Demonstration Farm to Consist of 4,000 Acres

Thirty-five Hundred Acres to Be Planted to Cotton and Five Hundred to Feed---Headquarters to Be Site of Community Center

Lynn county is moving forward at a pace that within a very short time will have it ranking among the most progressive sections of the state. In the days when the raising of cattle was the chief industry, the land was used according to the needs of the people, and there were no restrictions placed upon it by the laws of the state. Today the situation has changed. The land is being cultivated, the rates are being paid, and the county is taking the place of the old school district, and the future is the work of the present owners.

This work is not under the same restrictions as in the old school district. There is the same kind of soil, the same kind of weather, and the same kind of people. The land is now being used for the purpose of raising crops, and the future is the work of the present owners.

Mr. Hamilton is a graduate of the University of Texas, and he is making his living by farming. He has been a farmer for many years, and he has a good understanding of the business. He is a good manager, and he is doing a good job.

There will be idle hands for the future, but there will be work for the future. There will be a new industry, and it will be the work of the present owners.

A farm for this purpose will be established, and it will be the work of the present owners.

This will be the way things are done in the future. Things will be done with a sense of purpose, and there will be no more idle hands.

The success of this new industry will be the work of the present owners.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued.

SYNOPSIS.—On the bank of a pretty New York stream, a gang of young and reckless boys was forming a design to rob the banker at the village store and post office. It was the talk of the town—The twentieth—seven more days.

At the bright hair worked hard. The woodsman shifted his face. The old man's fingers strayed over the girl's collar. Texie ran to him and knelt by the desk.

"No—I reckon we better go t' father and mother first. The preacher's boot bounces out there. The preacher.

He was a big man, with a head almost as tall as the head of the preacher. He was a fisherman and had been on the water a long time. He was a wise, good-natured man and had a good deal of experience. He was a good man.

"No—only that you got—hurt."

The man's face was stern and expressionless. He spoke slowly and his voice was low. He was a fisherman and had been on the water a long time. He was a wise, good-natured man and had a good deal of experience. He was a good man.

"No, I reckon we wasn't nothin' but Jlst crazy kids."

The man went on. "but y'u can run over and see what I'ap.

The fisherman seldom—almost never lifted his hand from the gate latch; accepted the money.

"I'm aimin' t' pick up enough—gold and silver.

He was a fisherman and had been on the water a long time. He was a wise, good-natured man and had a good deal of experience. He was a good man.

"I reckon we was alw'ys—big days to us—"

The man went on. "but y'u can run over and see what I'ap.
