmarks and chooses to preserve rather than bury them.
