BEHIND THE CIVIL RIGHTS SCENE

The civil rights wrangle in the House and Senate has degenerated into a sectional spitball fight — Yankees against Yankees. Too many of the Nation's elected representatives — from both parties — are yapping at each other about who is going to get the credit or blame for what is done or isn't done. You don't hear much talk in the Capitol cloakrooms about the merits of proposed civil rights legislation; the issue has succumbed to a heady brand of politics in which Northern Republicans and Democrats are pointing their fingers at each other and engaging in fishwifely argument.

Civil rights advocates in the Democratic Party are trying to corral Republican votes for the coming showdown. The Democrats are having trouble because the Republicans can't simply go along with the opposition party proposals — they want to be able to claim some pride of authorship. "After all," they argue, "we're the party of Lincoln — and we ought to have some bigger role in this thing." Democrats behind the legislation want the whole hog if they can grab it — but the hog is well greased in the kind of politics that defies analysis on party lines.

Southern Democrats, knowing that their constituencies feel generally that only time and a basic change in attitude will make true racial progressive possible, are on the sidelines in the current stage of things. The Southern vote will come in a near-solid bloc against the legislation, whoever wins out in the credit-blame battle. The South's "No!" will have a resounding ring in the House, where prolonged debate is prohibited by the rules, and another solid "No!" will echo through the Senate after Southern Senatorial fortitude has been worn down by a prolonged filibuster.

Only the most callous Americans of any section would deny the fundamental rights of any citizen, white or Negro; the issue of the current controversy goes deeper. It is more subtle and insidious and behind much of the pressure are men who care not a hoot whether one more Alabama Negro is able to vote in the next election or is able to obtain service at a department store lunch counter. The shadow is cast by men whose steady push at the rear of the vehicle called "civil rights" is aimed at centralization, final and complete, of all meaningful government control at the Federal level.

Said Thomas Jefferson: "I am for preserving to the States the powers not yielded by them to the Union, and to the legislature of the Union its Constitutional share in the division of powers; and I am not for transferring all of the powers of the States to the general government, and all those of that government in the Executive Branch."

Editorial voices in the North declare that the States' Rights position is now "spurious", that it is posed only as a barrier to a grant of equality to Negro citizens. In the tragically fallacious notion then that legislative fiat can alter the human heart, they would thus tear the vitals from the U. S. Constitution.

The basic question could well be whether or not the United States has come to the point where its citizens will succumb finally to an "Uncle Knows Best" philosophy of national government. Once the Nation has adopted this policy, those who now are so vigorously pushing for enactment of sweeping legislation that they will thereby benefit politically, may find that the pendulum has a two-way swing. As a result of the centralization they have forced upon their country, they may find that they are to become victims of massive and impersonal Federal intervention in affairs over which they'd like some private control.

This is not a partisan controversy. Republicans and Democrats from the North are trying to work out a way in which they can combine to share the credit. In this, their dispute is sectional — not along national party lines. Their argument at the moment is with each other, not with Democrats from the South. With this issue resolved, if it can be, the attention then will shift to the tactical question of who will the bipartisan combine of sectional forces can push civil rights through to enactment.

Northerners should pause a moment in this troubled time to ask themselves several serious questions going beyond anything involved in the legislation itself. They should ask: "By political expedience are we really providing solutions for the South's problems — and our own grave problems?" "Will we destroy the essence of the Federal - State relationship?" "What will the effect be on the Constitution itself?"

OVERPLANTING CAN BRING REDUCTION IN FUTURE WHEAT ALLOTMENTS

College Station, Sept. 11 — Overplanting wheat allotments this year can reduce a farm's future allotments, according to R. J. Miers, agronomist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. This effect on a farm's wheat history is one of several factors which farmers will want to consider in planning their 1964 crop operations.

Miers calls attention to a provision of the law passed in 1958 which can affect a farm's wheat acreage history. It directs that when no marketing quotas are in effect, farms exceeding allotments will receive that year's allotted acres as history for future allotments. Complying farms receive their base acreage as history, he says.

The agronomist cited this example of how the provision would apply on a farm with a 100-acre wheat base and a 1964 allotment of 60 acres. If a farmer complies with his allotment, his wheat acreage credit for 1964 will be based on the 100-acre history. But if he exceeds his allotment, he will be credited with only 60 acres in computing his 1966 allotment.

Overplanting for the 1964 wheat crop will not affect the 1965 allotment since national & state 1964 wheat acreage figures will not be available when allotments are determined.

A farmer who overplants his 1964 allotment, Miers points out, can still avoid loss of base acreage history. He can dispose of his excess acreage by the deadline date for his county and still receive his 1964 base acreage as history credit in determining future allotments. By thus complying with his allotment, he

CHARLIE GOWIN BRINGS IN FIRST BALE TO QUITAQUE GINS

Charlie Gowin produced the first bale of cotton for Quitaque this year, and Paymaster Gin ginned it last Monday, September 9, to beat last year's first bale by one day. A. L. Morris ginned the first bale last year on September 10 and in 1961 Cecil Price was first when he brought in a bale on August 26.

Mr. Gowin brought in 1850 pounds of seed cotton gathered from 12 acres of cotton. The 1850 lbs. of seed cotton produced a bale of lint weighing 525 lbs. and 900 lbs. of cotton seed.

Paymaster Gin bought the bale of cotton for 40 cents a pound and merchants and friends here in Quitaque "sweetened" the pot with a $215.00 premium for bringing in the first bale of the season.

Mr. Gowin stated that he has been farming here for 37 years and this is only the second time that he has ever ginned the season's first bale.

FHA LOAN AIDS IN DEVELOPING VERY GOOD IRRIGATION WELL

A Farmers Home Administration soil and water conservation loan made to Joe Ike Clay to develop an irrigation well on a 160-acre farm in the north part of Motley County has just been completed.

This well is unusual for the county. It is probably the best irrigation well in that area and was drilled to a depth of 265 feet. Water rose to within 35 feet of the surface of the ground. An 8-inch pump was installed and a strong 8-inch well was developed and gauged at 1200 gallons per minute with 100 feet of water left in the well. Mr. Clay runs 185 sprinklers on one time off the well; it takes only ten days to irrigate the 160 acres. Mr. Clay farms the 160 acres in cotton, peanuts and hay. Approximately 30 acres of the hay-cropland will be sprigged to Midland Bermuda grass by 1964.

This is an example of soil & water loans that can be made to individuals. The Farmers Home Administration makes soil and water loans accompanied by technical management assistance to individual farmers and ranchers primarily to assist them in developing, protecting, and making proper use of their land and water.

Each loan is tailored to the individual borrower's needs. The Farmers Home Administration county supervisor assists the borrower in analyzing his resources and planning how these resources plus those obtained by the loan may best be used. (Continued On Back Page)

Mr. Martin's first bale was bought by H & H Gin for a premium price of 40 cents per pound. In addition, he will receive a bonus from the merchants and businesses here in Quitaque.

This figure is more evidence of growth — big growth — in the area we serve. Moreover, when we say that this Center of the Southwest is in one of the Nation's fastest growing regions, the statement is backed by facts.
