Streams In Desert Places

BY OZELLE STEPHENS

".....I go bound in spirit unto Jerusalem not knowing the things that shall befall me there", Acts 20-22. This verse gives us insight of Paul's faith and trust in God as he stood on the edge of mystery. Is not this a good phrase to think about as we go into a new year? For we do not know what joys or sorrows await us this year. We should consider how gracious God is to withhold us from knowledge of the future. Not knowing what tomorrow will bring also makes possible pleasant surprises and gives us opportunity to exercise our faith and live in a Christ-like manner.

We should live one day at a time, face each hour without anxiety, and be grateful for the grace of God that streams continually into our being and sustains us while we live at the edge of mystery.

Adult Education Classes Resume

The Rule Cooperative Adult Basic Education classes resumed January 4 at Haskell, Weinert, Knox City, and Rule. All of the classes are meeting in the high schools, with the exception of Haskell, which meets in the CAP center.

The classes are held every Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7:30 until 9:30. Students may enroll anytime or may return after a period of absence, since students are taught individually. There is no tuition fee and materials needed are furnished without any cost to the student.

After reviewing eighth grade subjects and attending classes, starting at one's individual level, a student will be ready to take the General Educational Development tests. If the student passes these tests, the Texas Education Agency will issue him a high school diploma.

The Haskell and Knox City classes are also directed to helping the non-English speaking person learn English, since these classes are taught by bilingual teachers.

H.L. Guess, Superintendent of Schools at Weinert began typing and bookkeeping classes, Monday, January 10, at 7:00 p.m. at Weinert. If anyone wants to take these courses, contact him.

Plan to go back to school now if you did not finish high school.

As the first week of district play ended the Greyhounds found themselves 0-2 losing to Aspermont and Roscoe. Both of the games I feel were lost at the charity line. In the Aspermont game we hit on only 12 out of 28 free throws and against Roscoe only 16 of 33. In both misses on the first shot of a one and one situation. So far it seems like that when we've really wanted to put it together we haven't been able to. Perhaps a little of the pressure is off now and we're hoping to come back after these first two losses and harg up eight straight wins. The Greyhounds still have a lot of pride and confidence in themselves. But we must shoot better in order to win. Before Christmas we were averaging about 62 per cent from the free throw line and better than 40 per cent from the field. Against Aspermont we hit on 20 out of 60 from the field for 33 per cent and at Roscoe we hit 21 out of 52 for 40 per cent; however, Roscoe hit 22 out of 43 for 51 per cent. Certainly we would like to be 2-0 right now instead of 0-2, but don't count us out yet. There's quite a ways to go and eight games left to be played.

AG Yearbook Is Available

Real estate brokers, home builders, and material suppliers interested in developing the rural market will find USDA's new yearbook — A Good Life for More People — a comprehensive and up-to-date source of practical information.

The annual publication was presented to the public, Members of Congress and the press by Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz. The event was cosponsored by: National Lumber and Building Material Dealers Association, The American Plywood Association, National Forest Products Association; and the National Association of Home Builders.

The Washington Evening Star said the 416-page book was "almost a textbook in rural sociology, concentrating on housing, education, and community services, with feature articles on people who have taken advantage of various programs overseen by the U. S. Department of Agriculture."

A broadened rental housing program has been initiated and is proving extremely popular in smaller towns.

Grants up to 90 percent of the project's total cost are available for construction of housing for farm laborers.

Short-term homestead and subdivision development loans are available to non-profit organizations to encourage development of good building sites in rural areas with modern water and sewer facilities and pleasant environment.

Comprehensive area planning grants are available for the orderly and efficient development of community facilities.

Farmers Home Administration offers the services of trained construction specialists, architects and engineers and, along with other USDA agencies, has developed housing designs suitable for various parts of the country.

Housing and community loans are now financed through the sale of insured notes to investors rather than by appropriated funds. Investors include labor unions, retirement pension funds and other trust funds, and private lend institutions.

The yearbook contains chapters telling how Farmers Home Administration works not only with small home builders but also with large industrial firms to build whole new rural towns so that their employees have decent, modern housing.

Farmers Home Administration's big surge as a dominant force in rural housing in recent years is the result of putting the program on an insured loan basis, rather than depending on direct appropriations each year from Congress. The agency sells its insured note paper to local banks and investors but a large share is sold through big national underwriters in big block.

The yearbook — A Good Life For More People — published December 8, 1971, can be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C. 20402, for $3.50 per copy, said Donnie R. McCool, county supervisor.

A weekly public service feature from the Texas State Department of Health

Accent on Health

J.E. PEAVY, M.D., Commissioner of Health

The collection and disposal of used materials today constitutes a large problem that simply can no longer be ignored. "Perhaps the most awesome task facing mankind today is the disposal of the wastes he produces," said C. K. Foster, director of Sanitary Engineering Division of the Texas State Department of Health. "Much attention has been focused on air and water pollution, but only recently has land pollution, or solid wastes, been a topic of equal concern."

In Texas, studies have shown an average of nearly one ton—2,000 pounds—of refuse per person is thrown away each year. This is about five cubic yards of compacted solid wastes per individual per day. Collection and disposal of all this refuse cost Texans more than $5 billion last year. Collection of solid wastes represents 80 percent of the cost; disposal accounts for the remaining 20 percent.

Solid waste is a health and sanitation problem. National concern has brought forth federal and state recognition of that problem. The Texas Legislature gave the State its first comprehensive solid waste legislation in 1969.

Now the State has a comprehensive solid wastes control plan, with rules instituted by the State Health Department for site selection, design and operation of sanitary landfills, for operation of incinerators and compost plants, standards for collection systems, and rules for handling and disposing of hazardous and industrial wastes.

Actually, the State Health Department has had an active solid wastes program since 1944 when one man in the central office headquarters was assigned to devote full time to the problem," said Foster.

A survey by the State Health Department a few years ago in each of the 254 counties of the state revealed only 40 of 875 land disposal sites as being sanitary landfill operations. The sanitary landfill is the most common and generally

McKinney To Make Trip

Mike McKinney will be among the eighty Hardin-Simmons University students leaving on an El Paso Mission trip by way of chartered bus, station wagons and cars on Jan. 14 at 8 a.m. For the last several years, H-SU students have interrupted their Christmas holidays to spend time in the El Paso area working in churches and missions.

Students will stay at the Baptist Mission Center in El Paso, sleeping in bedrolls on the floor and cooking their own meals. Mornings will be spent in manual labor: painting and doing repair work. At night teams will conduct revival services in Spanish.

Small crews will get up at 6 a.m. each day to pack lunches, with breakfast at 7:30 a.m. and work crews to leave at 8 a.m. At 5 p.m. the crews will return to the Mission Center to clean up and eat supper at 6 p.m. From 7 to 10 p.m. the students will be at the churches. From 10:30 to 11:30 p.m. group sharing will be observed.

There will be eight teams, four of which will be at churches in Juarez and four will be at Latin American churches in El Paso. This will be the third year a team has worked with Manuel Padilla in Juarez. Padilla built his church building by hand.

This trip gives students a chance to put in practice some of the things they have been studying and learning about.

SWC District Says 1971 A Good Year

According to L.D. Offutt, chairman of the Wichita Brazos Soil and Water Conservation District, 1971 was a good year for the District and good progress was made in controlling all forms of pollution.

The year did produce some unusual weather conditions but those land users who were applying conservation practices had their land ready for these conditions and made 1971 a productive year. Offutt stated the District sponsored several new programs during the year aimed at environmental improvement and pollution control.

The District Co-sponsored an application for assistance from the Resource Conservation and Development Program and a special project request through the Rural Environmental Assistance Program to control roadside erosion. The District also updated and published its program and plan of work. This publication is available on request at the Soil Conservation Office in Knox City.

Arche Lieb, District Conservationist for the SCS assisting the District at Knox City, said a total of 756 land users received assistance from the District during the year. Lieb said the assistance ranged from layout of pollution abatement practices such as terraces, diversions, and ponds to assistance on rangeland problems such as brush control and deferred rotation grazing systems along with assistance on cropping systems and management practices such as minimum tillage. The assistance also included 63 services to city and non-agricultural land users in which resource data was provided to solve conservation problems.

Lieb reported that over 135 miles of parallel terraces were completed and 35 farm ponds were constructed. Twelve grassed waterways totaling 62 acres were completed. The application of practices on irrigated land included the installation of 22,500 feet of irrigation pipeline and the installation of five sprinkler irrigation systems and three surface systems.

Cooperators in the District carried out conservation cropping systems on 22,500 acres, minimum tillage on 5090 acres, and crop residue management on 21,000 acres. A total of over 200,000 acres has now been reported as having adequate conservation treatment applied, Lieb continued.

Kicking The Dry Air Habit Baptists Plan Conference

Homeowners have at last decided to kick the dry air habit. According to one news report, the sale of home humidifiers is expected to top $800,000 in 1972.

People are recognizing they must have proper humidification for optimum comfort during the heating season. The need for a humidifier stems from modern heating systems, which rob the air of all moisture leaving the house dry and its occupants uncomfortable.

Besides producing discomfort, dry houses also cause pianos to go out of tune, raise fuel bills and produce static electricity. Dry air pulls moisture from the walls causing plaster to crack, and absorbs it from furniture, causing it to come unglued.

A simple test, developed by a leading manufacturer, can help home owners determine whether or not they need a humidifier. Drop three ice cubes into a glass, add water and stir. If moisture doesn't form on the outside of the glass within three minutes, your home needs a humidifier.

This test should not be conducted in the kitchen where cooking vapors might give a humidity level different from the remainder of the house. For best results, home temperature should be 72-75 degrees when making the test.

Today's humidifiers can be purchased in mini, portable and standard sizes and in handsome cabinets of varied styles that are attractive in any home decor.

At home locate a humidifier along a warm inside wall. But guard against over humidification for a prolonged period of time, which is equally undesirable as overly dry air. If condensation forms on windows or in other areas of the home during periods of extreme cold, set the humidifier thermostat at a lower level.
