T has been said by an eminent scientist that "electricity is life." Certainly today it is man's greatest ally in almost everything he does.

Electricity builds his skyscrapers, lights his home, turns the wheels of his industries, makes his clothes and afterwards washes and irons them, sweeps the floors of his home, makes his toast and coffee, milks the cows, pumps the water, cools the refrigerator, runs the fans, operates his transportation systems, bridges the ocean with his voice, and, in electrotherapeutics, actually becomes the giver or saver of life by making possible diagnoses, treatments and operations heretofore beyond the reach of science.

It is the happy privilege of this company to supply this modern partner of man in West Texas from gigantic generating stations and distributed over more than 2,000 miles of transmission

New Markets for Cotton

King Cotton has greatly extended his dominions in the industrial field in recent years and his scouts are constantly looking for new regions to conener, says the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, The fiber has ten thousand uses and more are being discovered every year. These new uses and the extension of old uses have maintained or increase per capita consumption of cotton in spite of the reduced dimensions of women's dresses and competition from other textiles.

Formerly, cotton was used almost entirely for clothing, but other uses are taking an increasing share of the crop. Among the many industrial outlets are automobile tires, auto bodies, cotton bagging and baling, airplane cloths, rubber goods, artificial leather, awnings, wall coverings, traffic markers, power belting, electrical insulators, cleavage and binder cloths in road construction, gears, truck wheels, and other machinery parts.

Tire production in the United States requires about 500,000 bales of cotton annually. In 1927, 219,000,000 pounds of cotton fabrics were used in tire production, according to the Rubber Association of American. Cotton is used also by the auto industry for upholstery, tops, curtains, carpets, tire covers, padding, linings, electrical insulation, rubber tubing, and brake bands. All these uses were relatively unimportant twenty years ago.

Cotton bags used in the wholesale grocery trade for sugar, flour, salt, coffee, potatoes, and similar commodities require about 200,000 bales of raw cotton and waste every year. The cement industry consumes cotton bags equivalent to about 45,000 bales, the bakery trade, 20,000 bales, and the fertilizer industry, 4,000 bales. Bags for handling coal, mail and money also take small amounts. It is estimated that if cotton bags were used for packaging all commodities to which they are adapted in the wholesale grocery trade alone, about 600,000 bales of raw cotton and waste would be required an-

If cotton cloth were used as a bale covering on 60 per cent of the average cotton crop, about 120,000 bales would be required for bagging. It is estimated that the withdrawal of this amount, chiefly of low grades, from the supply would raise the seasonal average price of cotton by about 14 cent a pound, or $1.25 a bale. This would be about enough to pay for the covering, so that producers in the aggregate would, in effect, get their bagging without cost. Tests have shown that cotton has advantages over jute bagging through making a neater package, reducing dead weight and lessening waste in removing from the bale, but jute coverings cost less except in years of extremely low cotton prices. Attempts are being made to produce a light extremely low cotton prices. Attempts are being made to produce a light cotton bagging that can be sold in competition with jute.

Cotton textiles are more extensively used in aviation than any other fabric and this use is growing rapidly. We lightness, strength, durability under vibration, ease of repair and how cost make it the best textile for this purpose. The outer covering of the Graf Zeppelin contained 20,000 square yards of cotton cloth and 40,000 square yards were used in its 30 gas cells. Cotton manufacturers have found it possible to increase the popularity of cotton clothing the outer some attention to design, harmonizing patterns with style tends of the color and using connectitive fibers with cot-faster colors and using competitive fibers with cotthe result of these efforts, cotton dresses are in greater vogue at nt than for several years. The use of 108-inch bedsheets rather than the 90-inch length sometimes sold is a means of extending the use of coilon in an old and standard product, and opens up an additional outlet for 30,000,000 square yards of wide sheeting annually. Awning manufacturers have launched a three-year campaign to increase the use of their product and estimate the possible gain in their market at 25,000,000 square yards annually. The use of cotton traffic markers in place of paint on city streets is estimated to require 5,000,000 square yards of cotton fabric a year. Cloth to make a cleavage plane in cement roads will take about 5,000,000 square yards this year and its use as a binder in putting an asphalt surface on ordinary roads opens up an immense Every mile of such road would use a minimum of 3,520 square

The United States Department of Agriculture, the Department of Com merce, and the Cotton Textile Institute are co-operating in a survey of the utilization of cotton, trying to find in what industries it is used and where its use may be extended. They have found cotton being used in 150 different ways on the farm, aside from the household. Household uses, aside from ciothing, number over 100. Railroads use cotton in over 40 different ways. Building trades make considerable use of cotton. Modern steamboats use much more cotton goods than sailing vessels.

nt of new uses and the extension of old uses are essential to sustained progress of the cotton industry from the standpoint of both aton producers and manufacturers, the Foundation asserts. Efforts in this direction deserve warm support.

Make Cotton Meet the Mill Demand

Cotton farmers could add apprecibly to their income from this crop producing the types of cotton spinwant, and marketing it on a uality basis, states the Sears-Roe-ock Agricultural Foundation. The dence shows that American mills better cotton than the average of grades and staples produced in United States and the mill ded for higher quality that is inhigh quality cotton range up to to 8 cents for strict middling 1% staple over the price paid for dling % inch cotton.

Reniamin Loses Valuable Buildings

The latter part of the past week Benjamin suffered a rather heavy loss by fire. The Beavers Drug Store and the P.&T. Grocery and Dry Goods Store being each totally destroyed by uncontrollable flames that were discovered at about 1:30 on Thursday morning. The Grocery and Dry Goods store was partly owned by Ferris Glenn, a former resident of this city, having been local manager of the West Texas Utilities Co. here up to the time of having embarked in business in the neighboring town. His friends here will sympathize with Mr. Glenn in his misfortune just at the time when he was trying to gain a footing in commercial lines. He was away at Lubbock with a relative who was quite ill at the time of the fire. It is said that the buildings will be reconstructed at once.

Labor Head Asks Nation's Workers to Support Red Cross

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in Washington, calls upon the workers of the nation to support the twelfth annual roll call of the American Red Cross, November 11-29, in the following statement

"Through the American Red Cross we find expression for some f our noblest ideals. It is an etfective instrument for magnifying many times our personal service to humanity.

"In the face of great disasters, when the injured and homeless run into the thousands, there is little we can do individually. Consolidatstrength through member ship in this great organization, our opportunity for service is unlim-

We must not forget that every day is a day of disaster to thouands. Into homes where disaster strikes your Red Cross goes in your name to be friend and counselor to

Federation of Labor, I hope and feel confident that the workers of

Unfortunately, much of the cotton trop is sold in local markets at a "hog-round" basis of middling cotjon of %-inch staple. In such markyrs, growers who have produced cotion of superior grade and length do jot get the benefit of the premium which spinners pay for such cotton. This method, coupled with the higher rield of shorter cotton, discourages improvement. Cotton sold through copperative associations is paid for on a graded basis and it is probable that he tendency to pay a premium for superior cotton in local markets is

The Foundation adds that to make he movement to improve the quality cotton wholly successful, it will necessary to develop varieties of 1-16-inch or longer staple that will squal the shorter cotton in yield and he practice of paying each grower or the kind of cotton he delivers nust be more generally used.
