City Gets Good Well This Week

Additional Supply Tied on Wednesday: Another Test Now Being Made Here

No, it isn't oil, but it's worth about as much for the City of O'Donnell as an oil well would be.

A fairly good water well was completed and the supply turned into the mains Wednesday afternoon, according to W. E. Singleton, mayor pro tem.

With these two wells it is hoped that some relief may be given the water situation, and after a thorough test is completed, saving near a thousand dollars.

The City Council is studying out a plan that will call for the drilling of several more wells in various parts of the city and which will provide ample water for all purposes.

Acting Mayor Singleton urges the water users to continue to use it sparingly until the city is assured of an adequate temporary supply.

SERIOUS OFFENSE TO WEAR COAT TO CHURCH

The wearing of coats by men to the services of the Baptist church last Sunday made a serious offense by the pastor.

Several weeks ago ladies day was observed, but the managers are anxious that the Baptist church fire section have the opportunity to play a game or two with their compliments.

A tournament is in progress at the Tahoka course, and it is thought a similar one will be played here soon, which will end the city competition.

GANTT AND HOLMAN TO WATERLOO SECTION

Grady Gantt and E. D. Holman left Sunday on a trip to Parker County expecting to return the early part of the week with watermelons.

While in that section, it is thought Mr. Holman made a quick trip back to the pine woods and beaver runs of Van Zandt and Henderson Counties, where he was raised. Of course, one would not expect him to admit it.

The charter for the Fern-Allen Post arrived early in the week and is on display at the Whitsett Drug Co. along with many war relics, which make an interesting window display.

The getting of membership prospects has been going forward rapidly, according to assistant M. B. Hood, who said yesterday that since the contest was inaugurated only an estimated 100 more than fifty prospects have been secured.

THIS TAX SYSTEM SHOULD BE ABOLISHED

The Texas Weekly in the last issue published what we consider the best outline and explanation of the present road tax system and the proposed state road bond which has appeared in print since the question has been in the public eye. Accordingly, this issue is the Liberty of using Editor Molyneux's article in full. It follows:

A system of taxation that levies a tax on a Collin County farm of $120 on the $100 valuation in order to construct a State highway over which the heaviest traffic consists of motor busses and freight trucks and from Dallas cannot be justified by any process of reasoning. And yet we have just such a system in Texas at present. In the 225 Texas counties, property owners—including farmers, ranches, and home-owners—are paying ad valorem taxes to provide for highway bonds, the proceeds of which have gone entirely into the construction of State highways.

In eighty-seven of those counties, property owners are paying during the current year a higher tax rate for this purpose than they are paying into the general fund in State taxes. In twenty-seven of those counties they are paying a higher tax rate for this purpose than they are combined State tax rates for the general fund, the school fund, and Confederate pensions. In the eighty-seven counties the rate for State roads is more than 30 cents on the $100 valuation. In the twenty-seven counties the rate for this purpose is seventy cents or more.

The Collin County rate of $1.20 is cited above. It is not the highest, however. In Houston County the rate for State roads is $1.41 and in Liberty it is $1.38, or more than twice, in each instance, the total State ad valorem rate for the general fund, the school fund and Confederate pensions combined. Other counties having a rate of seventy cents or more for State roads include Upshur, $1.15; Briscoe, $1.14; Franklin, $1.09; Calhoun, $1.07; Montgomery and Titus, 98c; Hill, 97c; Gray, 96c; Tyler, 90c; Kaufman, 88c; Fannin and Milam, 81c; Waller, 80c; Wheeler, 79c; Matagorda, 77c; La Salle and Live Oak, 75c; Wood, 73c; and Eastland, Henderson, and Lampasas, 70c.

Following these are 60 counties having a rate more than 50 cents, and then there are about 140 others paying varying rates ranging from one cent upwards. These rates, beit understood, do not constitute the total road taxes of these counties. They include only taxes levied for interest and sinking fund of bonds which have been expended in constructing State highways. The construction of the tax which would be abolished if the State should take over the obligation of retiring all such county and district bonds. There have no revenue bonds issued or taxes levied for other than State roads.

A table, compiled by the State Highway Department, covering all such bonds issued by the counties and outstanding, reveals a condition of unjust and inequitable taxation which the average citizen did not suspect to exist. For it shows not only that a burden is being laid upon property owners which properly should be born by those who use the highways, but that there is no relation between the rate of taxes paid and the benefits received. Neither the Collin County farmer nor the Dallas home owner should be required to pay for the highway between McKinney and Dallas, for example, the busses, the freight trucks, and the other motor vehicles which use the highway should pay for it. But it is nevertheless true that the property owner in Dallas, who gets more direct and indirect benefit from the highway, does not pay one cent as a rate of such State road taxes as the Collin County farmer pays. Such inequalities of the tax rate and the benefits received by the counties are not only inequitable but are being abolished without delay, and the cost of construction and maintaining the State highways should be borne by the traffic.

The present State Highway Commission, which has made by far the greatest progress in highway construction and maintenance in the history of the State, has contended for more than two years that this system of requiring the bond tax to be levied on the property owner in Dallas, who gets more direct and indirect benefit from the highway, does not pay one cent as a rate of such State road taxes as the Collin County farmer pays. Such inequalities of the tax rate and the benefits received by the counties are not only inequitable but are being abolished without delay, and the cost of construction and maintaining the State highways should be borne by the traffic.

That is the danger of all this outcry about the great burden of a $350,000,000 bond issue. It is likely to frighten the people away from a practicable plan to relieve them of a real burden because of the appearance of an imaginary one. And yet in spite of the outcry, and no matter who is elected Governor, the condition revealed by the highway department's table should be cured at the regular session of the Legislature next January. We have no set plan for accomplishing this, but we believe it can be accomplished effectively only through the bonding of the revenue from gasoline and the use of a bond issue. If the people do not yet understand this, they must be brought to see it through a dispassionate examination of all the factors involved. But every time some candidate for office denounces what he calls "the scheme to saddle $350,000,000 bond issue on the people" this task of education is being made more difficult. The present and inequitable system of county taxation for State highway bonds is being more surely fastened upon the people.

The politicians have been making a great outcry about the State ad valorem taxes, which are not high, and about the problem which can not be reduced without placing new burdens on industry and commerce. But there is an ad valorem tax that really is unjust and inequitable, which really can be abolished if the members of the Legislature will approach the problem with no thought of politics but with a desire only to serve the interests of the people. We cannot name what candidates for Governor may be, but we believe the next Legislature should give the people the opportunity to vote this question.

It is generally taken for granted that between rival artists in the same line of work there exists a high degree of professional jealousy. Therefore it is refreshing to note the mutual admiration of two of the world's outstanding tenors, as well as their extreme modesty. John McCormick, the famous Irish singer, naturally and unobtrusively selected American citizen in 1910, one objected to being advertised as "the world's greatest tenor." He said: "I am not the greatest tenor in the world. I object to that title. The greatest tenor (Caruso) is dead, and the next one has not arrived."

An interviewer asked who he considered greater than himself; he replied that McCormick promptly replied: "The Canadian singer, Edward Johnson, is the greatest all around operatic tenor in the world, and in addition he has a perfect figure which so few tenors possess. As for me, McCormick's compliment was conveyed to Johnson, that the artist returned it by saying: 'I am not the greatest tenor in the world, I should say it was the acme of generosity. Further, although started by his pleasing flattery, I must say that my expression in the world, are usually considerate and modest.'"

Wedding rehearsals are common; funeral rehearsals unusual. But Joseph Sandlin of Lebanon, Ind., had precise ideas of how he wanted to be put away, and had his lodge brethren gathered for practice, he occupying a coffin. That was 24 years ago. A few days after the ritual was carried out as he had directed, with Mr. Sandlin in the role of a real corpse, he having died at the age of 90.

Justice Morsehauser of Middletown, N. Y., believes in giving erring youth a second chance. To Milton Young, 16, who confessed to taking a neighbor's automobile, the Justice said: "I won't make a thief of you, I promise to return to high school and graduate in two years. If tempted again, think of a fat-faced man on a raft of bouys, his reformatory sentence waiting for you."

A Collie dog worthy of being immortalized in an Albert Payson Terhune story is Queen, owned by C. Glenn, a dairyman of Decatur, Ala. When Genn was attacked by a bull and trampled under the enraged animal's hoofs, his Collie helped bring Queen to the rescue. She set upon the bull, tearing him with her fangs until he beat a retreat. Glenn was painfully lacerated and would doubtless have been killed for the prompt action of the faithful dog.

FIREWORKS AND AUTOS

Morning papers of every July 5 formerly carried distressing accounts of the killing and injuring of many persons, mostly children, through the explosion of fireworks in celebration of the Glorious Fourth on the preceding day. For days afterward additional deaths from lockjaw as the result of powder wounds would be recorded.

While casualties of this kind still occur, their number has been reduced to a small fraction of those in former years. On the Fourth of July, 1913, no less than 182 persons were killed outright and 4,994 were wounded. By 1910 the number of killed had fallen to 131, in 1915 to 40, in 1928 to 11, while in 1935 only 7 deaths were reported.

And it seems that when one menaces to life and limb has been brought under control, a new one arises to take its place. Today the outstanding menace is the automobile, which last year took the most obvious dangers is a slow one.

Most of the deaths and injuries were as unnecessary as the casualties from fireworks were 25 years ago. Will it take 25 years more to develop a generation of careful automobile drivers?

UNEMPLOYMENT PLAN wages to the insurance fund, a company to contribute an equal amount. Employees would contribute long as they were earning 50 per cent or more of average full time wage. When laid off they would receive 50 per cent of the wage earned while working. The company would pay the insurance fund in trust, paying five per cent interest on the money so held. New rules for the better regulation of employment have been established by the company, which being to distribute the work among the employees under various conditions in such manner as to average lay-offs as much as possible. And good idea it is.

ARTICLE IV Selecting the Breed For Your Dairy Herd

Any One of Five Well Known Breeds Will Be Satisfactory, But Certain Cautions May Influence Your Choice.

Editor's Note—This is another of a series of articles on dairying written by the well known national dairy and poultry authority, Dr. L. D. LeGear, V. S., of St. Louis, Mo. The entire series will appear in this paper. Our readers are urged to read them carefully and clip them for further reference.

The cow is not a native American animal. Before the white man came to this continent cattle were unknown here.

Europe is the home of the dairy cow. Several thousand years ago, so it is supposed, the process of taming the wild cattle of Asia began. It is an interesting commentary on the important place the cow holds in modern civilization that scientists have devoted years to a study of historical records in order to be better acquainted with cattle.

The selection of a breed, either by the farmer who is just entering the dairy business, or the farmer who desires to improve his herd by introducing a breed, is one that deserves careful consideration. I believe a brief historical background of the five popular breeds in America will be of interest and importance to these breeders from Europe have been very large, especially in the last fifty years. So let us examine the biographies and pick our favorites.

About The Farm Board's COTTON PLAN

THIS IS THE SEVENTH OF A SERIES OF QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS RELATIVE TO THE FEDERAL AID BEING EXTENDED TO THE COTTON FARMER:

Q. How does growing short staple hurt the cotton farmer? A. It puts him down on the level with the cheap laborer in other countries, who can also grow short staple, but most of whom cannot grow good staple. Q. What is the remedy? A. To sell each bale on its value, from a staple standpoint, and so discourage the man who grows inferior staple and encourage the man who grows good staple. Q. How will the Association help encourage growing of good staple, besides helping get a better price? A. Good staple can be obtained by improving the land, by planting better seed, and by better ginning. The Association projects and to work for better ginning. All these can be done much better through united organized effort than by individuals acting alone. Q. Will there be an important improvement in the condition of the cotton grower at once, as a result of this movement? A. That depends upon the promptness with which the cotton growers join in it. The Farm Board is starting a movement which will take many years to reach its fullness, and will grow faster in proportion to the manner in which the farmers fall in line. Mr. Legge, chairman of the Farm Board, says that when the farmers do, the government will be for them a "stone wall from which they need never retreat."

The color resembles the Jersey in general but includes some colors not found in that breed. In the yield of milk and fat the Jersey and Guernseys are not far apart, Jerseys leading slightly in richness of milk, and the Guernseys in total milk production. The Ayrshires—The native home of this breed is the Shire of Ayr in southwest Scotland, hence the name. It is comparatively a new breed, but has made wonderful advancement in a short time. In size the Ayrshire ranks between the Jersey and Holstein breeds, being very much the same as the Guernseys. The common color is spotted red or brown and white in varying proportions. As a breed the Ayrshires are noted for a good, uniform production of milk. The Brown Swiss—This breed had its origin in Switzerland. Large numbers of these cattle are kept there for cheese and butter making, which forms one of the largest industries in that country. In milk and butterfat production, this breed shows a very satisfactory yield. The color varies considerably in shade; it is called brown, but more of a mouse color is prevalent. There is not a great deal of difference in the dairy breeds so far as production is concerned. It is more a matter of choice. For instance, there is no best breed. It is the breeding up of a family or strain to high milk and butterfat production that really counts. It is the blood lines or breeding that makes some cows more valuable than others. Other conditions which may influence your selection are the breeds most common in your neighborhood, the cost of pure bred foundation stock, and your judgement of the demand for surplus animals from your herd. It is estimated that only 3 per cent of the dairy cattle in the United States are pure-bred, which means that the major production of milk comes from grade herds. (Copyright, 1930, by Dr. L. D. LeGear, V. S.)

Canada's Mountain Bungalow Camps Provide Facilities For Swimming, Hiking and "Roughing It" In Comfort

"Now is the time for all good workers to plan that summer vacation" is an appropriate slogan these balmy spring days. To many tired city folk the lure of the pine-scented forests and rippling streams is irresistible, and the advent of the hot summer months will find hundreds of thousands of folk locking their desks, bidding adieu to their friends and departing for the young fastnesses of America's numerous summer playgrounds.

To provide facilities for holiday makers in the Canadian Rockies, a number of cozy, comfortable bungalow camps have been erected at various strategic points throughout this beautiful region by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Here the vacationists knicker, flannel shirts and hiking boots and commences with nature in her unspoiled, primitive state—nature unadorned.

Yoho Valley Bungalow Camp, near Field, B. C., is one of the most popular places in the Canadian Rockies, largely on account of its proximity to the beautiful Takakaw Falls and the picturesque Kicking Horse River. Wapta Camp, 4 1/2 miles west of the Great Divide, on Wapta Lake, is another favorite. From Wapta the vacationist can ride or hike to Sherbrooke Lake where, early in the season, many varieties of wild flowers and later, berries, delight the eye and the palate.

Nine miles from lovely Lake Louise, in the Canadian Rockies, lies the Emerald Lake, resting in the cele-

THE WIGGLES

"There is one thing extremely nice about the snake family," said Mrs. Wiggle Snake, "and that is we don't always wear the same clothes."

"How often we see the same creatures who never seem to change their costumes—dogs and cats."

"Now we have new suits quite often."

"We have to put up with hardships in order to get it, though," said Mr. Wiggle Snake. "It doesn't all come so easily."

"Perhaps other creatures don't care so much for something new as we do."

"We show how much we care about it when we go to such a lot of bother."

Y. P. M. S. CELEBRATES FOURTH WITH PICNIC

Seals Learn to Swim

How seals learn to swim is described in the Sydney Bulletin.

On the outlying islets south of Stewart Island they congregate in the breeding season. On one islet hundreds of them gather round a large rock pond which apparently has been used for generations as a swimming school for the infant seals. When the time arrives for a baby seal to learn to swim the mother conducts her unwilling offspring to the brink and, supporting him on her flipper, swims round the pool. The youngster, unused to the icy water, protests loudly all the time and makes off directly he reaches land. After a while his mother will seek him again and drag him, whimpering, to the water. The protest ceases for several days, until the youngster can swim and dive by which time he spends most of his time in the pool swimming nursery handiaps.

Just Try It!

Of course, you all know how to make ordinary paper darts, don't you? Here is a little hint that will make them glide so gracefully. Make your dart fairly large, out of stiff paper, and when it is finished push a wire paper fastener over the end, so that it is weighted slightly.

Now you will find that when you throw your dart high up into the air it will glide down ever so gracefully.

BRIDE-TO-BE SURPRISED WITH PRETTY SHOWER TUESDAY

Miss Alice Thomas, whose marriage to Mr. Allen Williams was solemnized Thursday evening, was the honoree at a cleverly planned shower Tuesday afternoon in the home of Mrs. W. J. Shook. Mrs. Ben Moore was joint hostess with Mrs. Shook.

Leaving home with the expectation of attending a meeting of the Y. P. M. S. Miss Thomas was ushered into a house filled with laughing friends who enjoyed her surprise immensely. As part of the entertainment, several young ladies tried their fortunes with hearts, and Miss Thomas found a bride in her immediate future. Declaring that only Cupid was a fit guide for her, the hostess delivered her to the tender mercies of the little god, a role enacted by little Miss Hope Shook, who led her on an exploring tour. The search ended on the lawn where the man in the moon was found with a great array of gifts for the bride-to-be. These when unwrapped were found to be lovely linens, glassware, silver, china, and many other useful and appropriate gifts.

Dainty refreshments of ice cream and cake, carrying out the bridal colors were served to more than seventy-five guests.

OUT-OF-STATE VISITOR FEET WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON

Mrs. Glenn P. Lee of Marlow, Okla., was the guest of honor Wednesday afternoon when Mmes. Hal Singleton, Jr. and Ethel Singleton-Williams were joint hostesses at a pretty appointed party in the home of the former.

Vases were filled with flowers in the reception rooms, and music from the radio added much to the afternoon's pleasure. Seven tables of forty-two were set away throughout the afternoon. Baking girl talks were especially suited to the weather. A dainty salad course was served with olive cheese chips, cakes and iced tea to the following guests: Mmes. Cathy Bowlin, Pemberton, Shoemaker, Brewer, Koeninger, Bradley, Campbell, Street, Garner Gray, Stark, Gibson, Hood, McLaurin, Ritzenthaler, Rayburn, Shumake, Whitsett, Cain, Musick, Edwards, Singleton, Sorrels, Lee, and Everett.

MISS THOMAS, MR. WILLIAMS' Y. W. A. ENJOYS UNIQUE PICNIC WED THURSDAY EVENING THURSDAY

Before an improvised altar of ferns starred with orchid and white flowers and lighted with tall tapers, Miss Alice Thomas became the bride of Allen Williams last evening at 8:30 in an impressive ceremony at the home of the bride's uncle, Mr. Boss Johnson.

Miss Christine Millwee, accompanied at the piano by Miss Alma Hyde, sang "I Love You Truly" as the pre-nuptial solo, after which the music quickened into the strains of the Bridal Chorus from "Lohengrin." Miss Jeannette Thomas, sister of the bride, entered first, wearing a dainty green organdie frock made bouffant, and carrying an arm-bundle of roses. Miss Jeannette, Jo Anne Campbell and Billy Jean Johnson, wearing ruffled organdie frocks in white and orchid and carrying ribbon tied baskets from which they scattered rose petals, immediately preceded the bride. Miss Thomas looked especially beautiful in her wedding gown, an orchid crepe Elizabeth made princess style with beautiful hanging drapes. The low neck was finished with a bow of satin ribbon in the back, the long ends reaching to the hemline. A gorgeous shower bouquet of pink, sweetheart buds and fern tied with orchid ribbon completed the effective and becoming costume. A strand of pearls was her only jewelry.

As the bride and her attendants entered from one side of the spacious living-room, the ring bearer, Master Alvin Ray Moore, entered from the other, bearing the ring in the heart of an immense white hibiscus. The groom entered with his groomsmen, Mr. Lyle Fugle and met the bride at the altar, where Rev. C. A. Duncan, pastor of the Methodist church, awarded them.

With only the light of the candles from the altar and while Miss Hyde played softly "Thinking of You," the Reverend Mr. Duncan said the beautiful and impressive ring ceremony. The prayer which concluded was peculiarly suited to the occasion. An informal reception for the intimate friends and the relatives who had witnessed the ceremony followed immediately after.

Mrs. Williams for several years has been one of the most popular and loved members of the young social set and has been an outstanding leader in church activities. She has been the recipient of several social courtesies since the announcement of her engagement last week.

Mr. Williams is also well-known here, having been associated with two of the most important firms in the city. He is now located in Amarillo, where the happy pair expect to make their home. He is indeed fortunate in winning so gracious and charming a young lady as his bride.

The couple left Friday morning for a short trip, after which they will be at home in Amarillo.

Thomas Shepard of Brooklyn had four daughters, but wanted a son. His wife presented him with three, triplets.

George Antin of St. Louis was fined $50 for tying paper on a cat's tail and setting fire to it.

WILDA GENE CAMPBELL CELEBRATES FIFTH BIRTHDAY

Little Miss Wilda Gene Campbell celebrated her fifth birthday on July 3rd with a party for a number of friends.

After admiring the many lovely gifts, each of which was a delight to the heart of a little girl, the guests played games until the refreshment hour. Red, white, and blue layer cake served with ice cream carried out the season's colors.

Those present were Lena May Singleton, Shirley May Coim, Norma Ruth Vermillion, Waido McLaurin, Jr., Joe Carroll, Doris Nelle Gates, Roy Allen and June Marie Gibson, Margaret Lucille and Billy Jane Johnson, Terry Edwards, Mary Louise Singleton, James Bowlin, Jr., Bobby Heblson of Emory, Bobbie Dancy, Claude Tomlinson, Jr., Doris Joe Thomas of Ft. Worth, Jo Anne Campbell, Mmes. Ramey, Johnson, Edwards, and Bowlin.

Church Leaders Attend Pension Fund Conference

Thirty-three states and Canada were represented at the meeting of the pension commission for Disciples of Christ, recently held in Indianapolis. This group of men and women are studying the movement to establish a pension fund for ministers and missionaries of Christian Churches in the United States and Canada.

Figures announced from pension fund headquarters in Indianapolis show that nearly 3,200 ministers and nearly 1,500 congregations have already enrolled in the new ministerial pension system. The enrollment of churches, pension fund leaders say, is "getting under way in earnest and a just 2,500 congregations are expected to be enrolled by October 1."

The ministerial pension system now being established by Disciples of Christ is a fully actuarial, both pension dues and pension benefits being based on the annual salaries of the members. There is no charity anywhere in the system, its leaders point out. Each minister will pay 2 1/2 per cent of his salary to the central fund and the church he serves will pay the equivalent of 8 per cent of the member's salary, the total of 10 1/2 per cent earning for the member.

equal to one-half of the member's average annual salary. Benefits also are provided for widows and minor children of members.

To provide pension benefits for ministerial members who cannot be expected to serve very many years after the fund is established, a reserve fund of $8,000,000 will be raised by voluntary subscriptions among members of the Christian Churches. This step in the pension program is scheduled for next November and will be in charge of the pension commission.

How to Raise Poultry

By Dr. L. D. LeGear, V. S., St. Louis, Mo.

Dr. L. D. LeGear is a graduate of the Ontario Veterinary College, 1892. Thirty-six years of veterinary practice on diseases of live stock and poultry. Eminent authority on poultry and stock raising. Nationally known poultry breeder, lecturer and lecturer.

ARTICLE IV

A Robber in The Flock

Roupe may wipe out a whole season's profit if allowed to gain headway, says Dr. L. D. LeGear, V. S., of St. Louis, Mo.

Editor's Note—This is another of a series of 52 stories on poultry raising written by the well known national poultry authority, Dr. L. D. LeGear, V. S., of St. Louis. The entire series will appear in this paper. Our readers are urged to read them carefully and clip them out for future reference.

"The best way to cure roup," sagely remarked an old timer in the poultry game, "is never to have it." That may sound like a very weak attempt to be funny, but it is gospel truth. Contagious diseases such as roup do not fall gently nibby from the heavens on some whimsical freak of fate. The way is usually paved for them by the lack of adequate sanitation, by some housing facilities, incorrect feeding, failure to cull out weaklings, the weakening effect of parasitism, by some other form of neglect. Healthy, robust fowls, properly fed and housed in sanitary surroundings, will almost always throw off the germs of disease. Even when they do not, however, their rugged constitutions make the success of treatment practically certain.

Acting on the idea of prevention as the best cure for roup, I never add new fowls to my flock until they have been kept in quarantine from two to three weeks. Even if it is practically sure that the birds come from an uninfected flock, this is a wise precaution. They might be carrying the germs of infection which would mature later with disastrous results. If this should happen before they are added to the flock they can be destroyed or treated as the case may demand without danger of spreading the disease.

Watch young and delicate birds very closely as they are most susceptible to the deadly roup germs. The same is true of fowls suffering from common cold or catarrh. The throat and nasal passages, being already sore and inflamed, are easily infected. In such cases, if the ailment, should always be isolated. They can be much more effectively treated when away from the flock and they cannot contaminate the healthier ones if the disease should prove to be contagious.

Should any of your flock begin to show symptoms of roup, no time should be lost in starting measures to prevent further spread. All houses, pens, coops and runs should be thoroughly cleaned and sprayed with a strong solution of a good cold tar dip and disinfectant. Droppings, litter and trash of every description should be removed and burned. All unnecessary equipment of every kind should be removed from houses and yards. Every piece of equipment for supplying food and water should be scrubbed and disinfected. All this sounds like work and it is, but the saving is decidedly worth the work involved.

As the inroads of this deadly disease have been known to wipe out as high as 95 per cent of a flock every owner of a poultry flock should learn to recognize the symptoms. At first they are much like those of a simple cold or catarrh, but more fever, dullness, prostration and loss of appetite. First symptoms are a difficult nasal discharge, difficulty breathing with wheeze sounds and constant shaking of the head to dislodge accumulated matter.

After two or three days the discharge from the nose becomes thicker and gives off a characteristic offensive odor. The nasal passages then become so clogged that the bird must breathe through its mouth. A discharge will also run from the eyes. This discharge gradually becomes thicker, causing painful swellings below or in the eye which often destroy it. As it hardens, this discharge may cause the eyes to be completely pasted shut and may gather in such quantities that the head is swollen to twice its normal size. Quite frequently these deposits will press down the roff of the mouth so that the fowl cannot swallow. In some cases there is a deposit of yellowish matter on the tissues of the mouth and throat. It is easily removed, however, and should not be confused with a deposit of similar appearance which is a symptom of diphtheria.

As soon as any fowl is known to be sick, put it at once to itself as far from the flock as possible and give it one full teaspoon of epsom salts to remove cold and fever from the system. If the bowels have not moved by the following day, repeat the dose. Give epsom pill night and morning. Wash the affected eyes, nose and mouth once a day with a solution made by mixing one teaspoonful of dip and disinfectant in one quart of warm water. Souse head, eyes and all into this solution each time. Roup will often yield to treatment if caught in time, but each case must be handled individually and more detailed instructions are required than the space allowed for this article will permit.

As a measure of precaution for the balance of the flock, after infected birds are removed give epsom salts in a wet mash. Give one pound of epsom salts for each 100 fowls of light breeds or for each 75 of the heavier kinds, and repeat in one week. A saline purgative such as epsom salts is invaluable as such a time. By causing the prompt elimination of germ-laden matter, this simple remedy may keep many a good layer on the job without interruption. But after all, there's no remedy like the one quoted at the beginning of this article. I do not claim that roup and kindred diseases cannot invade the premises where sanitation and other precautionary measures are always observed. I do not hesitate to say, however, that the flock where such measures do not obtain is infinitely more liable to suffer infection. Furthermore, if the properly managed flock does become infected, the damage will be much less than among fowls not so well cared for. The old maxim, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" may be well worn from much usage, but it is still as true as it ever was.

KONJOLA ENDED TWO YEARS OF STOMACH PAIN

Again This New And Different Medicine Shows Why It Has Become Famous

MRS. BERTIE COWAN

Strange, but absolutely true—Konjola, the new and different medicine seems at the very peak of its powers when pitted against the stubborn cases that have held on with bulldog-like tenacity. Take for example, the experience of Mrs. Bertie Cowan, 614 West Second St., Ft. Worth, Texas, who says: "For two years the lightest of foods caused misery. At times I had to gasp for breath, and I belched up bits of undigested food. I took soda constantly. My kidneys gave me trouble too. I had backache and had to rise many times at night. But Konjola ended all this, and today my back is free from pain, my nerves are steady, I sleep soundly and wake up every morning rested and refreshed. This Konjola works, swiftly yet surely. It is strongly recommended however, that a complete treatment of from six to eight bottles be used if best results are to be obtained. Konjola is sold in O'Donnell, Texas at The Whitsett Drug Company, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section. Adv.

"Electricity Is Your Servant!"

The MUTINY OF THE ALBACROSS

BY WYNDHAM MARTYN

CHAPTER XIII

Mr. Unwin Speaks His Mind

The Duxins were speedily to find that wealth and the desire to help...

At seven, Mary heard her father's voice on the telephone. He said he should not be able to get to Peekskill until nine.

"Your voice sounds cross, Daddy," she said. "Are you angry with anyone?"

"Angry is too mild a term," he said, and hung up. Usually he called her by some pet name, but he was abrupt, different and incomprehensible.

"When he came they were sitting around his fire in the large hall around which the house was built. Unwin was one of those kindly men given to effusive greetings when he met his people. Tonight he bowed to them all coldly. Not even to Mrs. Radway did he bend.

"Daddy," said Mary, plaintively, "you haven't spoken to poor Crosby yet. He's hurt."

"I told you that one of my friends offered help. That was Betington. Although his reputation was wide he had not needed to sell his pictures, as many do, to live. For the sake of my friends, I had to do so. I had no choice. My missions long ago given him. He went off on his trip eagerly, like a boy seeking adventure. My G—! What an adventure! In that great August storm which did such damage he was nearly drowned and took refuge in the hut of a fisherman who called himself Jonathan Gibbs. In reality he was Orme, who had lived there many years, having no friends and leading a solitary existence. When Betington, in Orme's clothes, was forcibly taken aboard the yacht, Orme took Betington's clothes and money and when he met his friends he told them, as you know," Unwin sighed heavily. "A double tragedy."

He related, as well as he could, the manner of Betington's abduction. When it was over he had nothing more to tell. Mrs. Radway arose and asked him to follow her into the library.

"You must take me to him," she said. "For the first time he saw that she had been crying. Dully, he wondered why."

"I don't think it necessary," he told her, "but I will send messages by me to you all. For some reason or another, he persists in thinking you were justified for what you did. I confess I do not understand why. It seems quixotic in the extreme."

"Mr. Unwin," she said, "I am going to see him. If you don't care to come, please give me the address."

"I'll take you," he said wearily. "I must go home to my wife for a few minutes first."

He joined Mrs. Radway in a quarter of an hour. She was waiting for him impatiently, but they were already on the steep hill leading into Croton before she spoke.

"You were right to feel bitterly toward me," she confessed. "I have always held that love should cast out all other and yet, when the trial came, I was found wanting. I loved him and yet allowed all these seemingly inexplicable things which confused us, mixed identities and confused us, to blind me and build a wall of distrust which hid him from me. And now it is too late."

Unwin patted her hand with a gesture that was at once clumsy and tender. His anger had died down. Her grief moved him. He began to regret his bitterness.

"My dear," he said simply, "God is good and understands and is just. We do not yet know that it is too late."

"That surgeon met them who had been disappointed in finding his patient was not the celebrated Andrew Orme. He gazed with marked interest at the beautiful woman he knew to be the many-millioned widow of Elgar Radway."

"May I see him?" she begged. "These are not visiting hours," he reminded his visitors, "but I might stretch a point if it's important."

"It is the most important thing in my whole life," she said simply. "She stood for a few moments framed in the doorway of that bare and pallid room which had been the place of innumerable sorrows. The surgeon, setting his eyes on the man of the cold ethereally beautiful, slender as the stem of a lily and filled with a divine compassion. In vain he tried to make some motion as if he wished to see the woman, but his body was immobile in plaster casts and his hands seemed too weak to respond to his will. His voice forsook him. He could only stare at her in wonder."

Then she came to the bedside and knelt down and took the strengthless hands and held them to her lips. "Why have you come?" he asked, and dived to hear the answer. He was not allowed himself to feel the certainty of the happiness which had come to him at sight of her.

It was when she looked at him that he knew there would be no misunderstanding between them while life remained.

standing between them while life remained. "I came to say good-by and ask you to forgive me if you could. But I see now there is going to be no good-by and you have forgiven me."

"The bitterness of the waste years had gone from her. Over the man on the cot was stealing a new strength and peace. He experienced a sense of protection; he was assured of the return to health and the reality of happiness."

"In the outer room the surgeon was discussing his creed with Floyd Unwin. "When I told him who was waiting, I could see new life coming back. I claim to be a free-thinking materialist, but every now and then a miracle like this happens. I suppose one might say that love is the supreme miracle. . . . But all the same," said the surgeon, "it upsets my calculations."

RESERVE SYSTEM'S DIVIDENDS ANALYZED

Bankers Felt Increased Payments to Member Banks Would Be Small Inducement.

Various proposals that member banks in the Federal Reserve System should participate more largely in its net earnings through an increase in the dividend rate above the present 6 per cent, could be a very small financial inducement to them, it is declared in a recent study of this subject by the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association.

"The Fletcher bill provides that Federal Reserve Bank earnings, after present 6 per cent dividends to members and completion of a 100 per cent surplus, should all be distributed as extra dividends to the stockholder banks," the report says.

"If the earnings were pooled and paid out to all members in all districts each member would receive an average annual extra dividend of 73 per cent. Under this plan no franchise tax as now would be paid by the Federal Reserve Banks to the Federal Government."

"The Glass bill would provide that, after present 6 per cent dividends, one-half the remainder should be paid to member banks as an extra dividend with the residue going to surplus and Federal Government as franchise tax. The average annual extras to members would be as follows: Boston District, 2.51 per cent; New York, 4.8 per cent; Philadelphia, 2.05 per cent; Cleveland, 2.09 per cent; Richmond, 3.26 per cent; Atlanta, 4.47 per cent; Chicago, 3.29 per cent; St. Louis, 2.02 per cent; Minneapolis, 4.75 per cent; Kansas City, 2.74 per cent; Dallas, 3.31 per cent; San Francisco, 1.87 per cent."

"If these extra funds were pooled the result would be an extra average annual dividend of 1.73 per cent for each member. Under this plan the system would pay as now an annual franchise tax, amounting to $1,941,596 on the average."

By way of concrete instance, the report says, a bank having deposits of $200,000, therefore holding Federal Reserve Bank stock amounting to $6,000 on which it is receiving $360 under the present 6 per cent dividend arrangement, would to the dividend rate receive an additional income of $60 a year.

"If each member bank will figure out for itself the dollar-and-cent gain it would enjoy we are confident it will be agreed that the gains are small as against the economic disadvantages which can be pointed out," it concludes.

A Trustful Boy "Where were you, Charlie?" "In the garden, ma."

"No, you have been swimming; you know I have cautioned you about going in the creek. I will have to correct you. Look at your hair, how wet it is."

"Oh, no, ma, this is not water—it's sweat."

"Ah, Charlie, I have caught you fibbing. How do you expect to get on your job, trustfully—'Oh, I did that just now, ma, climbing the fence.'"

Perhaps Both "Mummy, it's polite always to say 'thank you' for anything, isn't it?" "Yes, dear."

"And it's rude to speak with your mouth full, isn't it?" "Yes, dear."

"Well, then, Mummy, if I say 'thank you' with my mouth full, am I polite or rude?"—Kensith Observer.

Practical Aviation

Through the Courtesy of the North Texas Flying School, Dallas.

THE LIMITED COMMERCIAL LICENSES The most important part, perhaps, of the student's training is the period during which he is preparing for his Limited Commercial license.

"A little knowledge is a dangerous thing," is a particularly apt quotation as far as aviation is concerned. We have followed the student through his instruction in stunting in the last article, and now we find him practicing those things which he has learned, over and over again. Unfortunately our typical student begins at this point in his career to think he knows quite a little about flying; this is an idea that must be gotten out of his head.

The North Texas Flying School, realizing that this period is one of real danger, insists that the student take the instructor up with him every four or five hour for a "check hop."

In this way, bad habits or careless methods are corrected as soon as they appear. Our student can find many profitable ways of building up his hours to the required fifty for his Commercial license, if he follows the directions of his instructor implicitly at all times. He must keep up his studies, of course, all through the course of training; much can be learned simply from keeping his eyes and ears open around the flying field.

"Old" pilots love to sit around and talk about the marvelous things they have done—the student in many cases would be wise to "Do as they do, not as they say they did!"

Written requirements for the Limited Commercial Course are not extremely technical, but demand a comprehensive knowledge of airplanes and motors. The student must learn the names of all the various parts of an airplane how the wings give lift so that it will fly and many other things about rigging and care of the plane. It may never be necessary for the student to actually do the maintenance and repair work on a plane when he takes a job, but it is well to be ready to do so if called upon. Such knowledge is really a great asset in getting a job later on, and also makes a good pilot. The man who understands airplanes and their construction will never subject them to improper treatment or strain, in flying.

It is very important for the student to know motors and understand at least the minor repairs. He should be able to judge what is wrong with a motor by listening to it so that he will know whether to land or not, in case of trouble. Some minor difficulties do not necessitate a landing. The properly trained pilot can pass the examination on motors without the slightest difficulty.

The flight test for this license is quite difficult. The applicant is required to make a series of "spot" landings; that is, land within two hundred feet of a point designated by the examiner. These landings are made from different altitudes and must be practiced diligently by the student. Spot landings give the pilot skill and confidence in the face of an emergency landing. After completion of the spot landings the applicant then goes up to a safe altitude and demonstrates his ability to recover from stalls without going into a spin. Then he is required to spin the ship to both right and left and bring it out in the same direction he went into it. This shows that in case of an unforeseen spin the pilot will not lose his sense of direction. There is little chance of a spin in straight flying if the pilot knows his business but it is well to prepare for emergencies before they occur.

The inspector has been on the ground watching these maneuvers, and now gets into the plane with the student. They then go up to fifteen hundred feet where the applicant flies through a series of figure eights. A figure eight is an intricate maneuver because the fier must make his turns without gaining or losing any altitude; the point around which the turns are made must be kept in the center of the circle. These eights are made up of a series of five gentle and three steep figures (or, the plane banks gently, for the first five eights, then banks vertically for the last three). A vertical bank is one of 70 degrees or more and is difficult because the controls of the airplane reverse when the plane is over 45 degrees past normal flight position.

Should the applicant fail on either his flight test or written examination, he must wait days before re-examination. Proper training eliminates this possibility. After the student has passed the tests satisfactorily, he is a qualified Limited Commercial pilot. This license entitles the holder to carry passengers for hire, from one base field only. Crosscountry passenger hops are barred to him, but he may do commercial work other than passenger riding cross country; such as cotton dusting, crop dusting, ferrying planes from factory to distributor, co-pilot on a passenger line (not counted as sole time).

Should the applicant not pass the Limited Commercial examination, but make a pretty fair average, he will be awarded an Industrial License which entitles him to do all industrial work, but bars him from carrying any passengers.

Nation's Fire Hazard Decreases; New Flame Proof Wood Invented

HENRY KLEIN, THE INVENTOR THE RED GOD'S WRATH

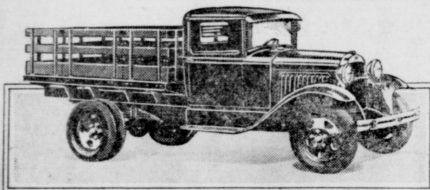

NEW YORK—Approximately 10,000 lives will be lost in fires in the United States during 1936, it was estimated today by the Henry Klein Research Laboratory in the same period property loss to the amount of nearly $200,000,000 will result from the same cause.

"Despite constant tightening of the fire laws and numerous technical improvements in building construction such as flame proof wood, the present trend of the nation's annual fire loss is upward," the laboratory announced after an exhaustive survey of the subject.

Hope that this upward trend will soon be checked, however, was contained in the announcement which the recent prison fire at Columbus, Ohio, as costly lessons to the public on the necessity for even greater fire prevention measures. "Too much emphasis has been placed since the war on building materials other than wood because wood was considered ineffective in preventing fires," the statement pointed out. "There has been a willingness to accept these so-called fire proof materials as the only necessary precaution against fire, whereas it is just becoming evident that they are not even as resistant as wood is when properly treated under new flame proof processes. The wood then becomes a better safeguard against prison fires, smoke, and flames than any other product known to science."

New Ford Truck With Closed Cab

NEW Ford Model AA trucks and Model A light delivery cars were announced this week by the Ford Motor Company and are on display in the show rooms of Ford dealers.

Changes in the trucks are principally in the front end, which has been completely redesigned, and in the cab. The radiator is higher with more cooling surface, fenders are wide and flowing, and a black cow strip adds a note of distinction.

The new Model AA trucks with the four-speed transmission introduced several months ago may be had with enclosed or open cab. The enclosed cab, shown above, is all steel. It is low in appearance yet with ample head room. The open cab is of black rubber top material and is easily removed. Both cabs are equipped with windshields of Triplex shatterproof glass and vacuum type windshield wipers.

Model AA trucks may be had with a platform body, which can be equipped with stakes or a panel body. The chassis has many improvements including the four-speed transmission, larger front brakes, stronger springs, power take-off opening and optional dual rear wheels.

The Model A line of new commercial cars comprises a light delivery truck with pick-up body, a deluxe delivery truck, a small panel truck and a station wagon. These cars have the smaller wheels and larger tires of the new Ford passenger cars.
