ORGANIZATION WINS FOR WEST TEXAS

United, the People of the Great West Will Get Their Rights and Prosper

Under this head the Fort Worth Record carried an editorial last Sunresses what many a westerner has felt to be true for some time, and more than ever now. The News has s going to come into her own some of these days and will cease to take orders. The balance of power is coming this way and the world is seeing it. The editorial from the Record under the above caption follows:

people into the West Texas Chamber him up. of Commerce is the one big factor in the progress she is making in that THE WOMEN ARE direction. The motto of the state of Missouri is not officially "Show Me" as many people would reply if questioned. It is "United We Stand, Divided We Fall," and the sentiment applies to West Texas with special force.

WHAT SHALL WE DO ABOUT COUNTY FAIR BRICK BUILDINGS

The time is becoming shorter every day until the season for a county fair will be here. What shall we do about a fair? OF PAVILION AND BUNGALOWS

TO MAKE RESORT

Damsite, a short distance east of Quanah, will become Lake Pauline and on its shores there will be established a colony of summer cottages when plans now being formulated by Arlie Berry, Vernon resident, are put into effect. Mr. Berry has secured a fifteen year lease on the lake and surrounding property from W. M. and J. S. Rice of Houston, owners of the Hardeman County Irrigation Co. and will erect a summer resort immediately.

A large pavilion will be built by Mr. Berry and twenty-five bungalows constructed. The latter will be partly furnished. Fifty-two boats, eighteen of them motor launches, will be put on the lake. Electric lights, water works, and a fine bathing beach will be installed, and the grounds will be completely enclosed by a fence.

Will Sell Privileges The project is to be financed by means of selling privileges for fishing and hunting. Initiation fees will be twenty-five dollars a year and five dollars a year for dues. Damsite has long been a well known and popular fishing resort, and is widely patronized. The surroundings are ideal. Citizens from three counties have already indicated their desire to purchase shares or privileges .- Vernon Record.

CARE AND FEED OF GROWING CHICKS

(By F. W. Kazmeier)

Chicks that are eight to ten weeks old demand somewhat different care and feeding to baby chicks. The house should be cleaned and disinfected regularly. We are using sand as litter for the growing chicks, renewing it once a week. We also paint inside of house and all fixtures once a week with common kerosene or Beaumont oil to keep down mites and blue bugs. It is very important to do this if it is desired to raise strong and vigorous chicks.

Hopper Feed

One of the best ways of feeding growing chicks is to hopper feed them both grains and dry mash. These hoppers are constructed so they will shed rain and can be placed outside in the shade. Our hoppers are large enough to hold week's supply of feed. We are feeding the following dry mash mixture: 30 lbs. Wheat Bran.

- 30 lbs. Corn Meal.
- 30 lbs. Ground Milo.
- 15 lbs. Meat Scraps.
- 5 lbs. Ground Bone Meal. The following grain mixture is fed:
- 40 lbs. Cracked Corn.
- 40 lbs. Whole Milo.
- 20 lbs. Whole Wheat.

In addition to the above we are feeding large quantities of milk. We are buying all the surplus milk from a nearby dairy at 6%c a gallon. We allow this to clabber before feeding. We are also beginning to feed semisolid buttermilk, which is a commercial product. Milk in some form appears almost necessary to get a profitable and rapid development. We have about 5000 chicks of various ages on our yards, S. C. White Leghorns, Barred Rocks and a few Reds. all are doing fine on above feed. Later we intend to increase the feeding

Chil- they drink of this fresh water when dress business men are reported to it is provided. Provide a sufficient number of drinking vessels so they never have to crowd.

Colonizing

When the chicks are 8 to 10 weeks old, we separate the sexes. Most of the cockerels go into fattening coops for ten or fourteen days, and then are sold as broilers. Up to present time we have sold our surplus cockerels locally at the place at 60c each. A few of the real early ones brought seed, and hope it will provide green 75c each. Shade

It is beginning to get warm, and already we are busy building artificial shade for those not fortunate enough to have natural shade. Natural shade is much to be preferred. We have peach, plum, mulberry, fic, Chinaberry, and several varieties of shade trees for the use of the growing chicks, but not enough for our large flock; so this year we are using the shutters from off the dwelling. Montesano, Wash .-- A six-year-hunt for a cougar ended here when the animal was treed and killed. The slaying of this mountain cat ended a beast tles and around the eyes. They infest with a notorious reputation for destroying hogs, sheep, calves and, in one or two instances, cattle.

Ranchers along North river have long attempted to end the career of this killer, who two or three times each week would invade a farming center and main and destroy live stock for the sake of slaughter. A number of years ago, in the dead of winter. . cougar killed thirty sheep and three calves on one farm in a single night, eating but little of one sheep. From tracks left in the soft snow it was seen that each foot of the animal possessed but three instead of four toes.

Scaley Leg Mite

The scaley leg mite lives and breeds beneath the scales of the shanks and toes of chickens. It is extremely annoying and often times causes the fowl to become lame. This infestation shows neglect in the care of fowls. It shows they are not well kept, and they should be. Old hens are more subject to scaley legmites. They spread from one fowl to another while they are on their roosts. To prevent them from spreading it is a good idea to paint their roosts with oil or carbolineum. Carbolineum may be purchased locally or from Wehrli-Given under my hand and seal of this notice by publication, in the Eng- Jones Co., 1008 Main Street, Dallas, Texas. The best way to control scaley leg mite is by greasing them with common lard to which has been added 20 per cent kerosene. If the shanks are not too heavily infested we have been successful by dipping the shanks and toes for a second into common Beaumont oil or crude oil. Another good remedy is, to rub the effected places with equal parts of kerosene exercise great care not to get it on any of the feathered parts of the fowl or on the skin, for it causes considerable irritation.

Depluming Mite

This develops an itching which sometimes causes the fowls to get the bad habit of "feather eating." To consolution: Two ounces of flowers of sulphur and one half ounce of laundry soap, to each gallon of water. Dip the fowl in the same way as recommended for dipping in Sodium Flouride to kill lice. Keep the solution well stirred while the process of dipping is going on. (Copyright, F. W. Kazmeier 1922)

Two years ago this feeling of communion with the departed gathered wonderful strength in the mind and soul of Reid Davies. Some mighty force seemed to have taken possession of all his faculties, bending them whither it would, regardless of his will. While in this condition he found himself one day looking steadfastly into the eyes of a stranger in the subway, and in them recognizing unmistakably the spirit, or ego, of his lost brother. LONG VENERATED BY INDIANS Spirit Stone a Recent and Valuable Addition to Treasures of Wisconsin Historical Society.

One of the largest Indian spirit stones or shrines found in Wisconsin has been presented to the Wisconsin Historical society by Dr. A. Gerend of Milladore. The stone, which is about four feet high and weighs 250 pounds, formerly stood on the Indian road between Wabeno and Soperton. As most of the Indians in the region no longer worship the native gods, they permitted the stone's transfer to Madison, where it will be mounted, probably near the Wisconsin Historical li-

A legend has been woven about this granite bowlder, which is curiously marked by wind and rain. The Indian sees in it a resemblance to a human being and savs that a mortal who wished to live forever was turned to stone by the Great Spirit so that his wish might be fulfilled. At the foot of the large stone was a small one known as the Child of the Spirit.

The shrine has been used for several hundred years and was brought to Wisconsin by the Potawatami Inness. One day Reid heard a voice, dians from the Bark river region of Michigan. On its top is a small hollow where offerings of food and tobacco were laid. A final offering in haste, and they found his brother of tobacco was made before the

A local seventh-grade teacher has several suitors, who often come to the building to walk home with her, relates the Indianapolis News. The youngsters in her room, much interested in the performance, have watched closely the suitors and noticed that the one who drives a very "spiffy" red roadster is the most favored one. So they have drawn con-

The teacher stopped after that part and asked the meaning of cajole. But no one would answer. "Oh, you must know," she smiled at one of her brightest boys, "why, you never could be successful in this task of wooing unless you can cajole."

He was still mystified, but the little fellow behind him raised his hand. "Oh, I know, then," he burst
