INSECT BITES KILL MORE PEOPLE THAN SNAKES

Texans are rightfully fearful of snakes but the fact of the matter is more Texans have been dying over the years from the effects of insect bites than have died from snake bites. During the five year from 1955 to 1960, snake bites claimed 13 Texas lives and during the same period insects resulted in the deaths of 30 persons. Last year there were 18 total snake and insect bite deaths in Texas, the largest number since 1944 when there were 23 such deaths. In a recent national study involving a five year period, it was found bees, wasps, hornets and yellow jackets killed 86 persons compared with 71 from snake bites and 39 from spiders. Bees alone took 52 lives when victims were allergic to their poisons.
