Many folks residing within this section kept themselves in readiness for several hours on Tuesday to take to their storm cellars, and it is likely that many of them spent several hours underground, and were entirely justifiable in so doing, as the barometer reached a very low level here for several hours and kept the citizenry wondering just what was going to happen.

Drug Stores Here Make Drastic Cut In Price Of Drugs

"I can buy I-in Wichita Falls for such and such a price" is a remark that we've all heard. Or it may be Abilene, Dallas or Fort Worth, but it is quite common to hear folks comment on the fact that they can buy merchandise in the larger cities at a lower price than it can be purchased in Munday.

THINKING OUT LOUD

The cyclops of this column is in bad again, all because the linotype operator made a little mistake last week.

Some days ago, or we should say nights ago, unscrupulous burglars broke into a barn of one of the neighbors of Mayor Grover Cleveland Jones and took therefrom, under the cloak of darkness, a goodly quantity of cotton seed.

But our operator erred in making the initials on the little ad read "G. C." Jones.

Naturally, lots of folks jumped at the conclusion that this was some other than Grover Cleveland Jones, mayor of Rouston City, and for the past few days he has been busy informing eager buyers of seed that he had no seed to sell, and, in fact, would have to buy some himself.

Yes, Mayor Grover Cleveland Jones has no cotton seed for sale.

Peter Mulneaux Sees Dark Cloud On Political Horizon

Peter Mulneaux is a distinguished member of Texas' Fourth Estate. He is a trained observer of things, an economist of note, and a writer of the highest order.

For twenty years I have been a rather close observer of events in Texas at intimate range, and I speak deliberately, with a precise consciousness of the full meaning of my words, that I have never seen such a dark and threatening cloud on the economic horizon as the recent spread among Texas political leaders of the utterly false and entirely unfounded belief that Texas industry and commerce have developed sufficiently to warrant placing upon them the entire burden of the support of the State Government with safety.

New Multi-Cold Frigidaire Latest Thing On Market

much for leaving the eggs, for that was unusual, but she would rather they would visit when she is at home.

Evidently Chinese Boy Has No Use for 'Phone

Telephone service in Shanghai, with the subscribers talking half a dozen languages and the operators all Chinese, has been the target of complaint.

The latest voice raised is that of a Chinese youth, the operator of a private switchboard in a foreign firm. He stated, in that peculiar phrasing known only to his kind, as follows:

"For long time now this telephone no good and everybody fight me. This not my fault. I proper boy, but telephone make everybody angry and everybody fight everybody else. Popular Weather Signs
Decried by Forecaster

"There's a lot of pagan superstition about many of the weather signs that people like to believe in," said a weather forecaster recently.

"There are a score of rural sayings, especially when winter is on, as to how severe it will be. The groundhog is credited with miraculous wisdom. Such ideas go back for centuries.

"Lots of people believe that the position of the new moon is a sure foreteller of weather. The saying is that if the new moon stands upright, the thin crescent in a vertical position, the weather will be dry for the great part of the coming month. On the other hand, if the new moon recedes on its back, in the shape of a shallow cup, that means a month of rainy weather.

"All the pioneers in this country firmly believed that, and out in the country districts you will find many people who today are equally credulous. Unfortunately, the idea has no basis in fact. Weather bureau records, if examined, will completely dispense any such ideas."—New York Sun.

"Grandeur That Was Rome"

Rome, the eternal city, offers such a multitude of sights that to visit every one worth while would take days or even weeks. Most important among the places to see are the Colosseum, the Forum, St. Peter's, the Vatican, the Catacombs, the Baths of Caracalla and the castle of St. Angelo. The works of art in Rome are innumerable and include statues and paintings by Bernini, Giotto, Raphael, Perugino and Botticelli. Other marvels of the city are the Appian way, queen of all ancient roads, which was built in 312 B. C. and was loaded with traffic for all of the known eastern world; also the Claudian aqueducts, ancient engine-works triumphs, which still supply Rome with water.

Beautiful Venice

Of all the beautiful cities in the world none can rival Venice and its lagoons. Artists and poets of all ages have felt the charm of this unique city, where genius and nature have met to create a perfect harmony. The square of St. Mark, with its basilica embellished with gold; the solemn lines of the procuratie; the ducal palace; the Grand Canal, with its marble palaces, whose decorations seem copied from the famous lacres of Byzantium and Turco; the churches and bridges; and the gondolas slipping silently through the water—all arouse in the visitor intense emotions and admiration.

"Itching Palm"

It takes a lot of people to make a world. All people of all sorts, in all walks of life, unfortunately are said to be possessed of itching palms—that is, hands ever ready to receive a bribe.

That this is not a distinctly modern tendency is indicated by the fact that even in Shakespeare's day it was a symptom well known—if we are to judge from the number of recorded instances, one of which is in the bard's own Julius Caesar, 4.

The phrase itself is an allusion to the superstition that an itching hand is a forerunner of the receipt of money.—Kansas City Times.

Quaint Inn Signs

"Help Me Through" is the name of a licensed house at Hilton, Louisiana, England. Its sign depicts a globe with the head and feet of a man protruding at the top and bottom respectively. There is also "Same Yet" in Simister lane, Rhodes, Laos. The original name of the house was "The Red Inn." It was being reconstructed and when a sign writer asked what name was required, he received the reply, "Same yet," and forthwith complied. And so it remains to this day.

Voice of Ewy

At a dinner one of the speakers was exceptionally long winded. At the end of half an hour the trustee chairman could stand the flow no longer. He changed his bell violently and the orator was so surprised that he sat down without completing his last sentence.

A guest sitting next to the chairman whispered with a sigh, "I wish I had a bell like that at home."

Put One Over on the Radio Guys

By M. L. DE VRIES

OFFICER KEARNEY had a personal, intense dislike for radios, which he called raddios and which, he said, were keeping a good man down. He explained it all to the pale clerk who led him to the rear of the shop. "It don't give us little guys a chance. I been needin' a citation to get my promotion, but there ain't never anything doing; they got a raddio and the chief at headquarters sends 'em the word when there's a hold-up or a murder and it's all over with by the time an ordinary guy gets his dogs movin'."

"Well, there's no law makin' you buy one if you don't like 'em," the clerk stated.

"The h—l there ain't—Mrs. Lester Kearney."

"Oh!" said the clerk. "I've heard of such cases."

"I can't afford it but she says you aren't in it any more unless you've got one," Officer Kearney stated. "So trot 'em out."

They moved toward the rear of the store. Suddenly the clerk stopped. "Who sent you here?"

"Why," the officer, responded, "my friend Tiny did—Tiny Burke. Said you and he was slockicks. He gave me the address, 802 Whiting street and said you'd treat me right."

"Ah, yes—good old Tiny."

They stopped before one of the machines lined against the wall, and the clerk adjusted the dial. When sound came he assumed a pose of rapt attention.

"It bearded that the item was market quotations on bugs, wheat and corn from WHOZ."

"Seems like a powerful machine. Is there a price?"

"—one hundred fifty," came glibly.

"Cheap enough for a trusty. How come?"

The clerk winked. "To our friends, you understand. And anybody who's a friend of Tiny is a friend of mine. All right?"

"Oh, K. Any music in the air?"

The clerk shifted the dial. There was a gruff rumble and the machine sent forth a low growl like 'ons in pain.

"Patrol number eight—go to 683 Bombay—"

The clerk hesitated only an instant. "That ain't music, I'm sure of that. I was tryin' to get—"

Officer Kearney put out a restraining hand. He seemed puzzled. "I'd know that voice in a wind storm, and I'll eat my badge for a rate lunch if it ain't Sergeant Carey."

"Yeah? They send out reports from the police station to the patrol. It's a good machine what'll pick that up. It's best for these here burglars, too. The cops are right on their necks."

"That's what I was sayin'," said Kearney. "I don't give us plain hoodlars a chance."

The voice droned on, sending out the startling vice and crime incidents which a large city breeds. "A woman jumped from the fifteenth story of the Liberty hotel. See Moran. He reported it. Number 12 get this. Radio store at 802 Whiting, send up. Look for Jackie Nack. He loves radios. Reported by the garage next door. Owner tied up in the rear room but he got to a window. He's layin' low until you get there."

The store was very quiet, except for the drone of the broadcaster's voice. For a moment both men looked startled. Then the clerk grinned.

"Holy smoke! That's this dump. Somebody pulled a boner. They're drunk, I tell you. Them cops are just plain dumb. We'll have the whole force on our necks in a minute."

"Just minute, son—come back here a minute."

The clerk stopped, his back turned on the officer. For an instant he stood rooted to the spot, then he shrugged and returned. The officer continued: "They're dumb—sure. They got the wrong number. All cops are dumb. It's the burglars that are the wise guys. Guys like this Jackie Nack. You know him?"

"Sure, all us radio stores are on the lookout for him. A slick guy, about my size."

"Well, say, now, I wonder—"

The clerk grinned again. "I follow you, chief. You've got a notion—maybe you'd like to put the bracelets on me?"

Officer Kearney, rising, "Yes, I would." He fished a pair of handcuffs and in an instant slipped them expertly around the man's wrists.

"Cooked," Jackie Nack said, sheepishly.

"Yeah, cooked. We're all dumb, Jackie, all dumb. It ain't only the cops." He raised his voice and called to the rear of the store: "Oh, Tiny—come on. I got him."

Jackie looked crestfallen.

"See in that guy Tiny Burke, this here friend of yours, the same one that I—"

"Sure, Jackie. He's the guy you hogged in the back room. He gave me the high sign through the window, so I came in after tellin' the garage man to send in the alarm. I wanted those radio guys to get here after it was all over with. Thanks for the demonstration, Jackie. I guess I can afford one now."

"I hope it drives you nutty," said Jackie graciously as the patrol screamed to a stop.

Luckiest Day of His Life, He Says

"I used to have to get up six and eight times every night on account of my kidneys, and mornings I was tired out and nervous. Headaches, lumbagoes and rheumatic pains in my arms and legs had the county agent lay off two lines on the higher land of his place. The two terraces enclosed 35 acres of the 100 acre farm. On this 35 acres fifteen bales of cotton were produced while in the remaining 65 acres only eleven bales of cotton were produced.

Mr. Eiland states that his tenant didn't like the idea of the crooked rows so the tenant was allowed to farm 35 acres for day labor and the other 65 on share-crop basis. The tenant after seeing the last year's results, made the statement to Mr. Eiland that he wanted the land that he was to cultivate this year to be located in the "crooked row" portion of the farm.—C. "CROOKED ROWS" SHOW HIGH YIELDS

Late last spring C. A. Eiland had the county agent lay off two lines on the higher land of his place. The two terraces enclosed 35 acres of the 100 acre farm. On this 35 acres fifteen bales of cotton were produced while in the remaining 65 acres only eleven bales of cotton were produced.

The clerk winked. "To our friends, you understand. And anybody who's a friend of Tiny is a friend of mine. All right?"

"Oh, K. Any music in the air?"

The clerk shifted the dial. There was a gruff rumble and the machine sent forth a low growl like 'ons in pain.

"Patrol number eight—go to 683 Bombay—"

The clerk hesitated only an instant. "That ain't music, I'm sure of that. I was tryin' to get—"

Officer Kearney put out a restraining hand. He seemed puzzled. "I'd know that voice in a wind storm, and I'll eat my badge for a rate lunch if it ain't Sergeant Carey."

"Yeah? They send out reports from the police station to the patrol. It's a good machine what'll pick that up. It's best for these here burglars, too. The cops are right on their necks."

"That's what I was sayin'," said Kearney. "I don't give us plain hoodlars a chance."

The voice droned on, sending out the startling vice and crime incidents which a large city breeds. "A woman jumped from the fifteenth story of the Liberty hotel. See Moran. He reported it. Number 12 get this. Radio store at 802 Whiting, send up. Look for Jackie Nack. He loves radios. Reported by the garage next door. Owner tied up in the rear room but he got to a window. He's layin' low until you get there."

The store was very quiet, except for the drone of the broadcaster's voice. For a moment both men looked startled. Then the clerk grinned.

"Holy smoke! That's this dump. Somebody pulled a boner. They're drunk, I tell you. Them cops are just plain dumb. We'll have the whole force on our necks in a minute."

"Just minute, son—come back here a minute."

Tim Reclaimed His Sarey

By CHARLES S. REID

The shadows were growing long among the hills. Over the rugged trail leading upward from Cheochee valley into the hills trudged a man. There was a buoyancy in his step, and a poise of his head which indicated abounding joy. Tim Wilson was getting home again after an absence of five years in the West, and it was more than a homecoming to him that a girl awaited him by all the virtue of a promise made those five years before. Tim had told her that he would wrench from the grasp of the world five thousand dollars before he returned to claim her. Tim had the five thousand now in a bulky roll of fifty one-hundred-dollar bills.

Nature had gathered the sweetness of the mountain flowers and the brightness of the sunshine to mould the beauty of Sarey Goodman; and Tim had carried the memory of it in his mind every day of the struggle and hard application of his five years of service in fortune hunting.

Old Hollis Goodman had built his cabin a little plot between the hills, and facing the Sheepsnope cliff, more than fifty years before; and here Sarey would be waiting for Tim. The trail wound about the base of the cliff; but Tim chose to climb to the top of the rock, so that he might first gaze down upon the cabin that had sheltered Sarey for all these years.

Twilight was settling about the cabin. Old "Ringold," Sarey's dog, was lying asleep in front of the cabin door. Ringold was older but still faithful. Even a dog must be faithful to Sarey Goodman! Tim stood for some moments, his gaze dwelling upon the peaceful scene and the spot of his anticipated great joy.

"Sarey!" he murmured. As if in answer to his heart call, a young woman came and stood framed in the doorway. Once more Tim's lips moved to utter the beloved name aloud. The girl was shading her eyes with her hand, and was gazing down the mountain trail as if expecting some one. Tim's heart thumped in his breast. He pictured Sarey standing this very evening looking for his return. Now the about rose to his lips, but died away unuttered. Some one else was burying up the trail to meet the girl.

Tim Wilson slumped to his knees on the rock. As the young couple walked arm in arm to the cabin door, Tim's hand crept down into his trousers pocket and drew forth the roll of bills he had treasured there. He tried to crush them, but the bulky roll refused to be compressed. Opening his palm he looked down upon the greenish paper mass. Slowly regaining his feet he advanced to the narrow edge of the cliff, where he stood for a moment convulsed in body and soul over the story which the little scene below seemed to have revealed.

Again he glanced at the roll in his opening palm. It was held together by a stout rubber band. Here were the savings of five years of toil and privations, gathered together for Sarey. He had brought it thus that he might lay it upon her palm. "Well, she—she'll have it, as my parting gift," he mused. Bending his body backward for a supreme effort, and sending his right arm through a sweeping arc, he hurled the package of currency with perfect aim toward the doorway of the cabin. As a bird winging homeward to its nest the roll landed upon the floor with a little thud, attracting the attention of all those within. A stooped old man, two young women and a young man. The elder of the girls seized the strange object from the floor.

"Lord, what a lot of money!" she exclaimed, nuzzling the roll to her bosom. "I wonder—"

Suddenly she darted from the cabin into the yard beyond. Hating a few feet from the step she looked all about her.

"Tim," she shouted; "oh, Tim!" Then a moment's sight—getting even louder toward daylight. Then she real holiday begins.

Society

Mrs. Billingsley and Mrs. Campbell Entertain

Using great clusters of red roses in tall floor baskets, bowls and vases as decorations the home of Mrs. M. F. Billingsley was like unto a rose garden Tuesday afternoon when she and Mrs. J. C. Campbell entertained with an "84" party. Talley cards were dainty hand painted roses and the refreshment plate held frozen shebet and angel food with clusters of pink roses as favors.

Those enjoying this delightful occasion were Misses W. H. Atkinson, E. M. Ammon, R. D. Atkinson, W. R. Aycock, S. A. Bowden, Chester Bowden, J. C. Borien, T. G. Benge, F. S. Branch, F. O. Campbell, Frank Coxsey, W. H. Chapman, G. H. Craig, W. S. Dickerson, R. B. Davy, Glen Dobbs, E. Duval, C. A. Eiland, G. R. Eiland, W. D. Ford, O. F. Greer, H. P. Hill, Tom Haney, D. E. Holder, Carroll Hopkins, Louise Ingram, John Ed Jones, J. A. Kennedy, J. D. Kethley, John Lane, H. T. Maples, C. L. Mayes, Erin McGraw, S. E. McStay, E. S. McCord, Bess Neff, J. E. Reeves, M. H. Reeves, J. W. Ryan, H. H. Riley, J. C. Spann, Oscar Spann, E. C. Wyche and Florence Williams.

In the meantime Tim Wilson lay a crumpled heap not twenty steps away, with a sprained ankle. A loose stone had rolled from beneath his foot, when he hurled the roll of bills into the cabin doorway; and his body had shot downward to the rocks below. A moment later he would have started down out of the hills again forever. On hearing his name called he sat up, and grinned cynically. But the movement of his body had not escaped the girl's attention; and the next moment she was beside him.

"Yeb, Sarey! I'm back again; but God, I wish I hadn't come!" "For the land sakes, Tim Wilson; what yuh talkin' about?" "Tim was silent a moment. "Well, Sarey; I—I got a busted foot; and—and—who's yuh man, Sarey?" Sarey gazed down upon him.

"The Lord he's yuh, Tim Wilson; as if I'd ever had any other man but yuh?" "Tim shrugged himself quickly to his full height on one foot. "Didn't I see yuh in the arms of a man?" Sarey laughed, and the echo of it came back from the ravine below in a silvery peal. "That was little Sis meetin' her man. She's grown up and got married since you left, Tim."

"Lord, Sarey; I'd ha' been gone away from here if I hadn't got this foot busted. Thank God I got that tumbled!"

Good Word for Business
Living in the East has, perhaps, a corrupting influence upon a white man, but I must confess that, since I was in China, I have regarded business as one of the best qualities of which men in the mass are capable.—Bertrand Russell in the Thinker.

Briton Peasant Takes Holiday Fun Seriously
If you are in France and in Brittany and in Quimper over a holiday day, mark a tradition. You will discover that festivities begin at sunset the night before. Peasants from all the country round dress in their best and come into town in their carts and wagons. The small corner cafes in the old part of town are full of them.

Everywhere drinks elder—it is the national beverage of Brittany. Outside in one of the open squares a couple of sturdy barrels are set up with chocks upon them for the musicians.

From these precocious parties the baggage and the fiddler and the fellow with a horn play fast and furiously for the dancers. As the dance gets more and more exciting some of the young men kick off their wooden shoes and hop around in their socks, but every one is most skillful in keeping on their heavy wooden shanks.

They stay up late the night before a holiday. There are sounds of clapping shoes and singing and groaning all night—getting even louder toward daylight. Then the real holiday begins.

U. S. Rogers, who has been in the Silverton country for several weeks assisting his son-in-law, Gordon Swatt, in building a residence on the farm he recently purchased there, has returned home. Mr. and Mrs. Swatt have moved to their new plains home.

Rural Aid Law
 I am and have always been in favor of appropriations made for the rural schools but I am in favor of amending our present rural aid law, so that the boys and girls who happen to live in the outlying country districts can have the same advantages as those who are more fortunately situated and live in the larger districts. Those who live in these smaller districts and who do not get the advantages of the present rural aid, contribute the same amount accordingly as those who live in the larger districts, and it is unfair the way the present system is operated.

I believe that the law ought to be amended so that those who live in the smaller school districts receive their prorata share of rural aid regardless of the number of scholars who live in the district and the amount of special school taxes they pay or the kind of building which they may have. The present law is unfair, unjust and discriminatory.

Oil Tax
 I am opposed to what is known as the gross production tax on oil.

I believe that this tax has more to do with the retarding of the development of this country than any other law that the legislature has ever passed. I would like to see this law repealed. It does not effect the big companies like it does the little independent operators. Of course the big companies have to pay just the same as the little operators, but they are in a position to absorb it and hence escape it. I was a member of the legislature that passed this law. The house passed it providing for a three per cent gross production tax. It went to the senate and was amended. The senate amended it providing for a two per cent tax. It was referred to free conference committee of both houses. I was a member of this committee and held a deciding vote as to whether the committee would recommend the two or the three cent tax back to the legislature and voted to recommend it back at two. I did this because I knew it was the best that we could do at the time.

Judicial Reform
 With reference to judicial reform, I recognize, as every one else, that there is something vitally wrong with our judicial system. I believe with the passage of just a few simple laws that many of the obstacles that appear and thwart justice could be removed. I believe that in criminal cases that we ought to follow the Federal procedure. I mean by that that the jury ought to pass only on the guilt or innocence of the defendant, leaving the question of punishment to the judge, except that I believe that in many cases where the death penalty may be inflicted that the jury may be permitted to recommend mercy and that the judge be bound to follow such recommendation. I believe that a statute of this kind would do more toward meting out justice and correcting some of the evils that exist in our system than any other thing. I further believe that cases ought to be appealed on the Q. and A. record, that bills of exemption ought to be cut out altogether, except where it is necessary to show some matter not otherwise appearing of record. This would save lots of time, work and expense.

I am in favor of a law that will permit a jury to return a verdict when nine or more of the jurors are agreed, that is, that a unanimous verdict would not be required in either Civil or Criminal cases tried in the District Court, except that in all capital cases where the death penalty is assessed that all twelve of the jurors must be unanimously in favor of a conviction and that the death penalty should be inflicted. In every county in Texas there are a number of mistrials every year because one or two or three of the men on the jury do not agree with the balance of the jurors.

Each of these mistrials means expense of paying out jury fees and often times an enormous expense to the state to bring witnesses from distant part to testify. It is a well known fact that nearly all of the mistrials result in cases where as many as nine of the jurors were agreed.

I believe that such a law would save the people of Texas at least a million dollars a year. Furthermore such a law would make jury tampering practically impossible.

If there should be any constitutional inhibition with reference to the above statutes then I am in favor of submitting it in the form of an amendment to the people whom I am sure will gladly support an amendment to enable the legislature to pass remedial legislation of this nature.

There are many things that may arise during this campaign that will be necessary for me to express myself on. Things that space will not allow me to make mention of at this time, and want to say to the voters of this district, regardless of whatever arises, that I am ready at all times to express my position on any and all public questions. I believe it is the duty of any man who seeks an office of this nature to be open and frank with the public.

I was born in this district thirty nine years ago, and I have never lived anywhere else. I have served the public in various capacities, in favor of submitting it in the form of an amendment to the people whom I am sure will gladly support an amendment to enable the legislature to pass remedial legislation of this nature. There are many things that may arise during this campaign that will be necessary for me to express myself on. Things that space will not allow me to make mention of at this time, and want to say to the voters of this district, regardless of whatever arises, that I am ready at all times to express my position on any and all public questions. I believe it is the duty of any man who seeks an office of this nature to be open and frank with the public. I was born in this district thirty nine years ago, and I have never lived anywhere else. I have served the public in various capacities, in favor of submitting it in the Judge, and Clay and Archer as representative for three terms. I believe that I am qualified to represent this district in the senate, however, I realize that the interest of this district is probably more varied than any other district in the state, but as I said before, having been reared here I am familiar with conditions that exist and believe with all my past experience as a legislator that I am capable of rendering to this district intelligent and efficient service, and if elected will do my very best to prove faithful to the trust reposed in me.

Thanking you for your influence and support I submit my candidacy subject to the action of the democratic primary.

TURKEY INDUSTRY GROWS IN NEVADA

U. S. Expert Finds It Easier With Small Flock Unit.

Nevada is building up a solid turkey producing industry in a logical way, in the opinion of H. L. Shrader, extension poultry specialist of the United States Department of Agriculture, who recently paid a visit to this state.

The growing of the holiday bird in Nevada is on a farm flock basis, the expert states, with from 150 to 300 birds, as a rule, being raised along with other crops. It is easier with the small flock unit produced in co-operation with other crops, according to the federal man, to raise the type of high-grade bird for which Nevada is becoming known.

Two of the best feeds for turkeys are milk and alfalfa, and these, Shrader said, being produced on the farm with the turkeys, afford good feed at a low cost. With such small flocks, he said, the farm wife can take care of a good share of the work, thus cutting costs, as otherwise extra labor might have to be hired.

The outlook for expansion in the industry in Nevada is good, the specialist stated. Nevada conditions, he believes are well suited to turkey production.

"Turkeys and chickens should never be run together," he declared, explaining that parasites, if the harmful to chickens, but deadly to the broiler, are carried by the chickens. Turkeys should be kept far from the farmhouse, he believes.

Sanitation is another means of keeping turkeys disease-free, he stated.

Buy Tested Cod Liver Oil for Laying Fowls

The use of cod liver oil in feeding laying hens during winter months and in raising young chicks during the early spring is one of the recent developments in poultry production. Practically every one who has used a good quality product has found that it has been helpful in keeping up the vitality of the flock, preventing leg weakness in chicks and securing a better texture of shell with eggs.

The reason for the value of this product is largely due to the vitamin D which it contains. Vitamin D is the nutrient for sunshine. It helps fowls to properly absorb the minerals which they consume. Without vitamin D or substitute, fowls will fail properly to absorb minerals, even though they may be abundantly supplied.

The popularity of cod liver oil has encouraged the use of many substitutes. The fishy odor which is characteristic of many of these products is not a guarantee that they are of any particular value from the standpoint of being a substitute for sunshine. There is even a good deal of difference in the efficiency of cod liver oil, so it is well to buy a product that is either tested for vitamin content or guaranteed to give satisfaction.

Clean Ground Essential for Turkey Success

Recent findings have shown that the organism which causes blackhead in turkeys lives in the soil. Consequently if turkeys are raised on contaminated soil they can hardly escape the disease. The danger will be a large extent be covered if a three-year rotation is followed.

Experimental findings have shown that the round worm found in chickens is a menace to the turkey. It is believed that if the young turkeys are affected with round worms the injury they do to the lining of the intestinal walls is a sufficient to permit the entrance of blackhead organisms into the blood stream, thus infecting the bird with the incurable disease and the one most dreaded by turkey breeders. The remedy, therefore, is to keep the young turkeys on clean ground and entirely separate from chickens.

Sunlight for Poultry Flock Quite Essential

During the winter months the location and adjustment of windows in the laying house are very important. There should be windows in each end of the house so that sunlight will strike the entire floor some time during the day. Along the south wall should be a large number of windows, and it is preferable that these be made of a high grade glass substitute which permits the entrance of the maximum amount of ultra-violet ray. Masonry and ordinary glass are not satisfactory for this purpose. These windows should be well fitted and should be kept clean as the ultra-violet ray does not penetrate through dirt and dirt. Furthermore it is better that they be arranged so that they can be taken down during the summer months and not subjected to weathering.

Yellow Corn Best

Yellow corn is especially valuable for winter feeding on account of its fattening qualities and vitamins content. If possible, at least half of the grain feed should be yellow corn. If white corn, wheat, kafir, or other farm grains are fed instead of yellow corn, alfalfa should be added to the rations to help supply vitamins. Alfalfa leaves or alfalfa meal will replace the vitamins of yellow corn if the latter is not available. The winter ration must contain protein.

MAY AND JUNE HATCHED CHICKS MONEY MAKERS IN NOVEMBER

Years ago, May and June chicks were "natural". We couldn't raise them earlier because we couldn't get them "out-of-doors." Cod liver oil and advanced nutritional knowledge have bridged this gap, so they can now be raised indoors, early and more artificially. The late chick has become out of fashion, out of date. Every chick has to be "early", and every argument possible has been marshaled out and into line against late chicks.

However, reason dictates this fact: May and June hatched chicks will be money makers in November if they are given proper care, proper environment, proper feed and proper feeding. Perhaps those who are prejudiced against "warm weather" chicks will ask what is meant by a "program of proper care, environment, proper feed, and feeding." Such general terms might well be questioned!

Proper care of late chicks means giving them the same care that is now given early chicks. Is that asking too much? Proper care consists of a plan of reasonable sanitation as to cleaning the houses, cleaning drinking fountains, fresh water, dry litter, and above all else, regular periodic attention to a particular program of care.

Progressive feed manufacturers and agricultural colleges outline programs for the care of chicks. Adopt one of these plans and follow it religiously. Nothing is ever successfully raised without care, no matter the season!

Proper environment of late chicks includes sufficient room with plenty of fresh air so they will not crowd and sweat at night, a range separate from other chickens, and clean ground with shade. A field of half grown corn will provide shade and frequent cultivation will keep the ground clean.

Summer time offers inexpensive and ideal environment factors that are far superior to the confinement necessary to early brooding. All other things being equal, range raised chickens will be harder than those reared in confinement. Proper feed means feeding throughout the summer a quality growing mash and scratch feed, both containing a good variety of ingredients to supply all a growing bird requires for ideal development. Any concoction of a mash ration, any mixture of poor quality scratch grains will not do the job.

The soundest test of a good poultryman is whether or not he can raise a good batch of pullets year in and year out consistently. All of those who are poultrymen by this test are very particular about their rations usually feeding the highest quality commercial rations on the market.

A May or June chick, fed a high quality mash and scratch ration will be full-grown, solid, well-feathered, vigorous in health, and laying marketable eggs in November. But it can't be done without good feed. It can't be done by feeding growing mash half of the summer and allowing the pullets to coast down hill during the other half.

Given proper care, environment, and feed, there still remains proper feeding. A good feed can be made ineffective by the use of poor feeding judgment. Two dairymen alternately feeding the same herd of cows the same feed vary in the amount of milk they produce. The variable factor is neither the cows nor the feed, but the actual feeding. Likewise with poultry, feeding practice is vital.

A major demand is for a regular schedule of feeding. Again, many of the large progressive feed concerns and agricultural colleges outline plans of feeding, and it is a wise act indeed to adopt and follow one of these tested plans.

Yes, with proper care, environment, feed and feeding, May and June hatched pullets will be money makers in November.

Fly Is Dangerous AS Germ Carrier

The fly is a most deadly insect, carrying millions of disease germs on its feet and legs, says a local official of the Gulf Refining Company. It drags its dirty sticky feet and legs over filth and refuse and then enters the home and contaminates the food on the table and leaves its dirty, filthy disease germs as it alights on children and babies.

To not sweat the fly—its diseased and exposed body, when crushed, is still a danger to the health of your family. Kill flies in the room by using one of the better types of insect spray, which have been developed and marketed in the past three or four years by the large oil refining companies, who are now advertising their products in this paper.

POULTRY FACTS

FRESH AIR CURES CHICKENS' COLDS

Ventilation and Dry Litter Will Prevent Troubles.

Chickens are subject to the same ailments as humans, for it makes them susceptible to colds. Poultrymen should try to avoid conditions that will bring on colds, says Dr. E. L. Bennett of the New York State College of Veterinary Medicine at Cornell University.

In the head, in front of the brain cavity, are thin cones of bones located in chambers. The use of these chambers is to provide a space in which the inhaled air is warmed before it is taken into the lungs. When a chicken develops a simple cold, an excessive amount of secretion forms in these cavities. As this increases, the poor drainage of the cavities allows it to accumulate. This accumulation is an ideal place for bacteria to multiply and the resulting bacterial growth makes the foul odor which is often present in roosts.

A simple cold may be avoided or corrected by increasing the warmth with plenty of fresh air and providing plenty of dry litter. If the first stage is not checked the cold may end in roost with its characteristic head swelling and foul odors.

The opinion that roup is a contagious disease is not well founded, according to Doctor Bennett, for there is usually some underlying condition that is indirectly responsible. This may be tuberculosis, or worms, but whatever the cause it should be moved before a cure can be expected.

A third type of cold is more of a distinct disease, commonly known as bronchitis. This condition is acute and the birds die quickly. The cause of this disease is not known. The best treatment is to increase the temperature of the house, either by controlling the ventilation or by using brooder stoves. In the early part of the outbreak it is well to remove all sick birds and put them in heated brooder houses. Most of them will recover when placed in heated houses. Some disinfectants will give relief, but quick remedies should not be used.

Turkeys Thrive While Roosting in the Open

It is unnecessary to provide a house for turkeys though it is the habit of wisdom to have a shed handy into which they may be driven on extremely stormy nights. As a usual thing they will do better roosting out in the open even in quite severe weather.

Where only a small flock is kept 15 females may be mated with one male if he is unquestionably vigorous. If a flock of about 25 or 30 is kept, two males will be needed, but they should not be allowed to run with the flock at one time.

One should be allowed to run with the flock one day and the other the next.

The reason for this is that where both are allowed to mingle with the cock at the same time, they will fight until one of them becomes boss, after which he will do most of the mating and the flock will be very little better off so far as the fertility is concerned than if it had a single male.

Molasses for Chickens Is Found Profitable

When used in moderate amounts, cane molasses lowers the death rate and makes for better health and production in laying flocks, according to the test work conducted at the Ohio experiment station. The tests indicate that it can be used with profit as a substitute for not more than 10 per cent of the grain in the ration. Molasses contains no protein, but is rich in vitamins. If fed in larger amounts than 10 per cent of the ration, it was too laxative to be desirable and created an abnormal thirst. Professor Winters, who had charge of the test, believes that the addition of molasses to a poultry ration that contains no milk is of more value than when milk is fed. He recommends five per cent by weight as a desirable amount to use in well balanced laying and fattening rations.

Brooder Stoves Useful During Severe Winter

"The foster mother" of the little chicks last spring can serve a good purpose during the winter if the brooder stove is set up in the laying house, according to poultry department of Ohio State University.

Days when the temperature drops 40 or 50 degrees from the normal temperature so rapidly and can save a sudden drop in egg production. When the weather has moderated sufficiently the stove is allowed to go out and wait for another cold spell.

Prevent Cannibalism

Cannibalism may develop in a large bunch of chicks, no matter how completely fed or how free from parasites. The liberal use of fat is about as effective as anything in checking it. Watch many times a day for those that have been picked enough to draw blood and rub tar on the wound. If you can find anything that chicks dislike the taste of more than tar, use it. If this fails, try paring off the point of the upper mandible, using care not to get too deep.

The practice of reproducing the flock with eggs laid by hens incurs a better quality of chick than breeding from pullets.

Proper management in feeding and housing the flock are the most important measures in the control of roup.

Many turkeys are graded as number two or three out entirely because of a failure to furnish specimens, which is so scarce during the winter and early springtime.

Milk, sour or sweet, is excellent for brooding stock. Beef scrap or other animal meal may be left out if a plentiful supply of milk is available.

Larry Proved He Made Good

By NELLIE R. GATES

OF COURSE every one who reads his daily paper knows Lawrence Storm, Sr. Hardly a day passes that the famous "sugar tycoon" is not mentioned on the financial page. But unless you are trying your sugar on the exchange instead of over the counter, his exploits do not make interesting reading. But Larry, Jr.—Lollypop Larry—that is different story!

There is a lad who keeps the papers on the jump. Several newspaper men have made their reputations embellishing one of Lollypop Larry's escapades for their paper. He can spend money faster than his distinguished dad can make it or could, but that is a different story, too.

Naturally most of the girls were right on their toes to please this son of Croesus. He had had everything he had ever wanted in his twenty-three years handed to him on a silver platter, until he met Leta Bird, the girl who made the big hit as the sophisticated little sister to Concentric Circles.

"Why is it I can't make that kid fall for me, Ruthie?" she asked Ruth Kent, the attractive, efficient young girl who was his mother's private secretary, as she was giving him his tea one afternoon under a scarlet umbrella on the lawn of the Storm country house. "I've given her as good a rush as I ever tried on anyone."

Ruth stared at him from under arched brows. She and Larry had been best friends—and enemies—for years.

"Suppose you tell me, Larry," she said coolly, pouring herself a second cup of tea. "Just why you should expect a girl like Leta Bird to fall for you. Leta Bird, I happen to know, is a splendid girl who has worked hard to get where she is. Why on earth," she suddenly blazed out at him, "why don't you stick to your chorus girls and the silly little happenings you like so well? Why should a fine girl like Leta Bird want to fall for a panhandler?"

"A what?" Astonishment and anger were mingled in Larry's question. "A what did you call me, Ruthie?"

"A panhandler," defiantly. "What are you but a panhandler? Lollypop Larry who never did a day's work in his life. Who lives on his father's donations?"

"A panhandler," Larry said, that means a bum, a beggar.

"Well?"

"So that's what you think of me," "So that's what I think of you, Larry. And that's why honest, hard-working girls with ambitions to be something besides gold diggers, don't fall for you, Larry." Larry left home without even a good-by. For ten weeks no one heard a word from him. Even his family had no idea where he was or what he was doing. "But he can't be up to any foolishness," Mr. Storm said one afternoon, as they were discussing his absence in Ruth's presence. "Because the papers haven't been able to get hold of anything. And he hasn't drawn his allowance since he left. Those little notes that come each Monday morning saying he is all right and would come back and—

"If wishes were horses, pancake handlers would ride." Stepping out of the sun porch onto the wide veranda where the family were sitting Larry took his mother in his arms, shook hands with his father, then went over to where Ruth was again pouring tea. "Behold a new member of the proletariat. It's my afternoon off. I didn't want anyone to think I had to have pull to get a job, so instead of applying for one at dad's office, I went up to Senator and got one in the refinery there. I'm learning the sugar business from the bottom, dad."

Mr. Storm evidently was not particularly pleased at the turn things were taking. "One man in the family with his nose to the grindstone should be enough," she said pettishly. But Mrs. Storm, Sr., was delighted. "I told you there was something in the lad that would come out sooner or later," he said as he and Mrs. Storm went into the house.

"Well, Ruthie, do you think that, with a regular job, I have graduated from the panhandler class?"

"Oh, Larry, please!"

"Now don't you dare to crawl back, Ruth Kent. Look at your handiwork and be proud. Do you suppose a nice ambitious girl, who was not a gold digger, would fall for me now? I am making thirty-seven dollars and fifty cents a week."

"I know she would, Larry. You may try and date Leta Bird up to tonight. Tell her what you are doing. I'll bet she will take you on."

"Leta Bird? Who ever said anything about Leta Bird? I am talking about a girl of mine named Ruth Kent. Do you suppose Ruth Kent would fall for me, if I gave her a real rush?" Larry's words were trivial enough, but the voice behind them went deep down into Ruth Kent's heart. His eyes alive with honest pleading, looked down into hers. "This is the last panhandling I'll ever do, Ruthie, so help me God. But I've got to have a little help to get through this thing right. Will you give it to me?"

"You have all I have already, Larry," Ruth replied, and she opened one eye lazily to see what this sudden quiet meant.

Deluded Scientist

"It has recently been stated by a professor that hens have apparently stopped using lime in their egg shells and are employing silica instead," says Woman's Home Companion. "Mildred by a careless assistant," commented the unbeliever, "the professor seems to have been studying a china nest egg."

"Tomorrow"

A lady was visiting her sister in the country. She overslept one morning and was awakened by her sister at three and one-half years old, who exclaimed, "Aunt Annie, get up; the world has begun!"—Christian Register.

Steins Filled with Rudy Vallée Brand of "It" Make Song Famous

RUDY VALLÉE

University of Maine Song Brought to Life by Crooper

New York City—Rudy Vallée the "It" boy of the air, has discovered the hit song of the nation. This is the "Stein Song," official song of the University of Maine, written way back in 1910, with lyrics by Lincoln Colcord, famous literary critic.

"The music has spirit, lift and lift, and the lyrics are romantic and visual," explains Vallée. "While it is called the 'Stein Song' nothing is said about what is in the steins. As a matter of fact, Maine was prohibition at the time this song was written."

Vallée is an American phenomenon. No one but Lindbergh has ever so touched the hearts of the American people. There is something about the quality of his voice as it comes over the air that plays on heart strings and makes folks reminiscent, romantic and sentimental, just why, Rudy can no more tell than can anyone else.

Vallée is the Lindbergh type and looks like a glorious young Viking.

That he is also a musician is proven by his taking the "Stein Song" from the dust heap and making it the most popular tune in America today.
