Merry Christmas Merry Christmas to You

Words are too slender to hold the fulness of our message to you as the morning of Christmas day draws so near.

In a feeling of deepest sincerity and the fullest appreciation of you as friends and neighbors, we offer our Christmas wish to you of happiness without blemish, of cloudless peace, of the spirit of faith, hope and love that passes all understanding.

In the truest sense we can do no more than to say that we hope for you every blessing of material prosperity and spiritual contentment.

May each Christmas day find you happier than the one before, and may each day of your life be filled with the spirit of Christmas.

Wishing each and every one a Merry Christmas and a Prosperous New Year in 1929

MAY CHRISTMAS FIND YOU GLAD AND LIGHT-HEARTED!

It is too little that we can say to you as the dawn of Christmas day waits in the east. It is not enough that we thank you for what you have done for us, and not enough that we wish all good things for you.

But we hope that you will accept this, our earnest greeting to you, as a token of the regard we have for you as neighbors and friends.

The truth beams down upon all with the white message of hope and faith: Peace upon earth good will to men.

At this new Christmas please accept our heart-felt hope that all is well with you, and that gladness and peace will abide with you.

Christmas will be here soon now. The time of buying and selling will be forgotten. For Christmas goes into the hearts of everyone.

It is our true hope that Christmas morning will dawn upon you as it dawned those hundreds of years ago across the plains of Palestine, upon a scene where truly there was peace, good will, and happiness.

At Christmas time we offer to you our sincere thanks for the kindness you have shown to our business. We offer our thanks for your neighborliness and the friendliness of the dealing we have had with you.

And it is the greatest wish we have that this Christmas will long stand in your memory as one of the outstandingly happy days of your life.

May Christmas Find You Happy!

I have one wish for you, and it comes straight from my heart. I wish for you that Christmas will dawn upon you, flooding you with peace and happiness, beaming down upon you with the perfect light of good will to all mankind.

You have been good to my business, and I appreciate your friendship. So I hope that you will accept this as my Christmas wish: May health, prosperity, and joy attend you on Christmas day.

May each day thereafter be a reflection of a perfect time of contentment and happiness. May there be everything to make this Christmas the most joyous one that you have ever known.

Next day Robert Barrett had left Limdenfield and Laura had never heard very, very lonely. But she told herself that she had no right to think of Robert; he was probably married and settled down long before now in that far-off land where his company had sent him.

But, always as Christmas approached she found herself thinking of him and picturing the home that might have been theirs together. Aunt Mabel had been dead two years now and since her death Laura had felt very much alone in the world, in spits of many friends.

But every year at Christmas time her cousin Vera, a widow of limited means, came to spend the holidays with her, and always at this time she gave a party for the young people. And lest any of them might be thwaried of love and a proposal, as she had been, she saw to it that plenty of mistletoe was in evidence. She looked very beautiful now as she welcomed her guests to her annual party. She was one whom years give new and added charm in recompense for the rosy flush of youth that they steal, and as she walked to the door to answer a new peal of the bell, she would have attracted attention envertees.

Opening the heavy door she looked without. A little cry sprang to her lips, for there she saw Robert Barrett. A rush of joy, of wonder, of delight, flooded her whole being. He had come—he still loved her—else, why would he be here?

Steadying herself by the doorway she bade him welcome, and as she recovered from the sudden rush of joy at seeing him again; her voice grew cool and composed as she assured herself that his coming meant nothing more than a friendly visit—that even should be be still unwed, it would be some one younger, fairer than she that he would now seek.

He seemed rather ill at ease, and he blundered and stammered so when he spoke, that his voice was almost drowned in the sounds of gay laughter and music that came from beyond. Then, suddenly, without warning, his arms reached out and he clasped Laura close and she felt his hear, and he was telling her that she meant all the world to him. When they both came back to earth he showed her the spray of mistletoe above them: "It gave me the courage I lacked long ago," he whispered.

Later he told her why he had never written. Aunt Mabel had spoken to him the evening before he left, and had told him that it would not be fair to the Laura with a promise; also she had hinted of another man who was more favored. The company had just brought him back to Lindenfield, and as soon as he got in, learning that Laura was still free, he had come.

And because it was Christmas time, and also because the years that were coming held a wonderful promise for them, and they could afford to be generous, there was no resentment in their hearts for the thing Aunt Mabel had tried to do.
